In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. ANDERSON, Topka K.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

A TEST OF CHARACTER.

"Uncle Heenry,' said Julia Denham, "may I see you in the library a moment this morning?"

"Certainly, my dear. I am at your command now," and he led the way into the room. He handed his niece to an arm-chair, and took a seat opposite her.

"Uncle,' said Julia, with a little becoming confusion, "I have received an offer.'

"Whew!' exclaimed her uncle, "that is coming to the point with a vengeance.'

"And I wish to consult you about it.'

"A very sensible resolution. May I know from whom the offer been received?'

"Edward Fitzory.'

"You haven't known him very long?'

"Not—very,' said Julia, slowly.

"But you think you know all about him I dare say. Are you much in love with him?'

"Not desperately,' answered Julia, Smiling. "At the same time I confess that I am strongly prepossessed in his favor.'

"And this prepossession is likely to become a warm sentiment. Well, my little niece, as you have requested my advice, I will give it. I do not object to this lover of yours. Indeed I know nothing against him. But then I know too little of him at any rate to be able to form a deliberate opinion of his character. If I mistake not, this is also your case. Now, it is my theory that no woman ought to marry unless she is sufficiently well acquainted with her intended husband to have a pretty confident assurance of leading a happy life with him, I therefore counsel you to delay giving your answer for a month, and in that time I will contrive to become better acquainted with him.'

"Your advice is good,' said Julia, thoughtfully, "and I will follow it.'

"Thank you," said her uncle, kindly, for the confidence you have reposed in my judgment. I sincerely hope that the young man will prove to be all we can desire.'

Edward Fitzory was in business in the neighboring city. He had embarked a small property inherited from his father, in a dry goods establishment, and having a good business tact was driving a flourishing trade. His acquaintance with our heroine had commenced during a summer residence at the village which she made her home. It was not strange that he should have been attracted by Julia. Her gayety, vivacity and beauty made her genefally admired; and had anything else been requisit the reputation of being her uncle's heiress would have procured her suitors. But it is not necessary to dwell farther on this part of our story. We are interested to learn how Uncle Henry's plan succeeded.

He first made cutious inquiries relative to the young man's business standing, all of which were answered satisfactorily. But this did not satisfy him. He wished to see for himself. Accordingly he purchased a suit of clothings so different from that which he was accustomed to wear, that with a pair of green goggles superadded he felt convinced they would disguise him sufficiently for his purpose. Thus attired he lounged into the store, and inquired for some trifling article. He was purposely very slow in being suited. Meanwhile he watched with some attention the bearing of Fitzory, who was trading with a fashionably attired lady at a little distance. Nothing could be more polite or obsequious than the conduct of the young tradesman. With unwearied assiduity he took down from the shelves and displayed a large stock of mercandise, until the fastidious taste of the lady was at length suited.

"He is attentive to his customers,' thought Uncle Henery. "That is a good sign. But perhaps it may be simply because she is rich and fashionable. Here's a customer of a different kind' Let me see how he treats he.'

At this moment a woman very poorly dressed, with a worn and weary expression, as if she were better acquainted with the dark than the bright side of life, entered the street door and advanced to the counter. The affable smile which Fitzory had worn in his interview with the last customer disappeared, and in its place was seen the supercilious glance.

"I would like to look at some calicoes,' said the customer.

Here are some,' said Fitzory, surtly, pointiog to a pile which lay on the counter.

He did not stir from his position, but gazed at the woman with an air that seemed to indicate how utterly indifferent he was to her patronage.

"Wil you show me some of them?' asked the woman, mildly.

"There they are ma'am; you can see them for yourself.'

"What is the price of this?' she inquired, looking at the one which lay at the top.

"Ninepence a yard.'

"I don't altogether like the figure,' said she, after a pause.

"Don't you?' returned Fitzory, indifferently.

The customer began to examine some of the other prints. Of course in doing so she was obliged to disarrange them somewhat.

"Don't pull them all to pieces,' said Fitzory, rudely. "There isn't much difference in them. You'd better take the first that comes. How much do you want?'

"Ten yards.'

"Well, you had better let me cut it off quick, as I can't stand waiting on one customer all day.'

Thus importuned, the woman hastily indicated one of the prints, and the required quantity was measured off. Change was hastily made and the woman departed. Her place was taken by a wealthy lady like the first, the rustle of whose silk proved an immediate passport to the good graces of the young merchant.

"I don't like that, 'thought Uncle Henry, who had been observent of this little scene. "He has no right to treat one customer better than another. At all events all ought to be treated with common civility, what ever their attire may be, or however small may be their purchase. These gloves are a half a dollar, are they? (these words were addressed to the shopman, who was waiting upon him). Very well, I will take them.'

Meanwhile the woman who had just purchased the calico re-entered the store with a hurried step and a look of trouble. She waited until Fitzory was through with the lady upon whom he was attending, and then pressed to the counter.

"Well, what now?' asked the young man, supercilliously,

"I believe you made a mistake about the change you handed me.'

"A mistake?' he repeated. "It is quite impossible.'

"But,' said the woman anxiously, don't you remember that I gave you a two dollar bill, and you only gave me back two quarters?'

"Wasn't that right?'

"No; I bought ten yards at ninepence a yard, which made but a dollar and a quarter.'

"And you handed me a two dollar bill?'

"Yes.'

"Then I must have given you back three quarters.'

"But, sir. it cannot be. I have only two.'

"Oh, you'll find the other in your pocket' if you havent spent it,' said Fitzory, insolently.

The woman colored.

"Indeed, sir, I know I am right,' she said, troubled.

"It is for your interest to,' he said with a sneer.

"And you won't rectify the mistake, then?' said the poor woman faintly.

"You make a great fuss about a quarter of a dollard.'

"It is of some importance to me,' said the woman.

"I can't return it," said Fitzroy, shortly. "There is no end to the impositions that would be practised upon me, if I allowed evrybody to come back and claim that they had not received the right change.'

Here Uncle Henry, who had listened with indignation to this scene, interfered.

"You are mistaken,' said he, decidedly. "I saw you hand this lady her change and you passed her but two quarters."

Fitzroy glanced at the speaker. It has not been mentioned that Uncle Henry, the better to conceal his identity, was coarsly dressed, and accordingly Fitzroy set him down as a person of no consequence. He therefore answered haughtily,—

"I shall need more than your word, my good sir. How do I know but you are in league—"

"Good-morning, sir," said Uncle Henry, abruptly. "You may hereafter regret this gratuitous insult. Madam, will you allow me a word with you?'

The woman followed him out of the shop, while Fitzory in no very pleasant mood muttered about the "airs of these beggars.'

"Madam,' said Uncle Henry, when they were in the street, "will you accept from me this piece of gold which will in a measure atone for this man's rudeness and your loss? Nay, no thanks, ? What I have witnessed has been worth more to me than the small sum.'

At the end of a month Edward Fitzory came to receive Julia Denham's answer to his suit. He felt quite confident of success—a confidence which was somewhat diminished by the coldness with which she returned his greeting.

"I must decline the honor of your alliance,' said she, in answer to his urgent proposal.

"But what can have wrought this change in you?' he asked, his countenance changing.

"I must refer you to my uncle.'

Uncle Henry, who entered the room immediately, explained in a few words in what way they had gained an unfavorable impression of his character. He concluded by saying,—

"The man who is obsequious to the rich and impertinent to the poor, shall not, with my consent, marry one in whom I feel an interest.'

A year afterwards Julia formed an alliance with one more worthy of her, and never had cause to regret adopting her uncle's test.

River of Ink.

Among the many wonder of nature in Algeria there is a river of natural ink. It is formed by the junction of two streams, one flowing from a region of ferruginous soil, and the other draining a peat swamp. The waters of the first are, of course very strongly impregnated with iron; those of the latter with gallic acid. On meeting the acid of one stream is united with the other, and true ink is the result. The banks of the united streams would be, of all places in the world, the colony of authors. Fields of esparto grass, for paper-making, might be sown in the neighborhood, the paper mills might be turned by the inky flood, and geese be reared to supply quill pens, The members do nothing all day long but sit dangling their feet in the water, occasionally dipping their pens in—a peaceable crew, except, perhaps, when they would please each by reading extracts from their unpublished works

The Game of Life.

Man's life is a game of cards. First it is "crib-age." Next he tries to "go it alone," at a sort of "cut schuffle and deal" pace. Then he "raises" the "duce" when his mother "takes a hand in" and contrary to Hoyle "beats the little joker" with her "five." Then, with his "diamonds" he "wins" the "queen of hearts." Tired of "playing a lone hand" he expresses a desire to "assist" his fair partner," throws out his "cards," and the clergyman takes a ten dollar bill out of him "on a pair." She "orders him up" to build the fires. Like a "knave" he "joins" the "clubs," when he often gets "high," which is "low,' too. If he keeps "straight" he is oftentimes "flush." He grows old and "bluff," sees a "deal" of trouble, when at last he "shuffles" off this mortal coil, and "passes in his checks." As he is "raked in" by a "spade,' life's fitful "game" ended, and he waits the summons of Gabrial's "trump," which shall "order him up."—Lima Democrat.

Cases of Hog Cholera.

Doctor Fletcher has in the last number of the Indiana Farmer a very interesting paper on the results of his investigation into the disease known as hog cholera. He asserts that the disease is caused by animal parasites, which he names acanthracephala, or thornhead worms. The special family found in the hog is the echinorhyus gigs. Its head is crowned with a double row of hooklets, which are so small as to require a high magnifying power to see them. The head is very small and elastic, and is thrust into the soft intestinal wall, where it fastens itself by its hooks, growing larger and going deeper each day, and finally causing rupture, or inflammation of the intestine. The inside of the female worm is filled with eggs, which like tape worm eggs, do not hatch in the intestinal canal, of the host, but pass out and go through some alteration of generation, perhaps in water or upon vegetable matter before entering the hog again, (through its food,) to become once more a mature sexual worm. The doctor thinks there is no remedy when the parasite has once fastned itself, the only treatment being preventive by cleanliness and by thoroughly cooking all food for hogs, after being sure that the stock is free from worms.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire, attended with a shocking loss of human life, occurred in Bridgeport, Ct., last week. The flames broke out about midnight in the hat factory of Glover, Sandford & Son, a large brick building. The fire-engines responded promptly, but the water-supply proved insufficient, and the fire thereby obtained the mastery. While about a dozen volunteers were removing the goods from the office—a one-story structure—suddenly, and without warning, the back and front walls fell out, leaving the two highest walls unsupported. The wall adjoining the office leaned outward, and, as a shriek of horror went up from the spectators, fell upon the roof of the office, crushing through it to the basement, and burying those within. Eleven men were killed outright, their bodies being shockingly bruised and mangled. The money loss by the fire aggregates $250,000; insurance, $150,000....A New York dispatch states that Richard B. Connolly, of the Tammany ring, has opened negotiations looking to the restoration of a part of his plunder, now held in the name of his son-in-law. The terms under consideration primarily concede the peaceful return of Connolly from exile....Mrs. Lydia Sherman, the notorious Connecticut poisoner, whose escape from State prison at Wethersfield was announced in these columns, has been recaptured.

AN excursion train on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad came in collision with a regular passenger train near Point of Rocks, Md., the other day, badly smashing the locomotives and several coaches. Four persons were instantly killed, two or three fatally injured, and eighteen wounded, all on the excursion train. The killed are Charles H. Keifer, editor of the Frederick (Md.) Examiner; Richard Dutrow, merchant; Dorsey Walker, merchant, and Howard E. Dickson—all of Frederick city. The collision was caused by the gross carelessness and negligence of the train men.

THE complaint in the suit against Samuel J. Tilden by the United States to recover taxes alleged to be due by the defendant on his income from 1861 to 1871 has been filed in the United States District Court of New York. The amounts alleged to be due aggregate, with costs and interest, $150,000....The prosecuting officers of the State of New York have rejected Tweed's offer to "squeal" on his ring confederates, and returned to his counsel the papers purporting to be the heads of the confession he is willing to make. The cause of this rupture of negotiations is supposed to be the insufficiency of the evidence offered to convict the accomplices named, and the belief that there are too many mental reservations in the statement of the boss thief.

A COVERED bridge over the Connecticut river at Northampton, Mass., was blown down by a gale last week. A number of people and several wagons and horses were on the structure at the time. A Mrs. Sullivan was killed, Sheriff Cook, of Hampshire county, fatally injured, and several others badly bruised.

THE WEST.

MOUNT CARMEL, Ill., which was recently devastated by a tornado, sends forth the following appeal for aid: "The calamity which has befallen this city has not been overrated by letter-writers to the papers of the metropolitan cities. Fourteen blocks of beautiful homes and business houses are in ruins, a hundred families houseless and helpless, a score dead, and over seventy badly hurt in a population of 2,500. A loss not less than $300,000 is too heavy a load for this heart-stricken people to carry alone, and help must come from the country at large. Any aid from cities or towns that may be sent to R. S. Gordon, Mayor, or Judge T. J. Shannon, of the banking-house of Shannon & Beal, Chairman of the Relief Committee, will be wisely and faithfully appropriated toward those who are worthy and needy."

KATE NOONAN, the young woman who some months ago shot and killed William H. Sidle, a prominent banker of Minneapolis, Minn., has just been tried for the crime. The jury failed to agree, eleven being for acquittal to one for conviction.

ALABAMA crop report: Rains have been very general in the State, and of great good to the crops. Oats are comparatively a failure; wheat is the best crop ever made; corn and cotton clean and doing well....Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, has gone to Minnesota for the benefit of his health....One-half the cotton crop along the Arkansas river valley, in Arkansas, has been destroyed by floods.... A startling sensation has just been sprung in Louisville, Ky. Mrs. T. T. Hawkins, daughter of the late Col. Weir, of Lexington, and of Mrs. G. W. Merriwether, whose second husband was, before his death, a prominent banker of Louisville, has been implicated in heavy forgeries of the names of ex-United States Senator Stevenson, the Hon. George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, and other prominent citizens. The forgeries amount to $40,000 or $50,000. The relatives of Mrs. Hawkins claim that she is insane.

THE grasshoppers are developing considerable strength in one or two counties of Iowa and a considerable section of Minnesota. With these exceptions, the crop reports from these States, as well as nearly the whole of the Northwest, are very encouraging....The Black Hills stage was again stopped by highwaymen, the other day, near Hat creek, and robbed of the treasure-box. None of the passengers were molested.

SOUTH.

THE city of Galveston, Tex., has been visited by a most disastrous conflagration. Three squares in the business part of the city, bounded by Market, Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets and the bay, were destroyed. The Cotton Exchange, Grand Southern Hotel, First National Bank, Seligson's Bank, Odd Fellows' Hall and Washington Hotel were among the burned buildings. The loss is estimated at $2,000,000....Henry C. Dibble, late Attorney General of Louisiana, has been arrested in New Orleans on a charge of embezzling $12,000 of the State's funds, and held for trial in bonds of $7,500.

THE Supreme Court of Arkansas has decided that the act under which $16,000,000 of bonds were issued in 1869 in aid of railroads in that State was unconstitutional, and that the bonds are illegal....Memphis has been completely cut off from railway communication with the outer world, by the customary inundations consequent upon the spring rains. Some damage has been done to the railroads, but nothing serious as yet.

WASHINGTON.

SENOR MARISCAL, Mexican Minister at Washington, has submitted to Secretary Evarts a written protest against the recent action of the administration instructing Gen. Ord to pursue Mexican marauders across the Rio Grande.

AN important contract has just been concluded by Mr. Sherman with the syndicate of European and American bankers. It provides for the sale to the syndicate of twenty-five millions' worth of 4½ per cent. bonds, that sum making up a round total of two hundred millions of the issue. The contract further embraces an immediate sale of twenty-five millions' worth of the new and thus far untried 4 per cent. bonds. There is also provision made for placing bonds of this latter issue on the home market as a popular loan, in sums of $50 and multiples thereof, at par in gold; and further sales to the syndicate will be made as rapidly as the bonds can be placed in investors' hands.

THERE seems to be a misunderstanding about the supply of greenbacks of the denomination of $1 and $2. These notes are furnished to Assistant Treasurers, but applications from banks are refused. Limited supplies can be got from the Treasurers, it is said, for distribution through the banks.

PRESIDENT HAYES' views on certain financial points are defined—evidently by authority—by the Associated Press Agent at Washington: "The President, although in former years predisposed, like many other hard-money men, to adhere to the prevalent doctrine of finance-writers in favor of a single gold standard, has materially changed his views, during the progress of the general discussion regarding the wisdom and propriety of the act of 1873, which demonetized the old legal-tender silver dollar. He is now in favor of its remonetization, and of the readoption of a double standard of gold and silver, or, in other words, he favors the full return to the condition of things in relation to these subjects which existed previous to the legislation of 1873, being convinced that such return to the former system will materially promote the resumption of specie payments, an object that he regards as of the first importance.... The Attorney General has called upon the accounting officer of the Treasury for a copy of the accounts of Brigham Young, the Mormon leader, filed in the Treasury some twenty years ago, when he was an Indian Agent. These accounts are called for at the request of Mr. Howard, United States Attorney for the Territory of Utah. It is intimated that they furnish important testimony against Young.

DR. LINDERMAN, Director of the United States Mint, will, it is understood, recommend in his forthcoming annual report the coinage of a $2 gold piece to take the place of the $2.50 gold coin. He thinks that when specie resumption is brought about there will be a demand for smaller gold coins, to be used in change instead of silver half-dollars, and that $1 and $2 gold coins will be very popular.

IT is announced from Washington that Secretary Sherman has perfected his arrangements for the disposal of the 4 per cent. Government bonds. It is stated that the opportunity of any and all persons who wish to make subscriptions, at par, to this loan will expire on the 16th of July, and the people are invited to invest in it up to that date; after which the syndicate, with which a contract for placing the loan has been made, will control the further sale of the bonds.

POLITICAL.

MR. PETER COOPER, late Greenback candidate for the Presidency, has addressed a long open letter to President Hayes, criticising the past financial policy of the sovereign Government, and also marking out the proper course, in his opinion, to be pursued in future. He advises that our national currency be made receivable for all purposes, and interconvertible into 3 per cent. Government bonds; that silver be withdrawn from circulation and used in the purchase of foreign bonds, and that the fractional paper currency be revived.

J. R. G. PITKIN has been removed from the Marshalship of Louisiana, and Col. Jack Wharton appointed in his place.

THE President has appointed James Lewis (colored) Naval Officer at New Orleans....Upon the arrival in Washington, last week, of ex-Congressman Kasson, of Iowa, the mission to Austria, which it is understood he would originally have preferred, had it been vacant when he was appointed Minister to Spain, was tendered him by the President, and he has accepted it, and James Russell Lowell has been tendered and accepted the mission to Spain.

A RECEPTION was given to ex-Gov. Hendricks, of Indiana, by the Manhattan Club, of New York, last week, on which occasion there was a large gathering of the leading Democrats of the city. Speeches were made by Govs. Tilden and Hendricks, David Dudley Field and others. Hendricks immediately afterward sailed for Europe....A dispatch from Denison, Texas, says: "R. M. Grubbs, Republican, has been elected Mayor of Denison by a plurality of 163, and a majority of 8 over both his Democratic competitors. The Assessor, Collector, Marshal, Treasurer, and all but one of the Councilmen elected are Northern men."

MINNESOTA has just had a special election on the proposed amendment to the State constitution, devoting the land grant of 500,000 acres, originally made for the benefit of internal improvements in that State, to the payment of outstanding railroad bonds. The proposition was rejected by a vote of nearly three to one.

AN election has just been held in Georgia to decide the question as to whether a convention should be held to remodel the State constitution. The matter was decided in the affirmative by over 10,000 majority....The Louisville Courier-Journal says "the man upon whom the Democrats of Indiana have united to lead them in the fight next year to oust Morton from the Senatorship is Voorhees, the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash."

GENERAL.

THE American Medical Association has just held a five days' session in Chicago. It was the largest and most interesting meeting the association has ever held, about 600 delegates, embracing many of the most eminent physicians in the country, being in attendance. The association, among other things, adopted a vigorous memorial urging the repeal by Congress of the present onerous tax on quinine. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. T. G. Richardson, Louisville, Ky.; Vice Presidents, Drs. J. P. White, New York, Moses Gunn, Illinois, G. W. Russell, Connecticut, A. Dunlap, Ohio; Secretary, E. W. Brush; Treasurer, R. J. Dunglison, Pennsylvania; Librarian, W. Lee, District of Columbia.

A WASHINGTON dispatch credits Gen. Sherman with saying that "Russia is aiming mainly at acquisitions in Asia. She wants Trebizond and the Valley of the Tigris, to get to the sea by way of the Persian Gulf." ....Germany has formally recognized Diaz as President of Mexico....A flood is reported in the Missouri river, exceeding anything of the kind known since 1844, and causing vast destruction of property along the river valley.

THE Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroads have begun the running of lightning trains between New York and Chicago. The distance between the two cities is now accomplished in the extraordinary time of twenty-five hours, and the officers of the roads promise to reduce the time to twenty-three hours.

FIVE persons were drowned in the harbor of Halifax, N. S., the other day, by the capsizing of a small boat....Alonzo Bell, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, has sued Chas. A. Dana, of the New York Sun, for libel, damages being laid at $100,000. The alleged libelous articles assert that Mr. Bell was discharged from the treasury for incompetency; that for a long time he kept his wife on the rolls of the patent office, drawing a salary without rendering any service, and that he lately appointed his brother-in-law to an $1,800 position in the Interior Department, all of which he strenuously denies.

A JUDGE in St. Louis has ruled that the insertion of an advertisement in a newspaper soliciting practice in procuring divorces, and promising to secure decrees of liberation a vinculo matrimonii without publicity, is a slander upon the true methods of procedure in courts of justice, tending to induce the public to believe that the advertiser possesses certain facilities and privileges enabling him to obtain judicial decrees with a degree of secrecy fatal to the good reputation of the judiciary intrusted with the sacred duty of according justice to those demanding it. Justice thus slandered, the St. Louis Judge holds, may purge herself of the stigma by such assessment of penalty as shall effectually extirpate the divorce shyster from the legal profession and annihilate him in the public regard. The recent General Assembly of Illinois passed a law forbidding the publication of advertisements of this character, but the view that common law has a remedy for the iniquity is believed to be somewhat novel and interesting.

BUSINESS failures: H. A. Blood, a prominent Massachusetts railroad manager, liabilities $1,526,000, assets small; Fitzsimmons, Clark & Co., dry goods, New York, liabilities $113,000, assets $95,000; McGregor Bros., bankers, Windsor, Canada, liabilities $150,000; Sallack & Co., clothing, Detroit, Mich., $[illegible]; J. Steinberger & Sons, millinery, New York, liabilities $150,000, nominal assets about the same; Hamburg, Hill & Co., millinery, New York, liabilities $100,000; S. W. Jacobs, a prominent cattle breeder of West Liberty, Iowa, liabilities $75,000; the Continental Insurance Company, of St. Louis, Mo.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

THE Vienna correspondent of the New York Herald details the advance of the Russians upon Erzeroum. Three columns are now marching direct for that city, and its capture is certain. The right wing has sent forward a strong column from Olti. The army of investment at Kars, which numbers almost 100,000 men, has thrown a column forward down the valley of the Arras, which menaces Erzeroum in front, and severs all communication between the two cities. The extreme left has forced the mountain passes at Toprak-Kaleh, and is now about to form a junction with the center. The investment of Erzeroum will begin at once if the place cannot be taken by storm. This can be determined only after the character of the defenses has been investigated....The Turks are in great fear of a general uprising of the Bulgarians, who have not forgotten the horrors perpetrated upon their countrymen at Batak. Throughout many of the larger towns of Bulgaria the news of the fall of Ardahan was received with wild demonstrations of satisfaction, and cries of "Long live the Czar!"....Russia has ordered an additional levy of 218,000 men.

WAR notes and rumors: Hobart Pasha has left Varna with his fleet to bombard Odessa.—The Russians not only intend to occupy Bulgaria, but have made all arrangements for remaining three years.—Russian merchants in Baltic ports are reported to be clearing their wharves and warehouses by exporting all goods as fast as possible, apprehending a general prohibition of exportation.—Odessa was thrown into a great commotion, one day last week, by the appearance of a Turkish iron-clad fleet. The inhabitants of the city were seized with a panic, and thousands of them fled from their homes. Much to their relief, however, the fleet withdrew without firing a gun.—A strong peace party appears to be developing in Constantinople, and hostility to the existing Government, stimulated by the inefficiency of its conduct of the war, is assuming dangerous proportions.—A state of siege having been proclaimed in Roumania, telegrams concerning military movements henceforth will be stopped. One of the great causes of the state of siege was the unsatisfactory working of the Roumanian railways. All the railway officials are now subject to the military authorities.

ANOTHER flood in the Danube is reported. The rise was caused by melting snow on the Carpathian Alps. This will again delay the Russian operations....London dispatches say that the Russians will force the passage of the Danube at some point west of Rustchuk, in order to avoid the Turkish forces massed within the lines of the quadrilateral. Passing the river at Sistova or Nicopolis, the Russians will find almost unobstructed roads to the Balkan passes, while one or two corps may be left to engage the attention of Abdul Kerim and to operate at leisure against the fortresses. ....At length the Egyptian troops for the Sultan's army have sailed from Alexandria. They are under convoy of four Turkish ironclads.

A LONDON dispatch says: "There is almost an utter absence of news of interest either from Asia, the Danube, or Montenegro. The two armies on the Danube are watching one another, and cannonading is frequent, but the Russians have not yet disclosed their intentions. Advices from Asia seem to indicate that there is no longer that feeling of despondency which was so marked in the late accounts from Turkish sources, and that a battle will be risked in Araxes valley. The Russians have evacuated Olti and retreated to Penak."....A telegram from Constantinople says: "After fifty-five hours' fighting near Krstaz, carried on mostly at close quarters, the Montenegrins have withdrawn to Banjani. The losses on both sides amount to several thousands. The Prince of Montenegro has withdrawn his headquarters from near Niesic back to Ostrok. Mehemet Ali telegraphs that the Montenegrins have been routed in an engagement in the Kolaschin district."

A TORPEDO recently exploded in a Russian railway train with terrible effect. A train carrying army goods was on its way from Galatz to Ibrail, having on board a torpedo of English manufacture, technically called the Whitehead or Fish torpedo. When about half way, near where the road strikes the Danube, the torpedo accidentally exploded, blowing the entire train to atoms, killing the engineer, fireman, and brakeman, and tearing up the track for a distance of a quarter of a mile....The Turks, aware of the inability of their Asiatic army to cope with the overwhelming numbers of the Russian invading forces in the field, have made a bold move to cut the enemy's long line of communications. The success of this movement would compel an instant retrograde movement of a considerable portion of the Russian army, since subsisting upon a country so impoverished would be impossible. The Turkish demonstration has already induced the Russians to withdraw their right wing, which had been far advanced on the road to Erzeroum, and the Turks have consequently been enabled to reoccupy Olti and some other important positions on the road leading west from Ardahan. Russian reports explain that the backward movement was voluntary on their part, and that they had determined to concentrate their forces for the reduction of Kars before pushing further into the enemy's country.

THE New York Herald's correspondent with the army in Asia telegraphs particulars of the recent battle or series of battles in front of Kars. The fighting began on Saturday, June 9, by a determined attack of the Russians. The conflict was renewed at daylight on Sunday. The Russians had effected a lodgment in one of the outer earthworks on the previous night. The struggle was sanguinary in the extreme. The Russians are reported to have held their ground during the whole of Monday and Monday night. On Tuesday the Turks began the fight, assuming the offensive by making the most desperate sorties. According to the Herald's correspondent from a Turkish source, this resulted on Tuesday in the dislodgment of the Russians, who had been inefficiently supported. The Turks succeeded in surprising the Russians by a flank movement, and the slaughter that followed was very great. The Russians asked no quarter, and the Turks offered none. The last action of the Russian gunners was to spike the few Turkish field-pieces which they had captured in the redoubt. This was after it became a hand-to-hand struggle, and the guns were of no further service....Typhus fever and other fatal ailments are playing havoc with the Turkish rank and file....A war correspondent with the army on the Danube telegraphs that "the immense mass of material which the Russians are moving toward the Danube can scarcely be lodged in the depots on the river before the 1st of July. It is, therefore, scarcely probable that any attempt will be made to cross before that time."....The New York Herald correspondent in Berlin telegraphs that Russia's reply to Earl Derby has apparently satisfied the powers. Trustworthy information regarding its contents indicates that it rejects the idea of interference with Egypt or the Suez canal. The reply denies all intention of taking possession of Constantinople, but leaves the question of the occupation of the Turkish capital untouched. There is one point on which the document is very clear and explicit. It demands an entire change in the administration of the Christian provinces of Turkey, and indicates that on this point no compromise will be made.

BUTLER-MACVEAGH.

Rich, Rare and Racy Correspondence Between Benj. F. Butler and Wayne MacVeagh.

MAC TO BEN.

SIR: I have just read your letter in the New York Times. Your informant happens to have told you the exact opposite of the truth in every statement respecting me. Col. Wharton did not aid me at New Orleans, but was one of the adherents of the Packard Government to the end. He did not manage or transact any kind of business for me. He did not receive any promise from me in respect to any office. I have not asked the President to appoint him Marshal. So much for that portion of your letter. Where I am known I do not need to deny the silly story about the use of money, or to declare it to be, as you know it to be, a base and cowardly falsehood. For those who do not know me perhaps I ought to add that, apart from any repugnance on my part to the crime, there were two practical difficulties in the way of my committing it. I had no money of my own to spare, and it is only a military commandant at New Orleans in time of war who can safely appropriate any considerable quantity of the property of others to his own use. The fact is that the enemies of reconciliation in Louisiana waste their time in trying to discover or invent some kind of a bargain with which at once to account for its success and to discredit it. Strange as it may seem to some of them, political results are still attainable in this country by straightforward and honest methods, and the country will judge the result we secured by its fruit, in comparison with the fruits of the opposite party. Comparing the four years to come of honest and lawful government, with the eight years just ended of hatred, intimidation, outrage, corruption, anarchy and murder, therefore, from the bitterness of good men misguided and bad men disappointed, I appeal to the generous judgment of the American people, and I await their decision upon the subject of our labors in Louisiana, not with misgivings or excuses, but with confidence and pride. Yours truly, WAYNE MACVEAGH.

BEN TO MAC.

If you had addressed me even a printed letter couched in the ordinarily courteous language which passes between gentlemen, especially as the one who uses it, it is rumored, is expecting employment in the diplomatic service of his country, I should have very promptly, upon being set right, made reparation so far as in my power for any injury arising from a publication even for which I was not responsible. I never thought of charging you with using your own money, of which you declare you had none to spare, in paying the mileage of the deserting legislators of the Packard House. It never occurred to me that any money was paid—only promised—or that the legislators got this money for deserting, any more than Wharton has got his office for managing his business. On the contrary, I was told that, although the money was promised as a bribe for the desertion of the poor fellows, they did not get it, but were required further to vote for Mr. Stafford as Senator before they could get even what was due them. You say that, strange as it may seem to some of them, political results are still attainable in this country by straightforward and honest methods. True, it did seem strange to me, after more than thirty years' experience in the ways of Pennsylvania politics and methods, and politicians in both parties, if the transaction was either straightforward or honest. You made a good point on me there. I agree most fully that where you are known you do not need to deny any silly story about the use of money in paying anything. If I had ever asserted that you did use your own money for any good or even political purpose, I should have been guilty of, as you, in your own chaste language, say, a base and cowardly falsehood; therefore I say again, I have never known or heard of your paying anything to anybody; and, as at present advised, without more evidence than I have now, I never will assert such a thing possible. You need not make me excuses as you do for not having money of your own to spare. I have known many men without money, but I never knew one without an excuse for not having it. As you state in your excuse, it is only a military commander of New Orleans in time of war who can safely appropriate any considerable quantity of the property of others to his own use. Do I understand you correctly, that it is the want of ability to do it safely that has prevented you from appropriating a considerable quantity of the property of others to your own use?—because, although you were young and able-bodied, I fail to recall the number of the regiment in which you served in the war for your country's safety. Every one has his own taste in choosing his own way to acquire money, but if I were obliged to choose one of two ways, either to appropriate it as a military commandant or to marry into a family where I was neither wanted, nor by which I should be respected, to get money to spare, I certainly should choose the former, strange as you may think it; because, at least, I should have the money after having committed a disreputable act to get it, and not be liable to be disappointed, as I might be after I had waited long for dead men's shoes by the other method. Let me advise you, my dear sir, not to lose your temper in discussing political matters. If you do, you will prove yourself unfit to be employed to manage diplomatic affairs, even near the smallest court in Europe, say of Monaco, where they have a standing army of sixty-three men only, so that you need not be afraid to go there because of any danger of war.

B. F. BUTLER.

MAC'S PARTING SHOT.

I fear you have overworked your invective faculties, for your long and labored letter of today shows signs of failing powers, and will go far to destroy that reputation for effective scurrility which you have so sedulously fostered. The issue between you and me was of your own seeking, and is so plain that you cannot obscure it by any amount of misrepresentation, however irrelevant or vulgar. You deliberately wrote and published concerning me four sheer falsehoods, without a particle of foundation for any one of them. Thereupon I promptly put you on the national pillory, with a very legible statement of your offenses upon your forehead. As you have endured your punishment for an entire week, and now virtually confess that every statement made by you was false, I have no objection to your getting down; but you must not suppose that I placed you there in resentment only. My chief purpose was to exhibit you as a warning to younger men, by showing them that, in spite of great ability and energy, you had become the byword of our politics, by reason of the general conviction that you habitually disregard the Eighth and Ninth Commandments. That purpose has been fully answered by the comments of the country upon your character, and I have no further interest in the matter. I shall not even take the trouble to deny any new falsehoods you may think it to your advantage to invent about me; for those who know me will not believe anything you say against me, and those who know you of course will not believe anything you say against anybody.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

LOUISIANA will profit handsomely by the fact of a short sugar crop in many other countries this year.

THE Boston Journal of Commerce advocates giving five-year subsidies to American steam mail lines to be established for the foreign trade.

A LONDON cablegram to the New York Herald says: "It is a significant fact that Canadian beer is becoming an active article of importation to this country of malt liquors."

WOOLEN manufacturers in Rhode Island report more encouraging prospects than at any time in the last three years. Nearly all the mills are working on advance orders.

THE South is very properly agitating for cotton mills on its own soil, and raising money to pay good men in the North to come down and write them up, and trying to catch the eyes of capitalists on both sides of the broad ocean.

THE American leather dealers will doubtless be interested in the announcement that an International Exhibition of leather, oak trees, bark and the like will be held at Berlin in September, beginning on the 8th and lasting to the 29th.

FOUR steamers which left New York for Liverpool one day last week carried out 1,000,000 pounds of beef, and a large amount of grain. There were also shipped 30,000 boxes cheese, 2,500 bales cotton, and 450 tons of agricultural machinery.

THE export of cotton goods for the nine months ending March 31 was 17,828,000 yards of colored, and 53,262,000 of uncolored, against 6,404,000 and 41,178,000 respectively last year; total about 71,000,000 yards, against 47,500,000. This is an increase of about 50 per cent.

THE armory at Springfield, Mass., has been closed, and it is feared that work will not be resumed until next December. A number of the armorers will be in very straitened circumstances, some of them having large and dependent families, and others mortgaged real estate upon which payments are to be made.

A LONDON special to the New York Herald says: "The value of the meat trade between America and England is shown in the statement that during the past three months 123,650 tons of fresh meat were imported from the United States. Of fresh and salt meats the United States sent 363,685 tons during the same period."

PERHAPS it is not generally known what a lively place Pensacola, Fla., has become. A large number of vessels now seek its harbor for lumber and timber. Not long ago there were 150 ships in the harbor at one time, of nearly all nationalities. Weekly payments for labor in loading vessels have, in flush times, reached $60,000, and Pensacola, whose harbor is excellent, is now a thriving little city.

The Dutch Passion for Washing.

Every Saturday morning the Dutch women wash their houses on the outside, scrubbing them from the pavement to the chimney. Any point that is too high for broom or ladder they reach by a forcing pump. Out of nearly every window may be seen a woman, stretching herself half way out, perhaps, with a brush and cloth reaching after some fancied dirt-spot, or dashing a pail of water at it.

It is understood at this time that the town is given up to cleaning, and the passers-by on the pavement below have no right to complain if they get a shower of water and suds over their heads. The spiders have been driven entirely out of Holland, or left in disgust, and I do not think I ever saw a fly anywhere in the country. No swallows are allowed to dirty up their houses or stables, and, strange to say, one sees no birds about whatever, except the omnipresent storks, which are allowed, by special favor, to build their nests in the chimney tops, owing to a particular veneration which the Dutch have for this bird, likely because it is a water fowl, or rather a water and land fowl, or, like the Dutch themselves, an amphibious swamp animal.

As you go through a Dutch town the most common sight is the women washing in the canals. On both sides, from one end of the street to the other, they may be seen, at all times of the day, washing everything, from a baby's stocking to a table-cloth, and, when they have nothing else to wash, they wash out their brooms and brushes and tubs and themselves. Sometimes the whole canal has the appearance of flowing with soap suds.

The Dutch have learned the art of washing, and everything connected with it, so well that other countries often send their linen there to be washed and bleached, especially the large manufactories. The meadows outside of a Dutch town are fairly white with washed articles stretched over them.—Ladies' Repository.

A Spiritual Medium Prosecuted.

Wm. Matthews, a professed spiritualist medium, is on trial in San Francisco, on a charge of swindling by giving fraudulent seances. Several reputable witnesses testify that they attended one of Matthews' exhibitions. He entered a cabinet, closed the doors, and in a few minutes exposed himself firmly tied to a seat. Spirits had done it he said. Then the doors were shut again, and a variety of faces were shown at an aperture. Suddenly a spectator wrenched the cabinet open, another turned on the gas, and Matthews was seen with a mask over his face. False whiskers, and other things to disguise with, were on the floor. The jury convicted him, but he has not yet been sentenced.

THE LIVELY LOCUST.

New Jersey and Staten Island Literally Alive with Seventeen-Year Locusts.

[From the New York World.]

Staten Island and New Jersey are swarming with seventeen-year locusts. A few days ago the earth under the trees began to open with innumerable circular holes, and insects an inch in length and completely enveloped in a light-brown translucent shell came crawling forth. Sometimes there would only be from twelve to fifteen of these holes under a tree, and again the ground would be riddled like a sieve. As they crawled along the ground they burst their light exterior coverings of shells, and struggled forth, perfectly-formed winged insects, leaving their outgrown shells behind them, strewing the grass. They crawled up the tree trunks, clinging to the bark with their forked antennæ. When they have reached the limbs they crawl out along them to the branches and fasten themselves to the growing twigs. They never attach themselves to the branches except at a distance from the trunk, and commonly within eight inches of the farthest tips. Trees can now be seen on Staten island whose branches are weighed down at the ends and blackened with the swarms. Here the ground in many places is literally honeycombed under the trees, and the shrubs and flowers, as well as the trees, are covered with a clinging burden of insects. The flowers in many gardens will be injured from the mere weight of the locusts, but it is not believed that the shrubs and trees are likely to suffer. The female locust undoubtedly eats the leaves and tender pith of the twigs, but it is not voracious, and the great body of the tree will not be touched. The males keep up prolonged humming, and their incessant rub-a-dub-dub, from morning to night, is the only annoyance which is so far appreciable. The shells cover the ground, but the insects have crawled out of the way, and the more nervous residents have overcome their first dislike at crushing the crisp, hollow bodies at every step. Old farmers say that the seventeen-year locusts do more good than harm. Of course many of the twigs wither and fall off, but the trees do not suffer, nor is the fruit-crop damaged. It is a common tradition among the farmers that, after locust year, they have the following season an unusually large apple crop; for the locusts serve to prune the tree, and the fruit-trees are actually benefited by their visit.

The Torpedo.

Nearly every war makes some striking contribution to the science of death. Our own war impressed the shovel and the turreted iron-clad on the military and naval policies of the world. Prussia in 1866 demonstrated the power of the breech-loader, and the great war of 1870 contributed the mitrailleuse, the balloon, the carrier-pigeon, and other devices to the resources of combat. The present contest seems destined to give prominence to electricity and gun-cotton as combined in the naval torpedo. It has been assumed that the bottoms of vessels were safe, while armor has been lavished on their sides till triple steel and oak seemed to defy any possible projectile. But what is a projectile hurled by gunpowder from a cylinder a mile off compared with the destructive force of dynamite, reacting against a solid wall of water, in immediate contact with a vessel? Plainly, when the torpedo can be dispatched on its mission with the accuracy of a railway train, and can once be got to go off with the certainty of a revolver, ships of war will be completely at their mercy.

The Whitehead torpedo, with which the Russians are supplied, is a cigar-shaped projectile twelve feet long, shot from a cylinder under water and propelled by an interior machinery of compressed air. It is an Austrian-English invention, and an Austrian manufacture. It is apparently, however, in no way superior to some of the productions of the torpedo corps of the American navy. The British iron-clads are being supplied with net-works or skirts of lattice to prevent a torpedo from striking their hulls, but one of these projectiles, weighing several hundred weight, must have a strong impinging force, and will not be likely to be detained by any crinoline which a vessel could wear and preserve the capacity of locomotion.

TEXAS papers report grass thirty feet high on the San Marcos river.

THE CHARLEY ROSS CASE.

The [illegible] Hopes of His Party [illegible]

The Philadelphia Times says that a letter was recently sent to Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, inquiring if any guarantee of immunity from punishment could be given by him if Charley Ross were returned. In reply his Secretary wrote: "Section 9 of article 4 of the constitution of 1874 provides that 'no pardon shall be granted nor sentence commuted except upon the recommendation in writing of the Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney General, and Secretary of Internal Affairs, or any three of them, after full hearing upon due public notice and in open session.' You will therefore see that, however the Governor may desire to assist in the restoration of the boy to his parents, he has no authority to guarantee a pardon or immunity to his abductors or those who now hold him in custody. Such a guarantee can be obtained, if it can be obtained at all, through the Board of Pardons, whose recommendations the Governor but rarely disregards."

The Times adds: "On Wednesday evening a gentleman who, since the abduction of Charley Ross, has interested himself in his recovery, and who is one of the three or four persons acquainted with the ins and outs of the latest clew, left this city for the locality near which the boy is supposed to be in hiding, and since that time nothing has been heard of his whereabouts."

The York (Penn.) Dispatch also has something to say on the subject. It says that James Logan, a private detective, arrived in that borough on Wednesday night, and is busily engaged in working up the case, and that he makes the following statement: "I have followed up this case for nearly three years, and have knowledge concerning it which no other man possesses. I have confounded all the other detectives, with their clews, and, now that Mr. Ross has given up this one, I take it up. I will not give the information which I hold at this time—it would defeat my ends. I have documents in my possession which, if true, as I fully believe them to be, puts the Ross mystery in an entirely new shape, and one which will startle the public as it has never before been startled. All my investigations are made to add to the stores of my information, and not alone to find the boy, but also to solve the mystery surrounding his disappearance and whereabouts. The boy is still alive, and I do not believe he was ever stolen for ransom—the plot is deeper still. The cause of his abduction, or rather the taking away of Charles B. Ross, is the end and aim of my investigation. I wrote to Mr. Ross under the date of March 27, 1875, stating that I never would give up my investigation until I found the person who was the primary cause of the abduction. I am occasionally alluded to in the papers, indirectly, as a monomaniac on the subject of the Ross case. I can only answer this with success in my undertaking. The future will justify my work, and there is method in my madness. The detectives of New York and Philadelphia are as smart and intelligent as any in the world, and had there not been a Judas in the camp they would have had the boy long ago. I am a private detective."

The Dispatch in this connection remarks: "Our interview with Mr. James Logan is full of startling interest, and he confided to us many things which it is not proper here to mention, but in a few weeks they may be spoken openly, and in the meantime the public may rest assured that the end is at hand, and the denouement will be a surprise and a 'sensation' to all."

Monster Guns.

The large Rodman gun which was recently cast in Boston is, with two exceptions, the largest piece of ordnance ever made in the United States. Ninety tons of metal were melted in the three furnaces in which the monster was cast. The tube which is to be placed within the bore is about 282 inches long and 12 inches in diameter. It will be received from England at an early day. The diameter at the widest part will be 55 inches, and the casing will be 20 inches for a depth of 232 inches; at the muzzle the external diameter will be 29 inches; the length of the gun will be 263 inches, or about 22 feet; it will carry a 700-pound conical ball; the ordinary charge of powder will be 100 pounds, and the weight of the ordnance will be about 45 tons. The special feature of this gun is a brass ring which, when the piece is discharged, expands against the bore of the gun and prevents any injury from the passage of gas. This gun, big as it is, is a toy in comparison with the wrought-iron and cast-steel ordnance which has recently been manufactured abroad. The 81-ton Fraser gun, with which the British engineers have been experimenting at Shoeburyness, takes a charge of 370 pounds of powder and a projectile of 1,700 pounds. The cast-steel breech-loader which Herr Krupp is now making will weigh 80 tons; the weight of the projectile will be 1,650 pounds, and the Armstrong gun manufactured for the Italian navy weighs 100 tons. The big Krupp gun which was shown at Philadelphia a year ago, and which has recently been purchased by the Russian Government, weighs 56 tons. —New York Tribune

Hydrophobia.

The average annual mortality from hydrophobia in England is one to about 500,000 inhabitants, or nearly the same as in New York city; in France and Germany it is somewhat higher; for the United States generally there are no satisfactory statistics, but the fatality is probably not greater than in New York. The disease is peculiarly one of the temperate zone, and is very rare in Turkey, Syria, and Egypt, although it is said to occur in China and India. The potency of the contagion varies in different epidemics, in different dogs, and at different times in the same dog. It is estimated that from one-third to one-seventh of the dogs bitten by rabid animals contract the disease, when no treatment is adopted; while a susceptibility to madness is less, and the cure can always be effected when the wound is well cauterized early; [illegible] prevails among the highly-domesticated dogs, and is thought by many of the first authorities to affect both sexes about equally, although the statistics of France show that it occurs (absolutely, not per 1,000) from three to five times as often in males as in female dogs, and is readily recognized, even in its early stages, by those familiar with animals. To most observant persons some departure from a healthy condition would be noticed. Probably only a very small proportion of "mad dogs" killed ever had hydrophobia or any other dangerous disease.—Boston Journal.

Crossing the Danube.

Napoleon's passage of the river Danube in the face of the Austrians before the battle of Wagram is thus described by a military writer in the London Telegraph: "He had prepared on the island of Lobau a number of flat-bottomed craft and the materials for floating bridges, in canals which he had cut into the main stream, keeping the boats concealed by trees and brushwood from the enemy's view. Making a feint at another point, he sent, at 9 o'clock in the evening, two battalions of infantry across, who at once became engaged with the Austrian outposts, but held their ground till the floating bridges were constructed over the river, there 150 yards wide, when a whole corps passed over and seized the nearest village. By 11 o'clock several bridges were constructed, another corps was already crossing, and before daylight 70,000 men had effected their passage. The night was very dark, and there were torrents of rain."

The passage of the Danube in 1828 was a bold and brilliant undertaking. The Turks had divined the Russian intentions from the preparations being made, and had intrenched themselves opposite to Satunovo, the selected point of crossing. To reach the river bank here the Russians had to make a causeway no less than 7,000 paces in length, 3,000 of which had to be carried on wooden bridges, and the troops were under fire from the Turks while at work. The Russians had a flotilla on the Danube, and when the causeway was complete a detachment of light infantry and Cossacks were sent across the river in boats and landed below the Turkish intrenchments, concealed by a wood. The Turks did not discover their presence, and the Russians rushed upon the rear of the nearest intrenchment, taking it by storm. Then the Turks, more than 10,000 strong, were seized with panic and fled, and the position was abandoned.

Turnips Declared a Sure Cure for Hog-Cholera.

Maj. John Millon, a well-known citizen of Laplata, Macon county, has great faith in turnips as a sure cure for the disease known as hog-cholera. So great is his faith that he has filed a claim with the State Government for the $10,000 reward offered by the Legislature for a remedy for that disease. Maj. Millon says experiments made by him have demonstrated the fact that turnips are not only a cure, but a preventive of cholera. He has imparted the secret to many farmers in this State, all of whom found the remedy sure. One wealthy farmer in Howard county, Maj. Millon says, had thirty-eight hogs afflicted with cholera. He was advised of the turnip cure, but placed no faith in it. However, he concluded to give it a trial, and, selecting one of the hogs worst afflicted, he put it in a pen alone and fed it turnips. The result was, that hog recovered and all the rest died. Maj. Millon states that unless a hog is too far gone to eat, the turnips will cure him. The remedy is a cheap one and easily procured, and it can certainly do no harm for farmers to give it a trial.—Hannibal (Mo.) Clipper.

Wives of the Russian Officers.

The girl the Russian officer leaves behind him when he goes to the war is his wife. Early marriages are very common in Russia, and a very large proportion of the officers of the army—even those of the lowest grade—are married. In the German, French and British armies, an officer is not permitted to marry until he attains a certain rank or satisfies the military authorities that either he or his bride can afford to undertake the responsibilities of domestic life. In Russia, as the Pall Mall Gazette explains, there is no regulation of this kind; and, as the pay of the Russian officer is notoriously meager, it follows that most of those who are married are in a state of extreme poverty, and can with difficulty provide their families with even the necessaries of life. Moreover, very many of the subaltern officers of the Russian army are quartered for long periods with small detachments in out-of-the-way and miserable villages, where they must perforce live without any society whatsoever, save that of peasants and their own soldiers.

Coinage at New Orleans Advised.

An interesting report in favor of resuming the operations of coinage at the New Orleans mint has been made to the Treasury Department by James Ross Snowden, of Philadelphia, who was sent down last April as a special agent to examine the building and machinery, and to look into the probabilities of bullion supplies from Mexico. The mint was closed from 1861 until October, 1876, when it was reopened as an assay office. The building and machinery are still in good condition. Mr. Snowden favors the resumption of coinage operations, and thinks that the working of the mint will attract large quantities of silver bullion from Mexico, and of old Mexican dollars for recoinage. Most of the silver product that leaves that country now goes to England. Before the mint was closed much of it came to New Orleans.

Severe on the Band.

An application of the Peterboro band to be allowed to play in the park has been rejected, the reason given for the refusal being that the newly-planted trees would suffer from the carelessness of persons congregated. The end of the Warden's answer to the request is severely ironical. It reads thus: "I beg to suggest that the old burying-ground would be a suitable place for your performances, and the county has no objection to your using it."—Toronto Globe.

CRAPO'S BARK.

Description of the Smallest Craft Ever Started on the Transatlantic Trip.

[New Bedford (Mass.) Cor. New York Herald.]

Capt. Thomas Crapo, of New Bedford, is now on his way to Europe, he having sailed in the smallest boat which ever attempted to cross the Atlantic on such a foolhardy expedition. Mrs. Crapo, his plucky wife, accompanied him. A large crowd were at the wharf to see the pair start on their long and perilous journey, and the air was rent with cheers as the tiny craft glided out of the harbor. It was a sight seldom seen in this section of the country, and old tars looked on with amazement at the determination of Capt. Crapo to attempt such a hazardous undertaking. The previous day religious services were held near the boat, attended by a large number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Crapo. Fervent prayers were offered that He who holds the winds in the hollow of His hands would so guide the boat that Capt. Crapo and his wife would be permitted to return to their family in safety.

The dimensions of the boat as furnished by the Custom House officials is as follows: Length on deck, 19.55 feet; over all, 20 feet; breadth, 6.4; breadth over ribbons, 6.4 feet; greatest depth, 3.16 feet; average depth within the length of the keel, 2.6 feet; greatest inside breadth, 6 feet; tonnage admeasurement, 1.62, but the old Government measurement would make her tonnage nearly three tons. Capt. Crapo has provided himself with extra sails to be used in case of emergency, and he has also a squaresail and staysail which he proposes to bring into use when the wind is light. He also carries charts, compass and a quadrant, and he will keep his longitude by dead reckoning, verifying it by speaking any vessels he meets.

Capt. Crapo proposes to take the route used by ocean steamers, taking a direct course from Chatham light until clear of Newfoundland and then hauling northerly for latitude 45 deg., and longitude 30 deg., from which point he will make a course as direct as wind and weather will permit for the chops of the English channel, and expects to be reported at Falmouth in about forty days. Thence he proposes to proceed to London, and before the end of the season to Havre.

Mariners generally give the opinion that the boat is an able one and will in all probability make the voyage in safety, but they state that her owner must show good seamanship and be ever on the alert for the numerous changes of wind and weather which he will encounter. One of the drawbacks, which is a serious one, is that there is no means of lighting the cabin from without except through the hatchways, and consequently there are no means of ventilation save by the hatches, there being no windows. The intrepid Captain is of the opinion that in very rough weather the after part of the fore hatch can be raised a little while the boat is laid to, with her head kept to the wind by a drag, and that he can sit in the hatchway aft and steer his craft.

The boat draws thirteen inches of water, and should the sea break over her, there being no bulwarks to retain it, it will run off as quickly as it came. Capt. Crapo will have a canvas boot to fasten around his body when necessary. After taking leave of the numerous crafts which accompanied the boat out of the harbor, Mrs. Crapo, who is the mate and crew as well, donned a masculine suit in place of the usual female attire, the former being better adapted to her work.

No little apprehension is felt for the safety of the boat, notwithstanding the confidence expressed in her Captain, and her arrival in Europe will be awaited with almost painful interest, not only by his numerous friends in this city, but by many who have heard of his rashness in other parts of the country.

The Delights of Base-Ball.

The only son of a widowed mother in the vicinity of Douglas park is member of an amateur base-ball club. On Saturday he had his hair cut and oiled, and accoutred himself for the fray, and his fond mother tied one of her best lace-trimmed handkerchiefs around his throat, and put a clean handkerchief, with some cologne on it, in his belt, and kissed him, and he went. About a quarter past 7 he returned—that is, the most of him—and the following conversation ensued:

"My son, where is the lace handkerchief you had round your neck?"

"Here, ma, tied round this finger. I picked up a daisy cutter. I think the finger is only out of joint, not broken."

"My son, why do you not speak plainer. Surely, surely you have not been drinking?"

"No, ma, but in the latter half of the seventh inning our catcher's hands gave out, and I went behind, and I stopped a foul tip with my teeth, that is all."

"My son, your nice new uniform is all blooded in front. What ever can you have been doing?"

"Nothing, ma, only I was trying to scoop in a high one at third, and the sun got in my eyes, and I muffed it, and the ball came on my nose, but I put it over to first and got him out."

"My son, your white flannel pants are all green behind."

That, ma, was in the third inning when I tried to steal to second, and had to throw myself down and slide in. I got the base anyhow, and came in on a two-baser to left field."

"Alas, my son, I fear that you have had an unpleasant day. Let me send for a surgeon and a dentist, and get some arnica, ice water, lint, raw beefsteak, splints, sticking-plaster, vinegar and brown paper, Radway's Ready Relief, Perry Davis's Pain Killer, compresses, slings, leeches, clean clothes, opodeldoc, horse liniment, and in a few days you will not know yourself."

"Oh, ma, it was the bulliest game I ever was in—ten innings, and the score 7 to 6. If I die I give my bat to Billy Humphreys, and my spiked shoes to Charley Gross." (Exit, led out by his ma. Curtain falls.)—Chicago Times.

The Silver Question.

The minority report of the Silver Commission appointed at the late session of Congress has just been published. The report strongly condemns the use of silver as the principal medium of exchange, denouncing the so-called double standard as an illusion and impossibility. The recommendations of the minority include the making of silver dollars a legal tender for any sum not exceeding $20, and to any amount in the payment of dues to the Government except duties on imports, the coins to be issued only in exchange for one and two dollar notes, which are then to be destroyed; the coining of half eagles almost exactly the equivalent of the pound sterling, and cancellation of $3 000,000 of paper money each month. These are the principal features of this plan.

A Snake Attacks a Man in a Buggy.

Mr. Walters and his wife were returning to the city in a two-horse buggy from a trip into the country. About seven miles from town, on the Mansfield road, they passed a snake that was lying by the side of the road, the great size of which attracted their attention. After passing the reptile, Mr. Walters concluded that he would turn back and kill it. He turned the team around, drove back to a point opposite the snake, drew his pistol and fired at it, but without effect. The horses, not being used to the report of firearms, became restless and hard to control, which caused the attention of Mr. Walters to be diverted from the snake, which ran rapidly to the buggy, up the wheels, and on to the dashboard before the occupants were aware of it. The snake, when it was within a foot of the occupants of the carriage, coiled the lower part of its body, threw its neck into a graceful curve, drew back its head, and was just in the act of launching its deadly fangs into Mr. Walters, when he fired a second shot. This, though missing, had the effect of causing the snake to lower itself on to the tongue of the carriage. Mr. Walters then fired two more shots, one of which took effect, and caused the reptile to fall from the carriage to the ground, and Walters dispatched it with a large stone. The reptile was measured and found to be over six feet long, and was thicker than a man's wrist.—Dallas (Texas) Commercial.

The Woes of War Correspondents.

Both Russia and Turkey put difficulties in the way of correspondents joining the armies. In cases where they have granted permission, they subject to censorship all the reports about to be forwarded, and make it a condition that the correspondents shall not go to the advanced lines, but remain at the headquarters under the control of a special officer. Their passes consist of their own photograph portraits, with a stamp and permit on the back, and of a brassart with the word "correspondent" on it.

Another difficulty is of a linguistic nature. There are both in Roumania and Turkey but few telegraph offices from which a message worded in English can be sent. A London Telegraph correspondent writes from Rustchuk that the apparatus at the telegraph office of that fortress is arranged for the transmission of Turkish hieroglyphics only. And so it is all through these countries, with the exception of cities like Constantinople, Bucharest, and a few commercial ports. In this way the enterprising English or American reporter, who, for the sake of being promoted to the dignity of a "special correspondent," undertakes to face all the discomforts and risks of following a semi-barbarian army, has to learn the languages of the Turks, the Wallachians, and the Russians before he can expect to be able to understand what is going on, or to transmit anything by telegraph.

A Rebellious Leg.

A heavily-bearded, shock-headed man with a wooden leg stumped noisily up to the prisoners' bar in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday. When he got to the bar he folded his arms upon it, stood at ease on his sound leg and thrust his wooden one through the bars of the railing.

"James Flynn," said Judge Wandell, "I hope you are comfortable."

"That I am, yer Honor."

"You were arrested last night in a state of intoxication. What have you to say?"

"It was on account ave the day, yer Honor. Yisterday, sor, was Mimorial day, an' havin' been a soldier meself, sor, I naturally took a drop——"

"Yes, down a cellar-way, where the officer found you with your wooden leg sticking straight up in the air, and when he put you in a cart to take you to the station-house you thrust your leg through the spokes of the wheel and stopped the procession."

"It may be thrue, sor, but it wor the fault av the leg, sor——"

"Well, I'll fine the leg $10, and hold you until the law is satisfied."

Jealousy and Suicide.

A Bohemian tailor living in Baltimore married a widow who had many attractions, and several children, and one irregularity—she honored the memory of her first husband, and occasionally visited the cemetery to scatter flowers over his grave. The other morning she asked the tailor to go to the cemetery with her, but he appeared to be annoyed by her attentions to his predecessor and flatly refused. She went alone and placed a handful of flowers on the grave. When she returned to her home she found the door of her husband's room locked and bolted. The bolts were forced and the tailor was found hanging to the wardrobe, forlorn and dead. The poor devil was jealous of the gentleman in the coffin.

A Tin-Clad Catfish.

A boy while fishing in Lake Butte des Morte the other day felt a nibble, and, drawing his hook toward the shore, observed a half-gallon fruit can trailing on the bottom. Having secured the vessel, he was greatly surprised to find that a large catfish had taken up its abode therein and remained until his increased dimensions did not admit of egress. He had evidently flopped around in his tin parlor until a hole was made in the rust-eaten bottom through which his tail protruded. In this condition the catfish had power to navigate from one place to another, and must have been regarded by his aquarian neighbors as a kind of iron-clad monitor.—Menasha (Wis.) Press.

A Quorum.

The rivalry between Chicago and St. Louis crops out in various ways. The Chicago Tribune, for instance, says that the other day a St. Louis man heard some surprising intelligence, and exclaimed, in his astonishment, "Can I credit my ears?" "I think you ought to," observed the man of Chicago, "because they form a quorum of you."

A RUSSIAN COLOSSUS.

The Peter the Great—The Thunderer of the Imperial Russian Navy—A Floating Citadel.

(From the New York Herald.)

The most formidable vessel in the imperial Russian navy is the Peter the Great, a colossal ironclad, designed after the Devastation type, but since modified so as to more closely resemble the more recent Dreadnaught. The Peter the Great, like the circular ironclads which bear his name, was built after the designs of Vice Admiral Popoff, and was finished in 1875. Her sides, breastwork walls and turrets are very heavily armored, and she carries 4 12-inch 41-ton breechloading steel rifled Obouchoff guns. She is calculated to steam at the rate of 14 knots per hour, and her trial trips in the Gulf of Finland have in general been successful, though on her first trip several defects were found, which have since been remedied. Her total length over the armored deck is 339 feet, and between perpendiculars 321 feet 10 inches. Her extreme breadth is 63 feet 8 inches, and without armor and armor backing, 59 feet. She draws 22 feet 9 inches of water forward and 24 feet 9 inches aft, and has the immense total displacement of 9,665 tons.

With the exception of the stem and stern posts, which are of gun metal, the entire hull is of iron. The ship has a double bottom, the space between the skins being divided into water-tight cells, so that an injury to any part by means of a torpedo or otherwise would result in the filling of one, or possibly two or more of them, and therefore allow of a complete localisation of the injury. Above the second skin the hull is further divided for the same purpose into compartments by 9 water-tight bulkheads running transversely across the ship. In addition to these there are two bulkheads which traverse the hull longitudinally, being situated symmetrically, one on each side of the keel. These inclose the amidships space, in which are situated the coal bunkers, having a fuel capacity of from 12 to 15 days. The outside skin is worked in two thicknesses of 1 inch each. The ship's bottom is sheathed with wood and copper.

The armor belting, which is carried entirely around the ship, extends, except where it rises to form the breastwork, 3 feet above and 5 feet below the load water-line. It is bolted on in two belts formed of solid plates, the upper belt being 14 inches in thickness amidships and tapering off at the ends to 9 inches, and the lower one 12 inches in thickness amidships, running down to 8 inches at stem and stern. This armor is only intended to protect the vital part of the hull. Hollow girders form the armor backing, the spaces in and between being as usual filled with teak. These girders it is claimed are capable of producing an additional resistance equal to that of 2 inches of solid iron. For the upper belt the armor backing is 10 inches in thickness, and behind the lower it is 12 inches thick. Unlike the Dreadnaught, this vessel has no ramming spur. The armored belt for a length of 160 feet amidships rises to a height of 10 feet 3 inches above the load water-line, forming the sides of the breastwork which incloses the gun turrets. The end walls of this breastwork are semicircular in form, and have the same armor plating as the side walls, but worked on in two thicknesses, in order to more thoroughly protect the turret bases and machinery. The armor covering of the deck of the ship outside of the breastwork and that over the breastwork is formed of double steel plates 1½ and ¾-inches in thickness.

Inside of the citadel, at each end, are placed the revolving gun turrets, the height of the battery being 13 feet above the load line. The turrets are protected by armor plating having the same thickness and backing as that of the breastwork walls outside. Their outside diameter is 32 feet 6 inches, and they, as before stated, each inclose 2 12-inch 41-ton guns. The turret ports being very small the gun cartridges are arranged so as to allow of the heavy guns being raised and lowered within the limits of 18 inches into three different positions with respect to their carriages. This is effected by hydraulic power—two force pumps being used, a steam and a hand one.

The ship's engines are of 1,400 nominal horse power, working up to 10,000 indicated, and give rise to 2 large independent loose-bladed screws. These are each 18 feet 6 inches in diameter and have pitches varying from 19 to 24 feet. There are on board 2 steam windlasses and 2 steam crab winches.

There are 9 special steam pumps, with a total capacity of 6,269 gallons per minute. In addition to these there are 8 steam pumps attached to the main engines, which have a total capacity per minute of 11,924 gallons, and 8 small hand pumps, having a total capacity of 438 gallons per minute. This gives as the total quantity of water which can be pumped out of the main pipe per minute the immense volume of 18,631 gallons.

Flitting Shadows.

While half-a-dozen persons were rolling along in a Michigan avenue car, yesterday, a man leaned across the aisle and said to another:

"Excuse me, but didn't a big bug crawl down behind your collar?"

"Ooh! Ouch!" exclaimed the other, as he leaped up and hauled off his coat. He looked the garment all over, but there was no bug to be seen.

"Perhaps it crawled down under your vest," suggested the man.

Off came the vest, and it was closely inspected without making any discoveries. The attentive stranger then made the victim turn around two or three times, to see if the bug wasn't hidden under the suspenders, and, when a thorough search had been made, the stranger sat down and said:

"It was probably a shadow flitting across your collar, but I felt sure it was a bug. You can put on your coat and vest again."

The more the victim thought about it the madder he got, but before he put on his coat the other man had left the car and slid down Twelfth street as if he had grease on his heels.—Detroit Free Press.

Hard Times in California.

Emigrants are constantly arriving from the parched lower counties seeking labor—some on horseback, but the majority on foot, carrying their blankets. As a consequence, wages are very low, and situations scarce. One case lately came under our observation of a man, his grown son, [illegible], who were working in Green Valley, Sonoma county, and altogether only earned $1 per day. Many are glad to get situations to work for their board.—Napa (Cal.) Register.

The Thunderer's Prediction.

So far as can be judged, the fortune of war will be adverse to the Turks. The operations may not have the rapidity of recent wars, but the Turks are overmatched, and must succumb in the end. This catastrophe Europe will accept. No nation will go to war again in support that which cannot be supported. No real statesman will cling to the dead element in a system instead of looking for its living forces. We know that we must seek for that which is to replace the parting power. To this end we cannot too soon direct our attention.—London Times.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JUNE 21, 1877.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

GARRETT.

Great rejoicing at Garrett—the Prodigal Son returned—the fatted calf killed. There seemed to be great excitement in our little town last Wednesday by the following announcement on the bulletin board:—"Temperance meeting to-night on Cowan Street. Speeches by Mr. Reinoehl and others." The glad tidings rapidly spread through the village that Mr. Reinoehl had signed the pledge that morning, and was going to deliver a temperance lecture in the evening at the Temperance Hall, on Cowan street, had the desired effect of bringing together a vast multitude of natives, all eager to hear the wonderful orator—and, true to his promise, as he always is, Abe was there. Mr. Reinoehl took up the subject of temperance and handled it with ability and credit to himself, and interested the audience.

The exercises were interrupted for a short time by the welcome and sweet sound of the Corunna Brass Cornet Band which had been engaged for this special occasion. Scarcely had the echo of last note expired when Mr. Gross, of Auburn, our worthy deputy Sheriff, was called on for a few remarks. Mr. Gross arose and addressed the audience in a few brief remarks on the evils of intemperance, which were done in a very gentlemanly manner and from all appearance were highly pleasing to the hearers. Everything had passed off in good will and harmony up to this period of the meeting when Mr. Gross made some assertion in the course of his address, which did not meet the approbation of Mr. Parker, who immediately filled up with enthusiasm to such an extent that he could not longer retain his seat. He sprang upon the floor as if he was prompted by the alarm of rattlesnakes in his boots, and bellowed out like an ass. The whole audience was thrown into profound silence by the bale remarks which fell from the classical lips of this eloquent orator. He fired a full broadside into the ranks of the moderate drinkers. He said, "It is not the drunkard in the gutter that we have to encounter, but the moderate drinker, who takes his two and three drinks per day. It is he, and he alone that brings disgrace and ruin upon the once happy household, that were in times gone by, the scene of joy and mirth, all happiness and no sorrow, but now all sorrow and no happiness. We have a right to stop the moderate drinker. We have a right given to us from heaven to stop them. We have a right to appeal to their sense of duty." Here Parker's imagination got so far ahead of his ability that he lost all control of his vocabulary of language. He then appealed to the young ladies in the following language: "Young ladies, you have a duty to perform. Beware of the man with a whisky breath, for I tell you that man is dangerous. Shun him as you would a snake. Here is something for you to take hold of. Take the matter as it stands. Handle it—it is your duty to handle it. There is work to be done and you are the ones to do it." Parker complained a few weeks ago of half a column in the COURIER being devoted to him, and advised Mr. COURIER to drop it and fill that space with a temperance lecture, and he thought it would do some good. The above is part of a temperance lecture as delivered by Parker, so please let us see how it will look in print, and I hope it will do some good. Parker signed the pledge—pledging his honor before God and man that he would abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks and that he had malice towards none and charity towards all—then jumps up in a public meeting (without being called on) and advised one portion of the human family to shun another portion as they would a snake. Such a man is a liar to his heart—if he ever had one. Such a man is more dangerous to society than the poor fallen inebriate. Can he be trusted on his word of honor? he can not be trusted where there is intoxicating drinks any more than a hungry cat can be trusted with a dish of sweet milk, and he is about as fit for an advocate of morality as a wheelborrow is for a steam boat. At the meeting on Wednesday evening, while Parker would be speaking, Mr. Gross remained silent and showed a gentlemanly culture. When Mr. Gross would have the floor, Parker would contradict almost every word he would say, so that it was almost impossible to hear what Mr. Gross was saying, with Parker's impertinent yelping. Mr. Gross was called to the floor by the unanimous voice of the audience. Parker took the floor, prompted by his own ignorance.

Parker says your correspondent at this place has a red nose, and that he has lots of money, and would like to borrow some to pay his debts with. If he has a red nose, it was not made red with democratic campaign money. I have been making a negotiation to accommodate him, and am now prepared to loan him any sum from ten cents up to the price of a cake of soap, but would like to know what security he can give. But when he collects that dollar of W. J. Fredericks that he made such a blow about a few weeks ago, I suppose all his wants will be gratified.

If the young ladies had been taught twenty years ago to shun young men who did not have common sense, the same as they would a snake, and such teachings had been strictly adopted, would Parker be a married man today?

I could fill two columns every week in the COURIER, but I don't wish to take advantage of his ignorance.

WIND.

The Death Roll.

Hon. D. D. Pratt, at Logansport, died last Saturday forenoon, of heart disease. The fatal stroke seized him while conversing with his daughter, and he fell from his chair dead. Mr. Pratt was born in October, 1813, in Maine, and in 1832 came to Rising Sun, Indiana, where he taught school. Afterwards he served as Deputy Treasurer of State and Private Secretary to Governor Noble, at the same time with the last mentioned studying law. Later he removed to Logansport, and in 1851-53 served in the State Legislature. In 1868 he was elected to Congress from the old Tyner District, but did not take his seat, owing to his election as Senator by the Cumback split in 1869. After the close of his Senatorial career, which was honest but not brilliant, he was appointed Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a position which he resigned at the request of President Grant, about a year ago, owing to the Yaryan complication. Returning to his old home he renewed the practice of law, in which he was actively engaged at the time of his death. As a lawyer, he was able and successful, and, as a politician, honest. He was of a kindly nature, genial in disposition, with a host of warm-hearted friends in both parties. His immense weight (300 pounds) at least aggravated the disease from which he suffered, and while the death was sudden it was not altogether expected.

John Pettit, Ex-Supreme Judge of this State, died the same day at Lafayette, of paralysis. Judge Pettit was born in Jefferson county, New York, in 1807, and emigrated to Lafayette, Indiana, in 1831. He served in the House of Representatives from 1843 to 1847, and in the Senate from 1853 to 1855. He was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention, and was twice elected Circuit Judge. In 1857 was appointed by Buchanan Chief-Justice of the Kansas Federal Court. In 1864 he was a member of the Chicago Convention. Four years ago last fall he was elected to the Supreme Bench of the State, and was renominated last year, but was afterwards removed from the ticket in Convention, with Buskirk, owing to the row raised over the extravagance of his Court. This roused the old war-horse against the Democracy and what infience remained to him he used against his old party. Mentally he was a sound lawyer and an excellent Judge. His death was from a stroke of paralysis of several days duration.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculater, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his profit, he must have his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

The Ladies of the Presbyterian church desire to return their cordial thanks to the Odd Fellows for the use of their Hall, and to Mr. Austin for use of room for holding festival, on Friday evening last, also to Mr. Mays for valuable services rendered.

Base Ball Meeting.

Those interested in base ball matters met at T. H. Sprott's office last Saturday evening and organized by selecting Mr. Sprott as chairman.

An organization for the season was effected by electing Wm. McIntyre President, T. C. Mays, Sec'y. and Manager and S. Hollister, Treasurer.

Weamer said the other week: "We have been in favor of the new State House from the first, and believe that our Legislature did at least one thing of which they may be proud when they voted to build the structure." What will the great Roman Senator do now for a constituency? He gloried in the fact that he voted against the measure, and boasted of it since his return.

We expect the editors here to-day. They are a jolly set when feeling just right. Many of them are quite handsome, Germ Brown, for instance, and they are generally married. No chance for a flirtation, though some of them have no objections when their wives do not accompany them, which we hope they will do on this occasion.

A Golden Chance.

Geo. J. E. Mayer, the extensive jeweler of Fort Wayne, now offers all a golden opportunity to secure great bargains, as he will commence this week to sell off his immense stock of gold watches, diamonds, silver ware, clocks, jewelry, &c., at auction holding three sales each day until all is sold. A bona-fied sale in all instances. Now is your chance. No. 19 East Main Street Fort Wayne.

The following named pupils belonging to the C. and D. intermediate department of our school, did not lose a minute during the school year, having been neither absent nor tardy. Flora Hoffman, Clinton Potter.

The following were neither absent nor tardy during the last month of school. Katie Otto, Francis Otto, Mollie Murphy, Ettie Kline, Amanda Walborn, Flora Hoffman, George McKay, Bertie Robbins, Clinton Potter, Albert Houghton. M. K. ZIEGLER, Teacher.

The following is quoted from a remarkable Baltimore Sun Special:

"The President said last night to Senator Oglesby, of Illinois, that one of the principal reasons why he had given the Marshalship to Col. Wharton was because of the manly manner in which he had stood up for Packard."

Good for Hayes! Now let him turn himself out of office because of the unmanly manner in which he didn't stand up for Packard.

The managers of the Fair to be held next September at Fort Wayne, are determined to give a good entertainment this year. We believe they can do it, for we have confidence in the men at the helm. Something must be done to overcome the embarrassments of last year, and a good fair will do more than anything else to restore confidence. With an earnest effort upon the part of all, Allen county need not stand aside for any other in the State.

Proud of Tilden and Hendricks.

[Philadelphia Times.]

Governor Tilden has done more for the cause of administrative reform than any other man in the United States. and the life of Governor Hendricks has been unusually blameless for one who has been so actively engaged in political campaigning. The Democrats have a right to be proud that such men have led them to battle, and although their colors had trailed in defeat these standard-bearers might yet have been honored by the esteem of their followers.

The full tide of a golden harvest is nearly upon us, and the numerous fields of waving grain, all promising a rich abundance, will soon be ready for the reaper. A few days of warm dry weather will mature the crop, and there is no probability now that any calamity can befall, or turn aside the merited reward of the patient, industrious farmer. We rejoice with them in their success after so many failures, and though not directly benefited, we believe their prosperity is the prosperity of all A prosperous husbandry makes a prosperous community.

More dribble from Argus in last week's Press. Well, dribble away, old fellow, we can stand it as long as the Press can. When Argus comes out of the woods, and writes under his proper name, we will not only answer his questions, but ask a few, and at the same time give him a specimen of our grammar. Argus writes, "'was' you not a prominent member of that organization,' &c. Suppose he correct his own errors before he attempts to criticise others. The probability is that Argus is a fraud, and loves to make a pedantic exhibition of his own greatness. Perhaps he is a shyster, and his o'er weening egotism has prevented him from discovering the fact.

A few Things that We Know.

We know that a disordered stomach or liver produces more suffering than any other cause. We know that very few physicians are successful in their treatment of these disorders. We know that DaCosta's Radical Cure will without the shadow of a doubt, almost immediately relieve and permanently cure all of these distressing symptoms. We know of thousands who are willing to testify that what we say is true to the letter. We know that if you will give it a fair trial, you will let us add your name to the "cloud of witnesses." Will you give it a trial, and do it now? Trial size only 25 cents. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Prof. Parker's pleasant worm syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physician required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

Dastardly Outrage.

Our town was thrown into some excitement last Tuesday evening, by the announcement of an attempted outrage upon a young lady. Miss Rebecca Shull, daughter of Henry Shull, residing about two miles north-west of Auburn, is teaching the school at Faegler's Corners. While going from the school house to her home, on Tuesday evening about four o'clock, and just as she passed by a piece of timber land adjoining the road, a depraved speciman of humanity made a rush for her, caught her by the wrist with one hand and endeavored to seize her with the other, but, although terrible frightened, she thrust a sun shade in the way of her antagonist and by a series of piercing screams at last succeeded in escaping from the villian. He saw a team coming along the road some distance off, when he struck for the woods and disappeared. The Wilz boys driving the team say they saw two persons running in the woods, but the girl says she saw only one. In a short time the woods, in which he escaped, were surrounded and a skirmish line advanced, but the party was not found. The fellow was blacked up for the occasion, even to his hands, as the girl's wrist where he had grasped her was quite soiled with something very much like shoe blacking. It is said a similar trick was played upon the daughter of the widow Hall, in that neighborhood, and we believe some one in that vicinity, attempted this last outrage on Miss Shull. We hope a thorough search will be made and the offender brought to justice.

Our attention has been called to some new and useful cooking utensils recently invented. One of which is known as the Centennial Cake and Baking Pan, made of Russia iron, and is so constructed that after your cake is baked, you can instantly remove it from the pan without injuring it; and having a raised bottom the cake can not possibly burn. It is also provided with a slide on the bottom, so that when you remove the tube, you can close the hole, making a pan with plain bottom for baking jelly or plain cakes, bread, etc. Another—the Kitchen Gem—is also a very useful and long-needed household necessity. It is a plated wire boiler or steamer to hang inside of an ordinary iron pot, for boiling or steaming vegetables, which, when done, can be easily removed perfectly dry without lifting the heavy, sooty iron pot off of the stove avoiding the danger of burning the hands with the steam in pouring off the hot water. And the vegetables can not possibly burn, if the water boils dry, as the steamer does not touch the bottom of the pot.

These goods are sold exclusively through agents to families, giving universal satisfaction, and presents a splendid opening for some reliable lady or gentleman canvasser of this county to secure the agency to a profitable business. For terms, territory, etc., write to L. E. Brown & Co., Nos. 214 and 216 Elm Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Why would it no be a good idea for the Town Board of Trustees to fill up some one of the cross streets between Main and Jackson in the South part of town, with shade trees, to answer for a park for general purposes. We have no place to-day where an out-door meeting can be held with any convenience, and this appropriation of an unused street would meet a want long felt. The Court yard, promises nothing in the way of shade for the near future, while our forests near the town are gradually receding, until now it is quite a walk to reach them. There is a cross street just north of Mrs. Houghton, over which a team scarcely passes, that would make a most lovely little park at small cost. The shade of that magnificent elm at the west end, affords sufficient shade now in the afternoon to accommodate a large gathering, and we would suggest if our Reform Club contemplates another out-door meeting, it will find the shade of this tree more pleasant than that cast by the Court House over a wood pile. We intend erecting a stand around it at our own expense, and will want the band to hold open air concerts, like they do in Central Park New York, and the President's grounds in Washington. We hope the suggestion will meet with general approval, for it will be of general benefit. The question of parks is the most serious one that cities have to contend with, as they are regarded as an ansolute necessity. A little park like the street above mentioned would make, would not only beautify that part of the town, but afford a cool pleasant retreat for all in hot summer days, and would be of general utility as a place to hold pic-nics, festivals, grand dinners, political conventions, temperance and religious meetings, &c. Say fifty of our citizens would agree this fall to place therein one good sized tree each, after that it would require but little expense for the town to keep it up in good style for the benefit of the public. We hope for the good of Auburn it will be done.

One of our citizens stopped at the Commercial House at Butler a few days ago, and when he retired at night he placed his pocket book under his pillow. The next morning he left, and several days after he received a dispatch stating that said pocket book was in keeping of the landlord, and subject to his order. This speaks well for the house, and it would not be Gross injustice to say that the guest was a little careless. If he ever strikes our house, he—well, we have no telegraph lines.

[illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible] than I am now,
[illegible]
And I [illegible] if ever my truth should fail,
[illegible] the shining stars of heaven might pale,
And the [illegible] desert the skies.

And [illegible] vow was given to me
From [illegible] was fair to see,
As wild and as strange a vow;
And Lilly, you were "my angel" then,
And I was to you "above all men;"
How is it with you now?

What a moonless sky, what starless nights
Would darken o'er poor beclouded wights,
Should the moon and stars obey,
Whenever young lovers, one or both,
Forget a promise, or break an oath,
Or [illegible] duty stray!

And what sad changes a few years bring!
The peerless angel of whom I sing
Is an angel to me no more,
But a red-cheeked, healthy, ample dame,
In another home, with another name,
And the dreams of her youth are o'er.

And I—did I bear a bleeding heart,
Pierced and wounded by Love's keen dart,
As lovers in books all do?
Alas! for the earnestness of youth!
Alas! for man's constancy and truth!
My dream was forgotten, too.

And the moon shines on, as it used to shine
When I made those broken vows of mine,
And the starry sky above
Changes not; but to me time brought
Strength of purpose and earnest thought,
And a more enduring love;

A love that brightened my home and heart,
That seemed of my very life a part;
And when I was doomed to see
My heart's rose wither from day to day,
I knew that not even death could stay
The flow of her love for me.

And now I think, when the silvery light
Of stars shines out on the calm midnight,
Not of the vow I gave,
Not of the dreams of early years;
But I think how holy the light appears
As it falls upon her grave.

THE TWO JONESES.

I.

It was the 1st of March, in the year of grace 18—. In a merchant's office, not far from Cheapside, a little man sat at a high desk, trying hard, apparently, to keep one eye on the rows of figures before him and the other on the office clock. Failing in this, his glances traversed from the one to the other with pendulum-like regularity. At last the clock struck the wished-for hour of 6, and the little man shut the big ledger with a bang, and, after locking it up carefully in the office safe, dashed into a cupboard, and began a hasty but careful toilet, involving great splashing of water, and much violent exercise with a stumpy nail-brush. Evan Jones was nominally managing clerk, and really general factotum, to the firm of Borwick & Brown, hard-wood merchants. He was 50 years of age, short, fat, and good-natured, though a little peppery at times. He had a numerous family, whom he found it anything but easy to feed and bring up on his modest salary of 50 shillings a week. With strict economy, however, he managed just to make both ends meet. Not for him were the breezy sands of Ramsgate or the chestnut avenues of Hampton court. Not for him were the mild Havana or the fragrant cigarette. He had no vices and desired no luxuries. One indulgence alone in the course of the year did he permit himself. He was a Welshman to the backbone, and herein lay his one extravagance. Come what might, and however depressed the condition of the domestic money market, he was always present at the dinner of the "United Welshmen" on St. David's day. The necessary guinea was to Jones as much as a hundred to many of the other guests who assembled at the banquet in question—a sum to be scraped together by infinite sacrifice and self-denial. But,

Though back and sides go bare,
Though hands and feet go cold,

as the old song says, scraped together it must be, by hook or by crook. For nearly a week prior to the present occasion, Evan's dinner had consisted of a saveloy and a penny roll; and on the day of our story he had taken no food whatever since his frugal breakfast, intending to compensate himself handsomely for his abstinence at the expense of the "United Welshmen." He had, in truth, gone so long without food as to feel a little exhausted; but he consoled himself with the thought of the splendid appetite he should carry to the festive board, and, having at last completed his toilet, he shut up the office and started for the hostelry, where the dinner was to be held, feeling at least six feet high, and humming Ar hyd y nos with patriotic energy.

At almost the same moment when Evan Jones started on his journey, a tall, handsome man, in faultless evening attire, stepped out of a West End mansion, outside of which a brougham was waiting. A graceful little lady, with a bright, girlish face, accompanied him to the hall door.

"You won't be very late, Owen, will you?" she said, coaxingly.

"Not very early, I am afraid, pet. We Welshmen are rare fellows for keeping it up; and if I came away before all the national toasts had been duly honored I should never hear the last of it."

"Very well, dear; then I suppose I mustn't expect you till I see you. I hope you will have a pleasant evening. Don't take too much wine," she continued laughingly.

"Can't answer for myself on such an occasion," her husband responded. "The —— tavern," he said to the coachman, and, kissing his hand to his wife, in a few moments was whirled out of sight.

II.

The "United Welshmen" had finished their dinner, and had made considerable progress with their dessert. Each man wore attached to his button-hole a wonderful composition of green and white satin and silver filigree, which was supposed (by dint of making believe very much indeed) to represent the "leek," sacred to the occasion. A perfect hurricane of n's and m's and p's and l's and w's flew about the room, only ceasing for a few moments when the Chairman rose to propose a toast, or the bards at the far end of the banquet hall tuned their harps for some Cambrian melody. Evan Jones was seated at the festive board, but, alas, no longer the pick-and-span Evan Jones who had but a couple of hours earlier left the office of Messrs. Borwick & Brown. His carefully brushed hair was now rough and disheveled, his face red, his shirt-front limp and crumpled, his necktie awry, and his general appearance that of a gentleman who has dined "not wisely, but too well." Poor Evan had been by no means immoderate in his potations, but he had so weakened himself by long fasting that the little he had taken had an exaggerated effect upon him, and he was rapidly becoming [illegible] pamous. It was an article of faith with him, even in his sober moments, that he was in some mysterious way connected with the last of the Welsh Kings, and in his present elevated condition this idea took possession of his mind with redoubled emphasis. He had more than once commenced a sentence beginning, "As a 'scendant of Llewellyn," but without getting any farther. At the second failure his left-hand neighbor, to whom the observation was addressed, replied profanely, "O, blow Llewellyn!" Evan Jones looked at him for a moment with an expression of immeasurable scorn and disgust, and then turned to his right-hand neighbor: "I's a 'scendant of Llewellyn, 'pears to me—as a 'scendant—of Llewellyn"—and then stopped again.

"Cwm nog lwyn bora dwmnath cwlyd llimach bah,"[*] replied his right-hand neighbor.

"Dwyllog lwmmo gwlloch ydim nos," remarked another of the party.

"Cwlla gwyn dwylleth dym da y cwi bala llewelly caerloc," responded Jones, whose tongue was loose enough in his native Welsh, and who would probably have continued in the same strain for some time, had not the Chairman requested attention for the "March of the Men of Harlech," which was about to be given by the choir. Jones sat still during the chorus, with head and hand keeping tipsy time to the measure; but his soul waxed hot within him under the influence of the inspiring strains, and no sooner had they ceased than he wildly got upon his legs, and said in a loud, thick voice:

"Mis'r Chairman, I shay! 'S a humble represent'tive—I mean ancestor—I mean 'scendant—of Llewellyn, I don't think this 'spicious occasion—I shay I don't think this 'spicious 'casion——"

Here there were loud cries of "Order!" "Chair!" "Sit down!" and Jones was pulled violently down by the coat-tails by one of his neighbors. The gentlemanly-looking man to whom we have alluded in our first chapter was Jones' vis-a-vis at the table. The scene was so ludicrous that he could not repress a smile, which was observed by Evan, whose choleric temper fired up instantly at the supposed affront.

"Wha' th' devil you grinning at, look you?"

"Did I smile? I really beg your pardon; but I am quite sure I was not 'grinning,' as you call it."

"You did, sir; you grinned like—like Cheshire cat, sir. I appeal to th' gen'lmen present. You've 'sulted me, sir—'sulted me grossly. Name's Jones; very good name; 'scendant of Llewellyn; and I 'mand 'sfaction of a gen'lman."

"My name is Jones, too, though I haven't the honor of being a descendant of Llewellyn. There is my card, sir; and if when you come to your own senses you desire to apologize for your unseemly behavior, I shall be happy to see you."

Evan's right-hand neighbor thrust the card, which bore the inscription:

MR. OWEN JONES,
99 Winslow square,
Belgravia, S. W.,

into Evan's waistcoat pocket, and the owner, by no means desirous of being involved in an after-dinner brawl, moved away to another part of the table. By dint of a little humoring those around managed to soothe the fiery Evan into comparative tranquillity, and, after a few more desultory observations, wherein his descent from Llewellyn still played a prominent part, he leant back in his chair, and was speedily fast asleep.

The toasts came to an end at last, the bards packed up their harps, and the last of the guests departed, leaving Evan Jones still sound asleep in his chair. A council of waiters was held over the slumbering hero, and endeavors were made to rouse him. They shook him, they punched him—but all in vain. They succeeded in getting out of him that his name was Jones; but to a further inquiry as to where he lived he only murmured "'scendant of Llewellyn," and relapsed again into still deeper slumbers.

"You'll have to give him a shakedown among the empty bottles, William," said one.

"Not if I know it," replied the head waiter. "He might wake up in the night and walk off with the spoons. No, we must find out where he lives, somehow. Some of you just look in his pockets, will you? Perhaps the gent has a card-case about him."

No sooner said than done.

"Here's a card," said one, diving into Evan's waistcoat pocket. "Mr. Owen Jones, 99 Winslow square."

"That's him, right enough; he said his name was Jones. He don't look much like a Winslow square sort, does he? But there's no accounting for these Welsh gents. Just as well he had his pasteboard about him, though, wasn't it? or he wouldn't have got home to-night."

* * * * * * *

It was a little after 11 o'clock when a four-wheel cab drove up to the door of No. 99 Winslow square.

"This is Mr. Jones', ain't it?" said the cabman to a smart parlor-maid who answered his knock at the door.

"Yes, this is Mr. Jones'," answered the maid.

"That's the name right enough. Here's the card they gave me: 'Mr. Owen Jones, No. 99.' Well, look here, Miss, I've brought your master from the Welsh dinner. He's been enjoying of his wine a goodish bit, I should say, and I can't wake him up nohow."

"You don't mean to say he's taken too much?"

"Well, Miss, that depends. I don't think myself, in a general way, a gen'leman can take too much; the more the merrier, I says. But he's pretty far gone, anyhow."

The maid rushed in to her mistress, who was sitting in the dining-room.

"O, ma'am, here's master come back in a cab from the Welsh dinner, and the cabman says he's fast asleep and quite tosticated."

"Nonsense, Mary!" said her mistress, angrily, and advancing into the hall; "there must be some mistake."

"No mistake, ma'am," said the cabman, touching his hat respectfully; "I've brought the gent from the Welsh dinner, and here's his card."

"Good heavens!" said Mrs. Jones, recognizing her husband's card, "it is too true. O, dear, how ever shall I survive this shocking disgrace? Mary, go down stairs; I know I can rely upon you not to say a word of this dreadful misfortune to the other servants."

"Cabman, I must ask you to assist Mr. Jones up to his bed-room; it is the front room on the first floor; you will find the gas ready lighted. I can give you no help, for I think it would kill me to see him in such a condition."

"Lor', don't take on so, ma'am," said the cabman, good-naturedly; "it ain't nothing when you're used to it. Why, some o' them nobs does it every night. My old horse'll stand as steady as a church, and I'll have the gentleman up stairs in a jiffy."

Poor Mrs. Jones returned into the dining-room, holding her handkerchief to her eyes; after a moment's pause she was made aware, by a sort of scuffling in the passage, accompanied by exclamations of "Wo-ho," "hold up," and other ejaculations of a horsey nature, that the cabman was assisting Mr. Jones up stairs. After an interval of about ten minutes, which seemed an age, he reappeared at the dining-room door, and said, in a confidential manner:

"I've got the gent into bed quite comfortable mum. He was a little orkard to undress, but I done him at last, proper; and he's sleeping like a babby."

Mrs. Jones dismissed the man with a fee beyond his wildest expectations, and resumed her seat, feeling as if her peace of mind was forever lost. She felt that she never could have the same respect for her husband again. He, who had always been a model of all that was dignified and gentlemanly, a very pattern husband, to come home helplessly drunk from a tavern dinner! It was incredible; and yet the fact was beyond question. Surely there must be some mystery about the matter. Could he be ill? But no; he had never been in better health than when he left her a few hours previously, and to send for a doctor would only be to publish his disgrace. Could his wine have been drugged? But surely at a public dinner, at a first-rate place of entertainment, this was equally out of the question. There seemed no alternative but to suppose that, carried away by the excitement of the occasion, Mr. Jones had fallen into one of those sudden frailties to which poor human nature, even that of the noblest, is subject. At first, the weeping wife had felt as if the offense was beyond all pardon; but gradually a softer feeling came over her, and she felt that, though the wrong could never be forgotten, it might in time be possible to forgive it. And then she mentally rehearsed the painful scene which would take place between herself and her erring husband on his return to consciousness and self-respect; and she had just arranged a few little speeches, to be spoken more in sorrow than in anger, when suddenly a latch-key was heard in the door, and in walked Mr. Jones himself, calm and unruffled, without a hair out of place, or a crease on his snowy shirt-front. Mrs. Jones gazed at him a moment, scarcely believing her own eyes.

"Owen!—and sober!" she exclaimed; then flung herself into his arms, and went into a fit of decided hysterics.

"My darling wife, what on earth is the matter?"

"Oh, Owen, I am so thankful!" said the little wife, as soon as her sobs would let her speak. "I am so thankful! But, then, who is the man in our bed?"

"The man in our bed?" said Mr. Jones. "Whatever do you mean?"

"Oh, Owen, dear, you can't tell what I have gone through. A cab came half an hour ago, and brought you home from the dinner; at least the cabman said it was you, very tipsy and fast asleep, and he had your card; and so I told him to put you—I mean to say him—in our room, and there he is now."

"The devil he is!" said Mr. Jones. "I must have a look at this double of mine;" and, seizing a candle, he strode up-stairs. Presently he again entered the room.

"I think I see how the mistake happened," said he. "This fellow up-stairs was at the dinner to-night, and had had more than was good for him at an early period of the evening. He was rather rude to me; but it was no use to be angry with a man in such a condition; so I merely handed him my card, and told him when he returned to his senses he might come and apologize, though I can't say I had much expectation that he would. What became of him afterward I cannot say. I smoked a cigar with our friend Griffiths, and then walked leisurely home. Meanwhile, I suppose, this fellow was too drunk to answer for himself; and, finding my card about him, they assumed it was his own, and sent him here accordingly. The only thing that puzzles me is that you didn't find out the mistake."

"Well, dear, to tell you the truth, I was so shocked and horrified that you should be, as I supposed, in such a condition that I would not even see you, or let Mary do so either; so I sent her down stairs, and told the cabman to take the wretched man up to our room. But whatever shall we do now? The idea of a filthy, drunken wretch in our bed! It's too horrible."

"We mustn't be too hard upon him, dear. I could see at a glance that he was one of our poorer brethren; I dare say, a hard-working, sober man enough in a general way, but the temptation of a good dinner and unlimited liquor was too much for him. Besides, dear, we must consider the occasion. It is the immemorial privilege of every Welshman to get drunk, if he likes, on St. David's day. Some of us waive it, but that's not to the purpose. We must move into the spare room for to-night, that's all. You had better give Mary orders accordingly; and at the same time it will be as well to restore my blackened character by showing her that I am not quite so far gone as she imagines."

Mrs. Jones rang the bell.

"Oh, Owen," she said, kissing him fondly, and still wavering between smiles and tears, "it is such a relief, I can't tell you. I am so thankful it wasn't you."

Mary's face, when she opened the door, was a picture.

"Lor, ma'am! Lor, sir!" she said, looking from one to the other.

"It is all right, Mary," said her master. "You will be relieved to hear that the gentleman up-stairs is another Mr. Jones. There has been a little mistake, that's all; and your mistress and I are going to sleep in the spare room.

III.

Evan Jones woke on the morning following the eventful dinner hot and feverish, with a tremendous headache, and an agonizing feeling of thirst.

"O, my poor head!" he groaned. "Betsy, my gal," imagining his wife was beside him, "for mercy's sake get out, and give me a drink o' water, and there's a good soul."

There was no answer.

"I s'pose she's gone down stairs. O, lor, my head!" and he tried to settle himself to sleep again, but his parched throat was unbearable. "I must have a drink of water if I die for it," and he unwillingly opened his eyes and dragged himself into a sitting position. "Hallo!" he exclaimed, as his eyes fell on his unaccustomed surroundings. "Where the deuce have I got to, and how on earth did I come here? Why, it's like a fairy tale. I must be a nobleman in disguise, or one of them foundling hospital chaps come into a fortune. Jones, you old fool, you're dreaming. I ain't, though. Lor, what a soft bed! and lace curtains and marble table; and what a lot o' looking-glasses! 'Pon my word, I should like never to get up any more. I must have a glass of water, though. Ah! that's just heavenly. Now let me think a bit. How did I come here? Let's see, what was yesterday? Yes, it must have been yesterday that I went to the Welsh dinner. I remember going, but I don't remember going away; and, judging from my head this morning, I'm afraid I must have been uncommon screwed. And I haven't been home all night. My eyes, what'll Betsy say? I shall never hear the last of it to my dying day."

At this moment our hero's reflections were interrupted by a knock at the chamber door.

"Come in!" he shouted, incautiously; "at least, no; don't come in—I mean, what is it?"

The voice of Mary, the parlor-maid, replied:

"Master's compliments, and he says breakfast is ready for you, sir, whenever you can come down stairs."

"My respects to your master, and I'll be down directly, miss," answered Jones.

"Well, that's a comfort, anyhow," he soliloquized, "for 'pon my word, I didn't know whether I mightn't be given in custody for sleeping in other people's beds under false pretenses; or embezzling another gent's house, or something of that sort. How the deuce did I get here, that's what beats me!"

Still vainly trying to solve the enigma Evan made a hurried toilet, and finally, with his head still aching as if it would split, and looking a wreck of yesterday's greatness, he left the room and crept softly down stairs. The evidence of wealth and luxury on every side, so unlike his own humble belongings, quite awed him, and, having found his way down, he would not venture into any of the sitting-rooms, but modestly took his seat on a chair in the hall, and waited for the development of events. Here he was found after a few moments by Mr. Owen Jones, who wished him a friendly good-morning.

"I've seen you somewhere, I know, sir," said Evan; "but I can't for the life of me tell where."

"Can't you?" said his host, smiling. "We were both at the Welsh dinner last night, and one of us took a little too much."

A light suddenly flashed across Evan's mind.

"I remember now, sir. I'm afraid I was very rude to you."

"Well, you were a little plain-spoken, and I gave you my card, and told you if you wished to apologize you would know where to find me. I must say I didn't expect you would have come quite so soon, though. The fact is, you were brought here by the mistake of a cabman, who supposed my card was your own."

"I'm sure I humbly beg your pardon, sir," said poor Evan, completely crestfallen. "I can't think how I came so to disgrace myself; but to tell you the truth, sir, I'd had to pinch a bit to buy my ticket, and all day yesterday I hadn't tasted bit or sup since breakfast, and when it came to dinner-time I was that faint and weak that the very first glass seemed to set my head all swimming like. I'd let it go too long, sir; that's what it was. I humbly ask your pardon, I'm sure, for the trouble I've caused, and I thank you kindly for giving me a night's shelter. I feel I don't deserve your kindness, sir; but I'm grateful, I assure you."

And with tears in his eyes Evan moved humbly to the hall-door to depart.

"No, no," said Mr. Owen Jones; "you mustn't think of going without your breakfast. We are all Welsh here; and if a brother Welshman does take a glass too much on St. David's day, we know how to make allowances for him. Come, step in here. We have had breakfast an hour ago; but Mrs. Jones is waiting to give you yours."

Looking very shamefaced and repentant, Evan Jones followed his namesake into the breakfast parlor, where Mrs. Jones, who had heard his humble confession and apology, gave him a kindly greeting, and he was soon seated before a snowy table-cloth, and, as well as his headache would let him, enjoyed a plenteous repast. During the meal his entertainers quietly drew him out, and were speedily behind the scenes as to his daily life and his hard struggles to keep the wolf from the door; and when he finally took his leave a well-filled basket was waiting for him in the hall to take home as a present to the children. Nor was this by any means the last which found its way to the same quarter, sent by the same friendly hands; and I am sorry to say that of all days that held in the highest veneration by the little Joneses is "the day when papa got so dreadfully tipsy at the Welsh dinner."

* * * * * * *

I feel that there must be a moral to this story somewhere, but I can't quite see where it lies. You can't call it exactly a temperance story, because, you observe, Evan Jones got a good night's lodging and made a couple of kind friends by getting drunk—which is not poetical justice by any means. After much anxious consideration, the only safe moral I can see is that a married lady should never order any gentleman, however tipsy, to be put in her own bed without making quite sure, in the first place, that he is the gentleman who rightfully belongs to her.—London Society.

Agriculture in Roumania.

The war correspondents having exhausted the natural scenery, architectural and social features of Roumania, are now turning their attention to agriculture. One of them observes that the soil is obviously very fertile, and nearly every acre is under cultivation. The industry of the peasantry is intense; it is a pity that their plowing is not a little deeper. The villages are embowered in white blossoming fruit trees, and the folk make clean at least the outside of the platter by painting the exteriors of their houses a dazzling white or a pale, delicate blue. The fields, which are uninclosed, are of huge size, and one in a couple of dozen teams, oxen in the traces, ponies as leaders, may be seen plowing; in the next, a far-reaching line of sowers, moving forward abreast in open order. The more one sees of the Principalities the more clearly is it apparent that if their finances are in an unsatisfactory condition it is from no lack of natural wealth and fertility of production in the soil.

Beware of Benzine.

There has been a curious accident at Philadelphia. A Mr. Shoemaker, about to leave the city for the summer, got a watering-pot full of benzine with which to dampen the carpets and furniture and preserve them from moths. In less than an hour the gas generated by the benzine exploded with a fearful concussion and the room burst into flames. The servant-girl was fatally injured, her clothes being burned away and the body baked to a crisp, and Mrs. Shoemaker was very dangerously hurt. An examination of the parlor after the fire had been extinguished showed something of the force of the explosion and the intense heat of the flames. The window shutters were blown open, glass smashed into atoms, walls cracked and the register knocked to pieces. The heat was so great that a small bronze figure was actually melted by it.

About Grammar.

A writer who takes thought about his "grammar," and is in an anxious frame of mind as to whether his sentences will parse, may as well throw down his pen if he writes for other readers than himself. A man whose writing, even for its style, to say nothing of its matter, is worth the paper on which it is printed has other things upon his mind than the construction of his sentences according to the "rules of grammar;" and it is one of the objects of these articles to show this to my readers. He who can write what is worth the reading may make his own grammar.—Richard Grant White.

Tennyson to Hugo.

Alfred Tennyson's ode to Victor Hugo in the last number of the Nineteenth Century was sent to the New York Herald by cable. Here it is:

Victor in poesy! Victor in romance!
Cloud weaver of phantasmal hopes and fears!
French of the French and lord of human tears!
Child lover, bard, whose fame-lit laurels glance,
Darkening the wreaths of all that would advance
Beyond our strait their claim to be thy peers!
Wierd Titan, by thy wintry weight of years
As yet unbroken! Stormy voice of France,
Who does not love our England, so they say;
I know not! England, France, all men to be
Will make one people ere man's race be run;
And I, desiring that diviner day,
Yield thee full thanks for thy full courtesy
To younger England in the boy, my son.

Tichborne Redivivus.

The Tichborne claimant comes to the front again, and claims public attention through the attorneys representing his case. It is said that they are on the track of important proof to supply the missing link, being the log-book of the schooner Osprey, by which Orton claimed to have been picked up and rescued after his shipwreck. The Captain of the schooner is the object of much earnest inquiry in San Francisco, where he is understood to have been lately interviewed on the subject of the great English sensation.

President MacMahon.

Mr. Moncure D. Conway, in one of his recent letters from Paris to the Cincinnati Commercial, writes: "A peaceful surrender by MacMahon is out of the question. He is known to be egotistical to the verge of insanity, and fanatical to the verge of imbecility, while the only thing he fears is liberty, and the object of his hatred is an honest democrat. 'Our difficulties are not understood in England,' said Louis Blanc to me; 'our President is an idiot.'"

RAILROADS have done wonders in India. The garrison of Peshawar, 1,500 miles from Calcutta, can be relieved and strengthened with greater certainty and speed than places only a tenth of that distance thirty-nine or forty years ago, and British rule is considered more secure with 50,000 European troops and the railroad than with double that number before it was made.

A SUBSTITUTE for gunpowder, invented in England, is called "powder paper." It is paper impregnated with a mixture of potassic chlorate, nitrate, prussiate and chromate, powdered wood charcoal, and a little starch. It leaves no greasy residue on the gun, produces less smoke and less recoil, and is less impaired by humidity, and it is 5-16ths stronger than gunpowder.

THE will of the late Peter Brigham, of Boston, beside giving large legacies to the relatives of the deceased, devotes nearly three-fourths of the whole estate to a hospital in Boston for the sick and poor of Suffolk county. Twenty-five years will elapse before the bequest will be applied, which, beside other contingent property, will be equal to $3,000,000.

IT is told for a fact that a little flaxen-haired boy of 5-years, who had passed the afternoon at an art museum, looking up in his mother's face, said: "If the mammas, when they die, turn into mummies, do all the papas turn into puppies?"

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Homestead.

It is not as it used to be,
When you and I were young,
When round each [illegible] and maple tree
The honeysuckles clung;
But still I love the cottage where
I passed my early years,
Though not a single face is there
That memory endears.

It is not as it used to be;
The moss is on the roof,
And from their nest beneath the eaves
The swallows keep aloof.
The robins—how they used to sing,
When you and I were young;
And flashed about the wild bee's wing
The opening flowers among!

It is not as it used to be;
The voices heard of yore,
And forms that we were wont to see,
We see and hear no more.
No more! Alas! we look in vain
For those to whom we clung,
And loved as we can love but once,
When you and I were young.

Around the Farm.

"A FARM," says the Kentucky Live Stock Journal, "is the best material possession in the world."

A WRITER in the Massachusetts Ploughman says: "I have given ten years' trial to the cultivation of the raspberry. My experience is that the only way to get one's expenses back is to sell plants at $1 per dozen."

A HORTICULTURIST furnishes the following recipe to preserve all kinds of grain from the ravages of cut-worms, birds, etc.: One pound sulphate of iron, one ounce aloes. Dissolve in water heated to ninety or ninety-five degrees, and pour over one bushel of grain.—Ohio Farmer.

A DAIRYMAN remarked that before sitting down to milk a kicking heifer he put a "snap" attached to the end of a rope into her nose, and tied the rope to a pin put into the scaffold girt over the manger, slightly elevating her nose, and she stood as quietly while she was milked as the most gentle cow in the stable.—American Cultivator.

MANY young fruit trees, especially pears, are burned to death during the hot season. Even when the ground is kept wet and their roots are moist enough, young and newly-set trees upon which the bark is thin and tender are cooked by the sun as by a fire, and the branches and trunks die while the roots remain alive. This may often be prevented by winding the trunks with cloths, which shuts out the sun.—Mirror and Farmer.

I FILLED a half-hogshead with rain-water, and put into it one-quarter pound ammonia and one-quarter pound common niter. When the strawberry plants were blossoming out I gave them a sprinkling of the solution at evening twice a week until the fruit was nearly full size. The result was double the amount of fruit on those where the liquid was applied to what was obtained from those right alongside upon which none of the liquid was applied.—Fruit Record.

Rows of grape-vines should run north and south, so that every leaf may get the sunlight either in the forenoon or afternoon. This is more important in September than during the heat of summer. If the rows run east and west, the vines shade the entire ground and hence you lose a large part of the heat, and the moment the sun disappears there is no stored-up heat to carry the vines through the night. This in time of frost is of great importance.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

WE have learned to [illegible] gapes by making free use of camphor. We give the chickens [illegible] will be the size of a small garden pea. As soon as we see symptoms of gapes we give the birds water to drink which is strongly impregnated with camphor, thus giving to the chickens that which was a favorite medicine with our great-grandmothers, "camphor julep." The treatment seems to explain itself. The gapes or "gaping" is caused by the presence of small red worms in the windpipe. No medicine can reach them unless it does so by vapor. An hour after the chicken has swallowed the pill it smells of camphor. Camphor is a very strong vermifuge, and the worms die.—London Cottage Gardener.

J. M. HAYNES, of Lebanon, Ohio, finds a sweet-corn crop more profitable than a distillery. He raises over 500 acres of this crop annually. The drying-house employs over fifty persons. The fresh ears are steamed five minutes to "set the milk;" the grain is then cut off rapidly with cutters having concave faces; then spread on perforated zinc tables, and heat applied four or five hours from long furnaces, stirring constantly; then packed in barrels of three bushels each for shipment. Great care is required to have the corn just at the right age, and to have it dried just enough to keep well. Four bushels of fresh corn on the cob make one bushel dried—the wholesale price of which is $20 to $22 per barrel. At fifty bushels of corn per acre, 500 acres would yield 25,000 bushels, and give over 2,000 barrels of dried corn, which, at $20 per barrel, would be $40,000.—Nebraska Farmer.

About the House.

Lo, MONDAY is the "washing-day,"
As all good housewives know,
Remove all the dishes washed,
And clothes as white as snow;
And Tuesday is the "ironing-day,"
'Mid cold, or fog, or heat;
And Wednesday is the "sewing-day,"
To see the clothes are neat;
And Thursday is a leisure-day;
And Friday brooms begin
To sweep away the household dirt
'Fore Sunday's ushered in;
And Saturday is "baking-day,"
Pies, puddings, cakes and bread,
And then the weary week is done,
And we may go to bed.

WHEN boiling meat or poultry never put a fork in the lean part of the meat, as it allows the juices to escape.

A SURE CURE FOR CORNS.—Bathe in a strong solution of soda, pare off close and touch with carbolized iodine; repeat the application of iodine next day and a cure will speedily follow.

IT is stated that spirits of turpentine, sprinkled through the house once a week, is a sure preventive against scarlet fever and other diseases. It is also stated that it will keep moths out of carpets.

TO PURIFY cess-pools and sinks, dissolve a few pounds of copperas in a bucket of water, and pour into sinks or vaults of water-closets, and it will neutralize unpleasant odors and destroy deleterious exhalations.

TO KEEP AWAY MOTHS.—A small piece of paper or linen, moistened with spirits of turpentine, put into a bureau or wardrobe for a single day, two or three times, is said to be a sufficient preservative against moths.

A SMALL dish of charcoal placed in your meat larder will keep the articles sweet and wholesome almost as well as ice. Charcoal is a great disinfectant. Occasionally used for cleansing the teeth, it will sweeten the breath when nothing else will do so.

CANARIES.—To exterminate lice from canary birds use hollow canes for perches; shake out well mornings into a cup of water, and you will catch them all. Two parts canary, one rape, and one part hemp seed is the best food. The canes used are pipe-stems, ordinarily called tobacco stems.

CRACKED HANDS CURED.—None but a laboring man, who has suffered misery while using an ax, or pounding with other tools, can rightly appreciate this article. For years, when young, I suffered at some seasons untold bitterness, caused by dry cracks on hands and fingers. I tried every so-called remedy I could hear of, but in vain; and, being obliged then to labor each successive day for an honest livelihood, I was bound, as with an iron chain, to such sufferings as almost made life a burden. At last a friend told me to put common copal varnish into the cracks, and it would cure them. Although my faith was very weak, I tried the prescription, and, to my great joy, sure enough, in forty-eight hours my hands were as well as ever. It does not save from fresh cracks, but it never fails to entirely cure the old ones within two days. I kept a small bottle of the varnish, with a sliver standing in it—cost ten cents—always handy, and with its help my hands are nearly well. For knowledge of this simple remedy I would not part for many dollars. I have given it to many others for many years, and have never known of its failure to effectually cure in all such cases. I don't know that the subject can be considered agricultural (perhaps it is only cuticultural), but there are probably farm readers of your paper who will be glad to get the information.

A Wash for Fruit Trees.

The following is recommended by a commission of fruit-growers, presided over by Prof. Cyrus Thomas, State Entomologist of Illinois, and is part of a very full report, embodying advice as to the best means of fighting the insects that infest the orchards of the West.

Insects and mildews, injurious to the leaves of seedlings and root grafts, can be kept in subjection or destroyed by a free use of a combination of lime and sulphur. Take of quick or unslacked lime, four parts, and of common flour of sulphur, one part (four pounds of sulphur to one peck of lime); break up the lime in small bits, then mixing the sulphur with it in a tight vessel (iron is best), pour on them enough boiling water to slack the lime to a powder; cover in the vessel close as soon as the water is poured on; this makes also a most excellent whitewash for orchard trees, and is very useful as a preventive of blight on pear trees, to cover the wounds in the form of a paste when cutting diseased parts; also for coating the trees in April. It may be considered as the one specific for many noxious insects and mildew in the orchard and nursery; its materials should always be ready at hand; it should be used quite fresh, as it would in time become sulphate of lime and so lose its potency. Wherever dusting with lime is spoken of, this should be used. This preparation should be sprinkled over the young plant as soon as or before any trouble from aphides, thrips or mildew occurs, early in the morning while the dew is on the trees. This lime and sulphur combination is destructive to these pests in this way first, by giving off sulphuric acid gas, which is deadly poison to minute life, both animal and fungoid; and the lime destroys by contact the same things, besides its presence is noxious to them; neither is it injurious to common vegetable life, except in excess, unless the lime is applied to the foliage of evergreens.

A Tough Old Man.

People who attain extreme old age have usually a certain toughness of constitution which triumphs over injuries that weaker natures cannot survive. The autopsy of the late Capt. Lahrbush, whose age has been stated at 111 years and 25 days, furnishes new and remarkable evidence on this point. For sixty-one years he had been an opium eater; at the age of 90 his daily dose of gum or crude opium was estimated at ninety grains (troy); but the physician who attended him shortly before his death represents the old man's daily allowance as only half that quantity. Capt. Lahrbush had a full allowance of the ills that flesh is heir to, but seems to have been strangely unconscious of them. He had no symptoms of renal disease, and yet his right kidney was gone entirely, its place being occupied (and considerably more than occupied) by a tumor the size of a child's head, with a smaller tumor of similar kind attached. This fact does not seem to have been suspected before the diagnosis made during his last illness. The left kidney was contracted. There was a cyst in his liver. The heart was fatty. The walls of the aorta were nearly penetrated by several ulcerations. His ribs were as soft as cartilage, so that they could be easily cut with scissors. But trifles like these did not at all affect his general health. He was at last brought down with a congestion of the lungs, contracted by exposure in a storm. From that complaint he was slowly recovering, when an abscess formed in his thigh. Three operations were performed for the relief of the abscess, and thirty-two ounces of fluid were withdrawn; this proved too much of a drain upon his system, and he died of asthenia—i. e., general debility. As he was a soldier of the First Napoleon, he might have quoted that General's famous remark about the Peninsular war: "That ulcer in my extremities ate out my life."—New York Tribune.

IT is stated that a Southern man who, in the old times, spent princely sums periodically at New Orleans, is now a laborer on his own plantation at $60 a month.

"What Everybody Says Must be True."

The incontrovertible testimony offered by those who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription induced the doctor to sell it under a positive guarantee. Many ladies have refrained from using it on account of a general feeling of prejudice against advertised medicines. Let me ask a question. Are you prejudiced against sewing machines because you have seen them advertised? or can you doubt the ingenuity and skill required in their invention? Again, would you refuse to insure your house because the company advertised that it had paid millions in losses, and yet had a capital of several millions? Do such advertisements shake your confidence, and create prejudices? Then why refuse to credit the testimony of those who have found the Favorite Prescription to be all that is claimed for it in overcoming those ailments peculiar to your sex? Why submit to the use of harsh, and perhaps caustic treatment, thus aggravating your malady, when relief is guaranteed, and a positive, perfect, and permanent cure has been effected in thousands of cases?

WABASH STATION, Ill., Oct. 24, 1876.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Allow me to extend my most sincere thanks to you for the great benefit my wife has received from the use of your Favorite Prescription. She suffered almost intolerably before using your medicine, and I had tried the skill of several physicians, but to no purpose. Finally, I thought I would give the Favorite Prescription a trial, and she is now sound and well.

Very gratefully yours, D. A. HUNTER.

Disease is an Antagonist

That should be attacked the instant he shows himself. Don't wait. At him before his nails are grown, and wipe him out. The great alterative and invigorant of the age, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, will speedily infuse such healthful tone into your organism that it will be enabled to successfully resist future attacks. The Bitters prevent and remedy chills and fever and bilious remittents, and eradicate dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, rheumatic ailments, urinary and uterine difficulties. It is particularly beneficial when the system has been drained of its vitality, or is inherently deficient in strength. The nerves gather from it both vigor and tranquillity. But while it imparts strength and gives a wholesome stimulus to the animal economy, it does not unduly excite it like the cheap exhilarants sometimes resorted to under the erroneous impression that they can invigorate.

The History of Civilization

might be written in the gradual processes of improvement wrought out in articles of food. Every progressive step is a public blessing. To no one article is more due than to DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. This with proper care insures the most delicious and digestible bread, biscuits, pastry, etc.

WILHOFT'S TONIC is not a panacea—is not a cure for everything, but is a catholicon for malarious diseases, and day by day adds fresh laurels to its crown of glorious success. Enlarged Livers and Spleens, along the shady banks of our rivers and streams, are restored to their healthy and normal secretions. Health and vigor follow its use, and Chills have taken their departure from every household where Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic is kept and taken. Don't fail to try it. G. R. The superiority of these Extracts consists in their perfect purity and great strength. They are warranted free from the poisonous oils and acids which enter into the composition of many of the factitious fruit flavors now in the market. The attention of Advertisers is called to our List of Weekly Newspapers. Send for a Catalogue.

MARVELOUS CHEAPNESS.
An advertisement occupying the space of One Inch will be inserted one week in 1,100 newspapers for $87.50—or less than eight cents per newspaper.

CUTS AND ELECTROTYPES.
No extra charge for cuts, trade-marks, unusual display, or advertisements inserted across two or more columns: only twenty-six cuts are required for the whole number of newspapers. Cuts should not be over two and one-eighth inches in width.

AN INTERESTING STATEMENT.
To send an advertising order to 1,100 newspapers would require an investment of $34.50 for postage; stationery would cost nearly as much; the labor of addressing 1,100 envelopes is considerable; to write 1,100 orders would be a great task; to print them would cost something. Our price for a five-line advertisement in the whole 1,100 papers, one week, is $43.75, or less than the cost of postage and stationery.

NOTICES IN NEWS COLUMNS.
To have an advertisement set up in the form of reading matter, and inserted in the news columns of newspapers, is a very efficient mode of advertising. These lists of newspapers offer advantages in this respect which no other newspaper or lists of newspapers possess. Manufacturers and merchants desiring to publish a description of their wares or establishments will find this plan very serviceable. By publishing a series of brief notices, they can soon make the merits of their goods familiar to the people of the regions in which those papers are published.

BALDNESS.
CHICAGO, May 15, 1867.
Since the second use of your "Cocoaine," my previously bald head has been covered by a luxuriant growth of hair. I had always esteemed your preparation as a dressing, knowing many persons who regarded it very highly as such, but never before knew how valuable it was as a restorative. J. H. LEWIS.

LOSS OF HAIR.
BANGOR, March 3, 1868.
Your "Cocoaine" is the only dressing for the hair used in my family for the last eight years. It not only stopped my wife's hair from coming out, but increased its growth. I am also under obligations to this same "Cocoaine" for saving my own hair, which was very fast coming out previous to using this valuable preparation. J. C. MITCHELL.

IRRITATION OF THE SCALP.
WATERVILLE, Me., Sept. 15.
I purchased a bottle only, for the purpose of a hair dressing; but, to my surprise, it has entirely removed the irritation of so long standing. I have recommended it to several of my friends, who were afflicted in the same way, and it has wholly irradicated the disease. JOSEPH HILL, JR.

HAIR-DRESSING.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. A Few Words of Wisdom.

For all who are seeking new homes in the West. If you are going to change your location, by all means you should keep on about the same latitude as where you formerly lived for in this way you will escape the severe climatic changes in the weather incident to the extreme North or South, having none of these things to contend with, your self and family are healthy and you become a producer at once, consequently soon independent; on the other hand should you listen to the many glowing accounts of the sunny South, or the mild climate of the North, and thus be induced to try your fortunes there, you will find the reality is not all your fancy painted it. If you go South it usually takes about two years to get accli nated to the climate, during which time, not being able to work, yourself and family are consumers, besides being constantly exposed to the malarial fevers which abound there, and the experience of many is that they return discouraged, leaving not a few loved ones beneath the sod in the sunny South. Therefore, in going West keep on about the same latitude which will insure health and happiness. There are most excellent lands in Northern Missouri on the line of the Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. and in Kansass, Nebraska and Colorado, "just as cheap and good as the sun ever shown upon," why not accept a certainty rather than run the risk of losing all? Through day and sleeping cars are run from Toledo, Ohio, via the Wabash R'y and Quincy to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas city, and from Chicago via Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., whereby all arre furnished firstclass accomodations.

TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

At a reception given Gov. Hendricks in New York, June 12th, Mr. Tilden said:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN:—

Everybody knows that after the recent election, men who were elected by the people President and Vice President of the United States were counted out, and men who were not elected were counted in and seated. I disclaim any thought of personal wrong in noting this transaction. Not by any act or word of mine shall that be dwarfed or degraded into a personal grievance, which is in truth the greatest wrong that has stained our national annals. To every man of the four and a quarter millions who were defrauded of the fruits of their elective franchise, it is as great a wrong as it is to me, and no less to every man of the minority will the ultimate consequence extend. Evils in government grow by success and by impunity. They do not arrest their own progress. They can never be limited by external force. If men in possession of the government can in one instance maintain themselves in power against an adverse decision at elections, such an example will be imitated. Dissatisfaction exists always. Device to give color of law and false pretenses on which to found fraudulent decisions will not be wanting. The wrong will grow into practice if once condoned. In the world's history, changes in succession of governments have usually been the result of fraud or force. It has been our faith and our pride that we had established a mode of peaceful change to be worked out by the agency of the ballot box.

THE QUESTION OF QUESTIONS.

The question now is, whether our elective system, in its substance as well as its form, is to be maintained. This is the question of questions. Until it is finally settled, there can be no politics founded on inferior questions of administrative policy. It involves the fundamental right of the people. It involves the elective principle. It involves the whole system of popular government.

The people must signally condemn the great wrong which has been done to them. They must stripe the example of everything that can attract imitators. They must refuse a prosperous immunity to crime. This is not all. The people will not be able to trust authors or beneficiaries of wrong to devise remedies, but when those who condemn the worng shall have the power they must devise measures which shall render a repetition of the wrong forever impossible. If my voice could reach throughout our country, and be heard in its remotest hamlet, I would say, be of good cheer. The Republic will live. The institutions of our fathers are not to expire in shame. The soverighty of the poeple shall be rescued from this peril and re-established. Successful wrong never appears so triumphant as on the very eve of its fall. Seven years ago, a corrupt dynasty culminated in its power over the millions of people who live in the city of New York. It had conquored or bribed or flattered and won almost everybody into acquiescence. It appeared to be invincible. A year or two later its members were in penitentiaries or in exile. History abonds in similar examples. We must believe in the right and in the future. A great and noble nation will not server its political from its moral life.

Mr. Tilden was shaken hands with by several persons after he conclued and by none with more devotion than his nephew Pelton. He took a place beside the platform, rather back in the crowd, and being small of stature was lost there except when by some gap in the front line his more pallid face and still pugnacious under-lip was revealed in attractive reflection.

The following was Mr. Hendricks' speech:

SPEECH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT ELECT.

GENTLEMEN—I thank you for the honor you do me. I appreciate it in part as an expession of personal rspect and confidence, but more as a declaration and assurance of your support of the principles and policies which, in honorable associations with your distinguished citizen, I was made a represetative in the political contest of last year. I beg to assure you that I appreciate the honor you show me, more highly because of your devotion to the political principle which experience has shown to be essential to the preservation of good and pure government and the prosperity of the people. Very earnestly the Democrats of this great city and State of Indiana, as also of other States contended for and demanded the restoration of local self government in all the States where it had been denied. They insisted upon a reduction throughout the entire public service in expenditures, not by hundreds, nor yet by [illegible] millions [illegible]. Therein was involved also a great reduction of the vast army of office holders, and the substitution of an honest for a dishonest administration. Contending for results so [illegible] right and honorable, their cause was great and their victory glorious, and I will not disturb the pleasure of this occasion by undertaking to recount the means whereby the will and judgement of the people were defeated. The result as declared in Florida and at Washington is not and cannot be made satisfactory to the country for the obvious reason that it was not true. A great and sincere people will rest with their final judgement only upon truth, and never upon fraud, though successfully through technicality.

Even should the President and his Cabinet adopt a part or a whole of the policies and purposes for which the Democratic barty has been contending for many years, and which became so distinctly defined last year, even that cannot remove our quiet discontent. The Democrats will make no factious opposition, nor will they seek to embarrass the de facto administration, but will sustain it in what is right because it is right and for the welfare of the country, and not at all because of any fealty to the party that stands defeated and condemned by the people. The people cannot allow the selection of their Chief Magistrate to become a thing of chance or sharp practice. The first fraud triumphant in American history must be assigned its proper place among the crimes against popular government, and made so odious that no party will dare to attempt its repetition. He who is elected President must be inaugurated. Until that is settled and made sure, no Democrat can be seduced from his devotion and allegiance in any way not by allurements of office nor even by a strong appeal in abandonment by the administration of vicious principles and dangerous policies, and the adoption of better doctrines and just measures. Democrats will not intrust their most cherished principles to the keeping of power which is attained by vicious and corrupt means. They will the rather continue their faith in the right of the majority to rule, in accordance with Constitutional provisions.

All the Democrats rejoice with unbounded joy that free Republican Governments are once more allowed to the States of South Carolina and Louisiana. They rejoice in the good fruits that must follow. They know peace and good order will prevail; that capital will be made secure and labor safe, contented and happy; that enterprise will revive, and cruel burdens of the government and public corruption will be lifted from the shoulders of labor, and that productions will increase and lands advace in price, but they know that in the language of Gov. Morton, "It had become inevitable." Good government in the States was not a free will offering upon the alters of the country. For years Democrats had contended in Congress and before the people for free Republican States throughout the South, and finally it became inevitable, because the right and truth were too strong to be longer surpressed. In this Democrats find reason to stand more firmly with their party out of power, with no patronage to dispense and no money to distribute, but animated by the spirit of our institutions, and inspired by the sentiment of the right of local self-government which is inherent in the people. The Democratic party during the past ten years has restored one State after another, until now, the tread of the soldier is head in no legislative hall, but in every State the people are governed by the laws of their own enacting, and by officers of their own choosing. (Applause.)

My fellow citizens, my home is in the west, and my associations have been with the people of that section. Among you personally I am almost a stranger, but I am received by you with open arms and cordial greetings. I need not say to you that I am gratified because of this fact; it has more than a personal significance. (cheers). Does it not declare that we have no sectional political sentiments and that we will have no sectional policies. Some may say that we ought to have and must have an eastern policy, while others will say that we must have a western policy, but it seems to me that a New Yorker or Indianian should understand better than that, and that our legislative and administrative policy shall be as broad and comprehensive as the industries, the trade and the commerce they are to influence. (Cheers.) Does not the trade of the great cities of the Atlantic extend beyond the mountains? Does it not pass the Mississippi and go across the Missouri wherever a new home is built upon the receeding border, wherever a new farm is made far out even into the shadows of the Rocky mountains. Whenever an additional Sale of cotton is produced in Louisiana and in Texas it adds something to the wealth and greatness of the city. Is there a New Yorker, who, as he walks up and down this great Broadway, hears and feels only the throbbing of a local commerce. Let such a man break loose from the narrow habits of his life. Let him go out in the great cotton growing and grain growing regions of the country, nor let him stop until he shall hear the waves of the pacific dashing against the golden shores of California, and he will go back better prepared to judge of the magnitude, and involved interests that are to be affected by the policy, commercial and financial, of the country. Successful enterprise and development in remote parts of the country are as certainly and most as directly connected with the properity of this city as are the permanent and valuable improvements made upon your distant streets. I have said this under the influence of the sentiment that in respect to production and trade and commerce the East, West and South are one; and I recognize no man as a Democrat who believes that there is hostility of interests between any of the sections of our great country. (Cheers.) A wise and just policy will alike and almost equally promote the prosperity of each section. Your judgement, men of New York City, should be as broad and comprehensive as the influence of your commerce, and as far reaching as the distant lines of your trade.

THE LATE ELECTION FRAUD.

I have but one word more to say. The outrage lately committed upon the rights of the people, not upon me and Governor Tilden, except that we are citizens of the country, the outrage upon the people in the act that denies to the people their own selection of their public officers according to the laws and the Constitution. That wrong will work, as has been suggested, its own reform. I have no fear of the future, even if the administration that is now in power shall take Democratic principles and undertake to build prosperity upon them, it can never gain the confidence and heart of the American people. (Applause.) It will never do to say that when one man has taken land that belongs to another by a title that is not good and holds it, that it is sufficient to say that that man who holds the land wrongfully will cultivate it better than the true owner would have done. (Applause.) Before we reach that question we must settle the question who owns the land. (Applause.) It is not because Governor Tilden has been wronged, but because the voice of the American people has been denied when that voice was spoken according to the constitution of the United States, and I fear not the result.

As I have already said, a great and sincere people will base their judgement and final action upon the truth. Democratic principles will be carried out into the forced government by Democrats and by fair-minded Republicans as will not make themselves a party to the wrong that was done last winter. This will be corrected in 1880 by a majority in the different States that will suprise all parties. I think I may say for 1880 as I said in 1876 that Indiana will again do her duty.

The speech of Mr. Hendricks was followed by great applause and three cheers.

WHILE THE ROBIN SINGS.

BY ELIZABETH AKERS ALLEN.

The red-breast warbles in the leafless branches,
The first shy sparrow tries his tender trills,
And May, her girdle full of pallid blossoms,
Trails slow her faint-green robes across the hills.

And we rejoice; not with light words and laughter;
We watch the soft relenting of the sky,
But with a touch of vague, unspoken heart-ache,
We say "the spring has come"—and smile—and sigh.

Yet we are glad. How is it that our gladness
Is thus sedate, and calm, and well controlled?
Is it that joy no longer craves expression,
Or can it be that we are growing old?

Have we so changed? Are sense and spirit duller
Than when our happy hearts made louder mirth?
Has it grown less, our fond and quick perception
Of all the lovely moods of sky and earth?

Once we exulted in the morning's crimson,
The evening's purple, and the sunset's gold;
And every gleam and cloud brought added rapture—
Ere we had thought or dreamed of growing old.

Yet still our grateful hearts leap up responsive
To the brave blue-bird, laughing at the cold;
Our eyes note every tint of sky and ocean—
It cannot be that we are growing old.

So—while our nearness to the great All-mother
Preserves us humble, pure and tender-souled,
She gives us of her deathless youth and freshness,
And those who love her never can grow old.

The years may check or still our lighter laughter,
And hush our hearts with chidings manifold,
And spring may come and go, and find and leave us
Sobered, perhaps, but surely not grown old!
—Scribner for June.

BIANCA.

"Well, Bianca, darling, I'm glad this cousin of yours is coming to Oakwold."

"Why, Anthony!"

"Because you need society, and that of Eastbury is rather too orthodox and primitive for your tastes. As for my own, my medical labors have become no longer a sinecure since old Doctor Parton's death, and you see very little of me during the daytime, just at present."

"Indeed, that is true, Anthony;" and beautiful Bianca Stanley clasped those graceful arms of hers very lovingly about her young husband's neck. "I miss you more than words can tell, sometimes. You remember what pleasant mornings we used to spend during May—the first month after our arrival at Oakwold? You read me those charming 'Idyls of the King,' and it was all so delicious; and now"—

"Now I am a man of leisure no longer," Anthony Stanley interrupted, "but one of the busiest doctors in all the county, perhaps. But, Bianca, I want to ask you a few questions about this cousin. Do you exactly relish the idea of her coming here to pay for her board? I confess, candidly, that I do not."

Bianca laughed merrily.

"Perhaps I ought to feel very much ashamed of our limited circumstances, Anthony; that's the way to express yourself elegantly, I believe, when you want to say that you are not well off; but, somehow, I would just as lief the whole world knew exactly how we are situated. Of course, Ellinor understands all about it. Not having seen me since her return from France, she is anxious to spend a few weeks here at Oakwold Cottage, and I am immensely anxious to have her. Accordingly, she proposes doing so, instead of accompanying her mother and sisters to Scarborough. She is not willing to make a third member of our family, you know, without"—

"Yes, yes, I understand. Well, Bianca, you may take her payments for pin-money, if you choose. And now tell me something about your cousin. What is she like?"

"Like a very lovely woman, Anthony."

"Handsome?"

"Very."

"Clever?"

"As a schoolmistress. You will be delighted with her conversation, I know. She has a faculty, people say, of making all other women appear stupid and trivial by contrast."

"Nonsense, Bianca. That simile of the schoolmistress was very poorly chosen, if you want to prepossess me with your cousin. I abhor schoolmistresses. Just hand me that bottle directly behind your elbow, that's a dear."

Mrs. Stanley turned toward the row of bottles placed upon a shelf in her husband's surgery, in front of the desk at which he was then seated.

"Which, Anthony? This one, containing white liquid?"

"Gracious, no! That's a horribly poisonous compound. Imagine poor Mrs. Marlowe's feelings if I took over to her sick baby a vial of that deadly stuff. The one to the right of it, if you please. Thanks, my dear. And now, one more question. When is Miss Ellinor Erskine going to make her appearance at the cottage?"

"To-morrow morning, she writes me. And we may expect her, for Ellinor is infallible about keeping promises."

The next morning Miss Erskine justified her cousin's remark by arriving at Oakwold. The greeting which she received from Bianca Stanley was warm and affectionate. The two ladies had been intimate friends for almost as long as each could remember, and the love which existed between them was, on Bianca's side, at least, of the sincerest nature. Physically, they formed a striking contrast, Mrs. Stanley's delicate pink-and-white complexion, pale-gold hair, and petite figure being widely different from her cousin's statuesque, stately beauty.

It was beauty of a superb type, most people were fain enthusiastically to admit on seeing Ellinor Erskine for the first time. Unusually tall, but of such perfect grace in her every posture and gesture that tallness was a charm, not a defect; possessing a skin of the purest whiteness, hair of that glossy blue-black hue which is so rarely seen, and eyes of a deep, lustrous hazel; showing, in her manner and conversation, all that the most cultivated and fastidious taste could desire, Miss Erskine was what we may term a fascinating woman in every respect.

The first evening following her arrival at Oakwold, she accompanied her host and hostess on a twilight walk along the exquisite wooded shore near which the cottage was situated—a line of rugged, picturesque land, where rocks, and bowlders, and fringy cedars made quite a battle for predominance, yet mingled their wild elements in one wilder sort of harmony beautiful beyond expression.

"We must show Ellinor the arm-chair, Anthony," Mrs. Stanley remarked, as the party stood on a low cliff overhanging the waters beneath, bathed just then in the soft purple of sunset. "It's only about a yard from where we now are."

"The arm-chair!" Miss Erskine said, in surprised tones. "What can you possibly mean, Bianca?"

"A perfect arm-chair," was the reply, "carved out of rock by that slow old sculptor yonder, the sea. Anthony and I discovered it about a month ago."

They reached the spot presently, and found the curiosity Bianca had mentioned—a mass of rock, so worn by the immemorial action of the waves below it as to bear an exact resemblance, legs omitted, to an exceedingly comfortable, commodious arm-chair.

"How delightful!" exclaimed Miss Erskine, seating herself in this piece of natural furniture. "I suppose you come here often, Bianca—you and that loving husband of yours?" with a glance of the young lady's hazel eyes in Doctor Stanley's direction. "There's ample room for two, by the way, isn't there?"

"Oh, yes," Bianca answered. "We do sit there now and then. Anthony read me Tennyson's 'Idyls' in this spot about a month ago."

Mrs. Stanley's remark served to turn the conversation, during their homeward walk, upon literary subjects; and, if her husband had not concluded that Miss Erskine's intellect was fully equal to her beauty, certain clever words which now fell from the lips of Bianca's cousin must have assured him that such was the fact.

"I like her immensely," he said to his wife later that evening, when their guest had retired. "She is certainly a very brilliant woman."

"I'm so glad you think so," was the pleased response. "Ellinor is going to make your summer, as well as mine, Anthony, very delightful, I am sure."

Before many days had passed, Bianca Stanley had cause to recollect her prophecy with regard to Ellinor Erskine. There seemed decided probability of her making Anthony's summer far more pleasant than his wife had anticipated. Liking her cousin, Bianca began to tell herself, with an occasional pang of something very similar to jealousy, was a different matter from appearing almost fascinated by that cousin's society.

"Of course, the young wife mentally confessed, "I am just the least bit jealous. Why should I not feel so? It's perfectly natural. Anthony and I have been leading such a mutually devoted sort of existence ever since our marriage that it annoys me to see him treat another woman politely. Beyond a doubt, he only means to be polite, nothing more. I am very foolish, but I suppose the folly is common to most newly-married wives."

At the end of another fortnight, however, Bianca's slight annoyance had assumed a far different form. It had grown to be a terror. She believed that he was in love with Ellinor Erskine.

Resolutely proud, she suffered her agony—for agony it was, of the keenest sort—to betray itself by no word or sign. If her treatment of Ellinor Erskine showed faint traces of coldness she could not refrain from exhibiting now and then, it was of so slight a nature as not to be observed by her husband.

Several weeks wore away. Bianca's life had become a torture now. She seldom joined in the conversation between Anthony and her cousin; she seldom intruded upon their frequent tete-a-tetes. Some women would have shown their anguish in bitter upbraidings and passionate accusations; Bianca held her peace, and was wofully miserable. She loved her husband with an intense depth of love, and was called upon daily to observe his reckless admiration of another woman. It was torment, and yet she spoke no word.

* * * * * * *

"Yes, I am forced to go," Dr. Stanley said. "I had hoped to spend this lovely afternoon in your society, but—a doctor proposes, a patient disposes, if you'll pardon my mutilation of an old proverb."

"I am very sorry," Ellinor Erskine murmured; and those bewitching hazel eyes—how utterly had they bewitched the man who now stood beside her—looked even more than the sorrow she professed to feel. "We were going to take a long walk together this afternoon, were we not?"

"Yes. Don't speak about it in that tone, please, or you'll make me do very desperate things in the way of professional neglect."

"Ah, I have no such power over you, I fear," accompanying the words with a long, soft sigh.

Dr. Stanley laughed an odd, harsh sort of laugh.

"I have told you what power you possess, Ellinor; I have told you of the absorbing love that——"

"Hush, Anthony, you are speaking too loudly. We might be overheard!"

And Ellinor Erskine glanced toward one of the windows opening out from the veranda in which they stood. There was a faint rustle of one of the curtains at that window just then, which Miss Erskine, if she noticed it, mistook for a motion caused by the light, September breeze.

Dr. Stanley's tones had changed decidedly when he again spoke: "Thomas is at the gate yonder with my carriage. Perhaps I shall be able to return sooner than I expect to do; but now I have no choice in the matter of remaining. We can take our walk at twilight, if I should return in time. That rocky arm-chair will be a very pleasant spot for such a lovely evening as we are promised. Good-by!"

"Good-by!" she answered, smiling; and then their hands met.

Just at this moment, in the little surgery at the rear of the cottage, there stood a white-faced, wild-eyed woman, searching for something among the array of bottles on a certain shelf. That which she came to seek was found presently, and she clutched it with a fierce, eager grasp, hurrying, a moment later, from the apartment.

* * * * * * *

"What a lovely evening! Your prophecy was a correct one, Doctor."

"Yes," Anthony Stanley responded, as he and Miss Erskine strolled shoreward with slow, lingering steps. "Just watch the waters. They are a perfect blaze of silver and crimson from here. Have you thought over all that I said, Ellinor, last evening? Are you prepared to give me an answer—about our flight, I mean?"

He was looking fixedly at her face; but she avoided the glance.

There are some women who love to stand upon the verge of moral precipices, enjoying the danger, but feeling secure enough, during its continuance, in their own powers of equipoise. Ellinor Erskine was such a woman. She had gone to the utmost limits of a precipice now, and had looked down upon the perilous depths beneath her, and had enjoyed the excitement of her dizzy position, and had maintained her coolheadedness throughout. It was time to draw back. To have taken the leap, as this man at her side had been urging her to take, would have been an act of folly altogether ridiculous.

"I must disenchant the infatuated creature," she murmured to herself, "before we return to Oakwold." Then aloud, "I will give you my answer when we reach the arm-chair, Doctor Stanley."

They reached it soon afterward. Its high back, carved from the living stone, rose up clear and distinct against the evening sky.

"Heaven help me, Ellinor, if that answer is not what I hope for!" he whispered. "Be the passion sinful or righteous, I have learned to love you. My God! Bianca!"

He stood frozen with horror now, gazing within the recess of the rocky chair. Her face wearing the unmistakable stamp of death, her golden tresses floating upon the soft breeze, one livid hand clenching a small vial-shaped bottle, the other pressed convulsively against her bosom, Bianca Stanley sat within the granite arm-chair, upright, ghastly, immovable.

She had told the secret of her agony at last, and had told it in a voice of such terrible power and meaning that they who looked upon the awful rebuke of her lifeless beauty must expiate their sin with lifelong repentance!

Catching a Bear with a Lariat.

Mr. John Wilson, who lives on the Colorado river, near Beasley's, San Saba county, killed last week a very large brown bear. He was cow-hunting, and had a revolver with three barrels loaded when he came in sight of bruin. He gave chase immediately, and with three balls wounded him slightly. Having no more ammunition, he had recourse to his lariat. Many times did the bear detach the rope from his neck before it tightened around it, when finally Wilson checked the horse the instant the noose was passing over the bear's head. A quick jerk with the hand, a hard pull from the saddle pommel, as the trained cow horse fell back on his haunches, and the fierce beast was secured. Then commenced a series of plunges, snarls, angry growls, and frantic efforts to sever the lasso; but with each struggle the rope became tighter about his throat. Finally the air passages were closed, and the bear was, as the horse breaker styles it, choked down. Wilson sprang from the horse and fastened the rope to a tree, then caught the bear by the hind feet and kept him stretched until he quit struggling. Then with a small but sharp-pointed pocket-knife he severed his jugular vein. The bear weighed 400 pounds when dressed.—Galveston (Texas) News.

Russians With English Faces.

The Russian soldiers seem to be imitating something besides the tactics of the Teutonic army. They are well-behaved in camp and on the streets; they pay for what they get; they are not intemperate. "They walk along the streets," says a correspondent of the Standard, "do their business, and take their pleasure with a simple, frank unconsciousness that reminds one of no service in Europe saving the English." They not only act like British soldiers, but they even look like them. In figure, face, and expression, the correspondent adds, the Muscovite officer resembles his British contemporary more closely than he does the German. The affected stiffness of the latter is wanting, while that frivolity which used to be conspicuous has disappeared. They live merrily, as why should they not, whose business 'tis to die, but they are prudent and decorous withal. Such flowing of champagne was never beheld in Bucharest, but it flows with a pleasant ripple. The young fellows mind their own business, crack their jokes modestly among themselves, stare, not offensively, at ladies, and treat the civil population with a perfect courtesy. The physical resemblance to Englishmen can be traced even in the ranks.

Gen. Grant's European Tour.

In response to a letter of Elihu B. Washburne to ex-President Grant, inquiring whether he will visit Paris on leaving England, the latter replies that it will at present be impossible to do so, but that he may do so in September. His present intention is to make an extended European tour, embracing Sweden and Norway, and then, sailing down the Rhine, visit Switzerland, his programme of route possibly including the usual Italian cities visited by tourists.—Cable Dispatch.

A Mathematical Prodigy.

An Austrian boy, 13 years old, named Solomon Stone, attending school in New York, proves to be a mathematical prodigy. He solves the most difficult problems in mental arithmetic with an ease seldom, if ever, attained by old professional accountants. He adds six columns of figures at once, does fractions and calculates interest and square root with the same readiness—all mentally and much quicker than an expert mathematician with paper and pencil.

High Bluffs.

"They say the bluffs are mighty high on the south side of the Danube," remarked one of a party who were about to drink at a saloon counter this morning. A thirsty check-guerrilla seized the opportunity to ring in: "High bluffs, eh? Why, they ain't nothin' to what I see the other night. Why, I see Jim Orndorff plank up $250 on king high, and get away with the pot. Whatcha think o' that for a bluff?"—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

A VERY singular feature in the marine landscapes between Terre del Fuego and the contiguous mainland is the floating gardens of sea-weed. The plant frequently grows to a length of between 300 and 400 feet. It gives cover and pasturage to every species of crustacea, great and small, while the intertangled mass, swaying like a ponderous curtain in the water, effectually breaks the shock of the most tremendous rollers.

TO-DAY Berlin is covered with the wrecks of speculative credulity. Many of the millionaires of a few years ago are in a state verging on absolute poverty. Over-production and over-speculation have caused the crisis.

A GROVE of the great trees of the Yosemite has just been explored. It is of an altitude similar to that of the other groves, 6,000 feet. Instead, however, of being only a cluster of forty trees, it is a six-mile-square collection of 10,000. There are trees in it estimated to be from 100 to 4,000 years old.

A COMPARISON of the dairy interest with the cotton crop shows some peculiar results rather adverse to cotton's kingship. The 10,000,000 milch cows in this country are worth $450,000,000, and the amount realized from their production foots up to $275,142,585, while the last cotton crop was worth only $200,000,000.

QUEEN VICTORIA has completed her 58th year; only twelve other of the thirty-eight reigning sovereigns of Christendom have attained to this age. The oldest of all is the Pope, who is 85, Emperor William is 80, the Czar is 59, Victor Emanuel is 57, Emperor Francis Joseph is nearly 47. The youngest of the sovereigns is Alphonso of Spain.

HERE is a remark from the La Crosse Sun which will be appreciated by consumers of breadstuffs: "There is something peculiar about flour. When wheat goes up 10 cents a bushel, flour finds it out by telegraph, but when wheat goes down, flour gets the news from the east by canal, and a mighty slow canal at that. The city should appoint some one to notify flour when wheat goes down."

PETRIFIED sea turtles and cocoanuts have been found in earth mounds in Southern Colorado. These mounds form a vast range, and are fifteen miles from the foot of the Rocky mountains. One is four miles in circumference at the base, and has a thrifty growth of trees. Petrified and agatized wood is beneath the surface. The mounds are thought to have ages ago been islands of the sea.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S sealing voyage this year has been uncommonly prosperous. Vessels of the fleet have already returned with full cargoes, the cargo of one of them being 27,000 furs. Her voyage lasted only fifteen days. All of the vessels were propelled by steam, steamers having been found more profitable than sailing vessels. Only half as many men as were formerly employed are now needed on the fleet.

A Turkish Carriage.

A talega has wooden seats, with a wooden roof, open at the sides, and springs there are none. It is an instrument of torture, devised to shake out the teeth and batter in the skull, and, before we had jogged many miles along the road, there were so many bumps on the top of my head that a phrenologist would have sworn that I was a lunatic. And so I was, for trusting myself to such a horrible contrivance for making man uncomfortable and sore, when I had two strong legs able and willing to carry me. But forewarned, forearmed—never again has mortal man been able to lure me into a like agitating machine.—Col. Baker.

The King Comes!

"Yes, and we've got a new baby; he's orful tired, walked all the way from heaven last night; don't want any row kicked up round here now."—Crawford (O.) Forum.

Alligators as a Regular Diet.

"Canker in the Bud."

You watch its development with expectant solicitude—the choice, exquisitely-molded bud, which promises to unfold with the perfect flower. You perhaps think how it will adorn the drawing-room vase, and anticipate the pleasure of showing it to your flower-loving friends. But some morning you find its head drooping, its fragrance fled, and an ugly purple spot on one of the delicately-tinted petals. It is the poet's "canker in the bud." How often the loathsome canker blights the cherished "infant blossoms" in our household gardens—those human buds which give earnest of a brilliant future. The noisome canker, so long concealed—scrofula—at length reveals its dreaded presence and to our bright hopes succeeds the most agonizing fear, for we know the fatal sequel it portends—pulmonary consumption. It is estimated by eminent medical authorities that at least one-fifth of mankind are afflicted with this insidious malady. But its ravages are so secret that even its victims are unaware of its presence until it suddenly discloses itself in some of its myriad and ofttimes fatal forms. A slight cutaneous eruption is often the only indicator of its presence. The only means of exterminating this disease from the system is by a thorough course of constitutional treatment. This treatment must fulfil three indications, namely, promote nutrition, alter or purify the blood, and arrest disorganization of the tissues and the formation of tubercles. No more efficient alterative can be employed for these purposes than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. While imparting strength and tone to the digestive organs it cleanses the blood and heals the diseased tissues. Test its virtues ere the deadly canker has blighted the life you prize.

A Medicine of Many Uses.

A medicine which remedies dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, debility, intermittent and remittent fevers, urinary and uterine troubles, depurates the blood, counteracts a tendency to rheumatism and gout, and relieves nervousness, may be truly said to have many uses. Such an article is Hostetter's Bitters, one of the most reliable alteratives of a disorderly to a well-ordered state of the system ever prepared or sold. It has been over a quarter of a century before the public, is indorsed by many eminent professors of the healing art, and its merits have received repeated recognitions in the columns of leading American and foreign journals. It is highly esteemed in every part of this country, and is extensively used in South America, Mexico, the British possessions and the West Indies. If its increase in public favor in the past is to be regarded as a reliable criterion of its gain in popularity in coming years, it has indeed a splendid future before it.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

To a Northern farmer it is a great [illegible] land to buy [illegible] will maintain clover. With that only labor and skill are needed to insure profitable farming.—[illegible] Gazette.

Ashes.—Do not allow ashes of any kind to be wasted. It will pay to haul leached ashes several miles, when one has his own team and a laborer at fair wages. Coal ashes when spread around berry bushes of any sort, or around grape vines, will aid materially in producing large and fair fruit.—Gardener's Monthly.

A correspondent of the Pacific Rural Press says: "The only effectual remedy for wire-worm I know of is a thorough cultivation of the soil. Those that are troubled with them will find by examining their soil that it is cold, and by stirring it thoroughly it will get warmer. By so doing they will kill the wire-worm, as it cannot live in warm ground."

Reject the Scrubs.—In stock-breeding retire from service forthwith, every scrub male, whether of the cattle, horse, sheep, pig or poultry family, and use none but good stock animals, as it costs about as much to raise a scrub of any kind as it does a cross-bred or thoroughbred. Therefore if a farmer would utilize his feed so as to get the most money therefrom, he should breed none but good-blooded animals.—Rural Home.

Prevention of Swarming.—A correspondent of the Bee Keepers Magazine, in relation to the swarming of bees, says: "After I have had all the increase I desire, when a hive shows an inclination to swarm I move it to the place of some weaker hive. In that way I make all my colonies strong, and when I have accomplished that object but still have a hive that threatens to swarm I change places with another, that may also show signs of swarming. The change of workers destroys the propensity of swarming for the time being, and by giving them plenty of box room they will store honey, and if they are again inclined to swarm, you may move back again and it will have the effect."

Keeping Down the Weeds.—The London Garden remarks: "The only remedy for weeds is prompt destruction in a young state. Weeds are easily eradicated if never allowed to advance beyond the seed-leaf. Once let their roots run deep and wide, and their tops rise high, and then the weeds are masters in the garden. It provokes one to see the complacency with which some cultivators allow weeds to establish themselves in flower beds or borders, or on roads or walks, and their subsequent futile efforts to subjugate them. Prompt destruction will vanquish the very worst of them. Plantains, grass, thistles, and docks, are perhaps the most difficult to eradicate. But if by any neglect these have gained a strong footing in any garden, constant beheading alone will destroy them. No plant can live long if never allowed to form leaves or stems, and the shortest, surest, easiest way to eradicate the worst weeds is by incessant cutting off all their visible parts."

Scarecrows.—The best scarecrow is a suspended looking glass. Take two small, cheap mirrors, fasten them back to back, attach a cord to one angle, and hang them to an elastic pole. When the glass swings in the wind, the sun's rays are reflected all over the field, even if it be a large one, and even the oldest and bravest of crows will depart precipitately should one of its lightning flashes fall on him. The second plan, although a terror to crows, is especially well suited to fields subjected to the inroads of small birds and even chickens. It involves an artificial hawk made from a big potato and long goose and turkey feathers. The maker can exercise his imitative skill in sticking the feathers into the potato so that they resemble the spread wings and tail of a hawk. It is astonishing what a ferocious bird of prey can be constructed from the above simple material. It only remains to hang the object from a tall bent pole, and the wind will do the rest. The bird will make swoops and dashes in the most headlong and threatening manner. Even the most inquisitive of venerable hens have been known to hurry rapidly from its dangerous vicinity, while to small birds it carries unmixed dismay.—Scientific American.

About the House.

Tooth Powder.—Three ounces calc. carb. precp., one and a half ounces sapo Castile, one-half ounce pulv. camph.

Put one or two red peppers or a few pieces of charcoal into a pot where ham, cabbage, etc., is boiling, and the house will not be filled with an offensive odor.

To Remove Mildew.—Take equal parts of lemon juice, salt, starch and soft soap; rub on thickly, lay on the grass in the hot sun. Renew the application two or three times a day.

Bread Pancakes.—Cut bread dough which is ready for baking into strips or fancy designs, and drop into hot lard. When they are a fine brown, drain them well, and send to the breakfast-table very hot. To be eaten with sirup.

Fried Bread in Batter.—One tablespoonful of sweet, light dough; make it into a thin batter by one cup of sweet milk; add three or four eggs, one and a half cups flour, teaspoonful of salt. Cut light bread into thin slices, dip into this batter, and fry in hot lard. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and garnish with jelly, if agreeable.

For Shampooing.—Dissolve one teaspoonful of borax in a cup of hot water; apply the liquid to the scalp until a good lather is produced; then rinse well with warm water, until the hair feels soft and natural; if desired, a cold water rinse may be taken at the last; wipe the hair dry, and let it hang loosely about the shoulders to get the air through.

Washing.—The following suggestions are recommended by a correspondent who has tested them: For ordinary washing, use a tablespoonful of borax to every five gallons of water, and two ounces of soap; soak the clothes in this over night; give them a thorough boiling without wringing. When the clothes are very much soiled, see that the water is made soft with borax. Clothes thus washed will not turn yellow. In washing flannels, use one tablespoonful of borax to five gallons of water, without soap. It will not shrink them. For starching linen, use one teaspoonful of borax to one pint of boiling starch. For washing and bleaching laces, put one teaspoonful of borax to one pint of boiling water; leave your articles to soak in the solution for twenty-four hours, then wash with a little soap. For cleansing black cashmeres, wash in hot suds with a little borax in the water; rinse in bluing water—very blue, and iron on the wrong side while damp.

Death of Gen. Henningsen—A Remarkable Career.

One of the most noted characters of Washington, Gen. Charles Frederick Henningsen, died at his residence in that city a few days ago. He was the natural son of a British nobleman, and his varied career as an adventurer has not been surpassed among the many that have crowded Washington in the past century. During his last days this noted man was reduced to most abject poverty. He was a very remarkable-looking man. He was over six feet three inches in height. He always wore a black, close-fitting suit of clothes that had the appearance of a half-military dress. Even down to his last days, when suffering, he could never bring himself down to ask for charity. As he spoke all of the Continental languages with the greatest fluency, his friends attempted to secure him a place as translator in the State Department. Every attempt, however, failed. He died alone. He was of Scandinavian extraction, born in England in 1815. At the age of 19 he went to Spain to espouse the cause of Don Carlos, the grandfather of the present pretender to the Spanish throne. His first service was as a Captain in the body-guard of Zumalacarrequi. He was subsequently made Colonel, and in that capacity led a column against Madrid, capturing the outer fortifications of the city, and held them for several hours, until notified that Don Carlos could send him no reinforcements. He was once captured. After being liberated he fought against Russia in the Caucasus. Returning to England, he wrote "Revelations of Russia," three volumes, which was translated into French. He afterward took part on the national side in the Hungarian war of 1848-9. In 1855 he commanded a filibustering expedition to Nicaragua, where he joined Walker, who was afterward shot; Gen. Henningsen, however, managed to make his escape, after having served with great gallantry. During the late civil war in this country he served in the Confederate army as Colonel, and frequently commanded the defenses of Richmond. After the war he took up his residence in Washington and became interested in the cause of Cuba. His principal writings are "Twelve Months' Campaign with Zumalacarrequi," "The Past and Future of Hungary," "The White Slave" (a novel), "Eastern Europe," "Sixty Years Hence" (a novel of Russian life), and "Analogies and Contrasts."

Vesuvius Firing Up.

Vesuvius has every appearance of firing up for another eruption. Smoke is constantly issuing from the crater, and occasionally in immense volumes, that overspread the atmosphere like a sable pall. The other day a dense black cloud that had gathered about the crater was suddenly driven over Pompeii. Ashes and cinders fell in a thick shower, and for a time it looked as if the midday darkness that attended the eruption which overwhelmed Pompeii and Herculaneum was to be renewed, and the partially disentombed city was to be buried up again. I thought of the fate of Diomed's family, smothered to death in the wine cellar, where they sought refuge. When the cloud drifted over, the pavements of Pompeii were covered with a thin layer of hot volcanic ashes and minute scoriæ. I asked the director of excavations if Pompeii might not be covered up again. "That depends on the duration of an eruption of Vesuvius," he said, "and its character. Should it break forth on the eastern side of the mountain, eject masses of scoriæ, volcanic ashes, and showers of boiling water, the effect would be as disastrous as in the 79th year of the Christian era, when Herculaneum was covered up by a strata of volcanic matter sixty feet deep, and Pompeii and Stabia and other cities were entombed beneath heaps of mud and volcanic deposits." Vesuvius is the most uncertain of volcanoes. Prior to A. D. 79, it had slumbered for centuries. Since then it has been more or less active, with spasmodic intervals of tremendous fury and desolation. Pompeii is more than one-half excavated, but much remains to be done before this old Greek city will again be entirely laid open to view within its walled circuit.—Naples Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Rejected Manuscript.

A London court decided not long ago that the editor of a newspaper or magazine is bound to return a rejected article if it is demanded, when it is still extant, but is not bound to give compensation for its destruction, if he has destroyed it before it is demanded. A case of the kind has lately been decided at Paris. The director of a paper there received the manuscript of a story, and gave a receipt for it. After several months the author asked for the insertion of his work, its restitution, or compensation. The director asserted that he gave up the manuscript to a representative of the author who came to reclaim it, but does not seem to have produced proof of this, and added that the notice at the head of his paper, to the effect that manuscript would not be returned, was sufficient to relieve him from all responsibility. The Tribunal of Commerce of the Department of the Seine, looking to the fact that the receipt of the article had been acknowledged by the editor, gave the author damages to the amount of $240.

High Price of Potatoes.

Old potatoes are selling in Hartford for $1.50 a bushel—an unheard-of price—and the quality is not of the very best, either. Nor is this the worst of it. Owing to the ravages of the Colorado potato-bugs, who are not only here, but apparently come to stay, the chances seem to be that prices will be no better next winter and spring. It is said some of the farmers have plowed up their potato fields and put in corn. At the State prison, where we suppose they use 2,000 bushels a year, the Warden has cut down his purchases of that vegetable more than half since the price rose to $1.50. He is cultivating tomatoes for the prisoners as a substitute, and gives them rice in place of potatoes.—Hartford (Ct.) Times.

FIERCE FIGHTING.

Montenegrin Against Turk—The Battles at Dugs Pass—Terrible Slaughter of Turkish Troops.

The cable furnishes the following details of the recent desperate attempt of the Turkish troops under Sulieman Pasha to force the famous Dugs pass, in Montenegro, and their disastrous repulse: After making his dispositions with great care, and seizing several important positions in front of Krystac and at the immediate entrance of the Dugs pass, Sulieman Pasha advanced with several battalions and mountain artillery to force the defile held by the Montenegrins. There being only one available road, and that leading directly through the Dugs Pass, the Turks sought, by dint of sheer fighting, to seize the bends of the road so as to place their guns in position to support the advance of the head of their column.

The ground was favorable for this plan of operations. For the first two days the Montenegrins slowly retired before the well-deployed Turkish line, until the narrowing of the ground and the increasing difficulties of the road forced the Turks to reduce their front. Then the concentrated fire of the Montenegrins, delivered from every rock and gully of the rugged mountain slopes, began to tell with frightful effect on the Turks. Amid a perfect hail-storm of bullets the brave Turkish infantry struggled onward, encumbering the road with their dead and wounded at every step. The guns posted before Golia shelled the defile in advance, but with little effect, as the Montenegrins were well covered and suffered only when the Turks desperately charged on them amid the rocks and brushwood.

The fighting on the third day was almost hand to hand, the combatants firing in each other's faces at a few yards' distance. But, although the Turks gained ground slowly, it was at a terrible cost in men. Their superior numbers enabled them to push up supports to take the places of the slain, and it seemed as if the head of the Turkish column of attack was melting away as before a furnace. Notwithstanding the stubborn bravery of Sulieman Pasha's troops, the fourth day's fighting found them no nearer the key of the pass, and they had already lost nearly 3,000 men. Still they endeavored to maintain possession of the ground they had gained at such a fearful cost. But the effort was hopeless. The hardy Montenegrins repulsed every attempt to advance, and it became now only a question of covering the retreat of the exhausted column. This was begun by a furious onslaught on the Montenegrins by the troops furthest in advance, but which was quickly repulsed by a murderous fire. The retreat now became general, and the victorious mountaineers speedily followed the retiring Turks, killing an immense number, and reoccupying their former positions.

In this prolonged and bloody combat, lasting over five days, the Turks have lost over 4,000 men and a quantity of arms left on the field. The victorious Montenegrins lost 700 men, and the disproportion in casualties is due wholly to the natural strength of their position and to the necessary exposure of the Turks during the attack and retreat.

Lotteries and the Mails.

A decision of Judge Blatchford in the District Court sustains the constitutionality of the act of Congress excluding from the United States mails letters or circulars concerning lotteries, gift concerts, and similar enterprises. One Jackson, who is an agent for the Havana, Kentucky, and other lotteries, was arrested for violation of this law. As he was held to answer, his counsel, Judge Dittenhoefer, took out a writ of habeas corpus and brought him before Judge Blatchford. The ground taken for his release was that constitutionally Congress had no right to exclude any sealed letter from the mails, whatever might be its contents. Judge Blatchford, however, in his decision, took an entirely opposite view of the question, holding that, as Congress had the power to establish postoffices and post-roads, it had also a right to determine what it will and what it will not carry. So the prisoner took nothing by his habeas corpus, and was remanded to custody.

We suppose that a similar decision might have been arrived at upon grounds of public policy. It is evident that, if the Postoffice Department is under obligation to carry anything and everything which may be tendered to it with a request for transportation in a sealed package, it may be made the agent of many undertakings avowedly criminal. Lotteries may or may not be adverse to good morals, but Congress has expressed the opinion that they are, and has done what it could to prohibit them. We do not see why the argument for the defendant in the case above referred to might not be employed to save one posting obscene literature from richly-merited punishment. The rule discriminating against lottery matter is made because lotteries are held to promote bad habits, and purchasing them tends to impoverish the purchasers.—New York Tribune.

THE SUN.
1877. NEW YORK. 1877.
The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.
The price of the Daily SUN is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.
The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.
The Weekly Sun, eight pages of 56 broad columns, is furnished at $1 a year, postpaid.
Special Notice.—In order to introduce The Sun more widely to the public, we will send THE WEEKLY edition for the remainder of the year, to Jan. 1, 1878, postpaid, for Half a Dollar. Try it.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JUNE 28, 1877.

THE EDITORIAL CONVENTION.

Pursuant to adjournment the Editorial Association of Northern Indiana met in its fourteenth annual convention, at Aubuan, Indiana, on Thursday, June 22, 1877, at 4 o'clock p. m., the president, J. B. Stoll, in the chair.

The following named persons became members of the association: A. S. Parker, of the Garrett News; Alfred Moore, of the Huntington Herald; D. E. Caldwell, of the Plymouth Republican; and W. B. McConnell, Angola Herald.

Mr. Mays introduced S. K. Hooper, Esq., the General Passenger Agent of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad, who tendered the use of the road to the association for an excursion to take place on that evening. The courtesy was accepted, and the meeting adjourned to meet at 7 o'clock the following morning.

At 6 o'clock in the evening, the members and their ladies were taken by rail to Pleasant Lake, where all the pleasures of a picnic party were fully enjoyed.

At 7 o'clock, on the morning of Friday, the 23d, the convetion was again assembled, with the President in the chair. The following named members of the association were present: J. B. Stoll, National Banner, Ligonier; R. H. Weamer, Republican, Auburn; Q. A. Hossler, Republican, Warsaw; Germ Brown, J. U. Miller, Republican, Angola; Platt McDonald, Daniel McDonald, Democrat, Plymouth; J. H. Rerick, Standard, LeGrange; J. W. Baker, Commercial, Columbia City; Reub Williams, J. A. Hodge, Indianian, Warsaw; B. F. Thomas, Democrat, Winamac; N. V. Brower, Register, South Bend; J. T. Bryer, Journal, Logansport; J. Bitters, Democrat, Rochester; W. A. Beane, Democrat, Goshen; H. S. Fassett, Register, South Bend; C. K. Baxter, Press, Waterloo; C. O. Myers, Standard Kendallville; W. M. Kist, Record, Butler; T. C. Mays, Courier, Auburn.

The greater part of the forenoon session was employed in listening to reports of contracts from the different members of the association.

The President announced the receipt of a letter from Mr. Wadsworth, of the LaPorte Argus, recommending that arrangements be made with some house to furnish each paper of the association with stereotype plates containing the latest news of the week as it transpires.

Mr. Brown, in presenting the following resolutions, said his patrons did not object to the business of the town being well represented in his advertising columns:

RESOLVED, That it is the sense of this Association that the size of newspapers should be regulated by the extent of their home advertising patronage.

RESOLVED, FURTHER, That a neatly made up and well printed paper, containing a judicious selection of interesting matter, especially home news, is vastly preferable to a large sheet carelessly put together with comparatively little labor and having no particular reference to quality of matter. Crisp, condensed editorial paragraphs of general information and comment, one or two editorials on current topics in each issue, and a good local department, fully, truthfully and promptly conducted, are commended as a good rule for the observance of the publishing fraternity.

The resolutions were adopted, as was also the following, offered by J. W. Baker:

RESOLVED, That each publisher connected with this Association be requested to lay before us at our next annual meeting their prices for job work, such as half-sheets, quarter-sheets, letter heads, note-heads, bill-heads, envelopes, cards, etc.

RESOLVED, That it is the sense of this convention that any attempt to establish uniform rates for miscellaneous advertising is impracticable, owing to the diversity of interests among both publisher and advertiser, but we recommend a rigid adherence to what is admitted to be fair and equitable rates; that no dealings be had with irresponsible advertisers or advertising agents, except at full rates and advance payment made or satisfactorily secured.

Reub Willams offered the following, and it was adopted:

RESOLVED, That we deprecate the purchase of stationery of any kind from dealers who solicit orders for job printing in the same county: and recommend that the members of this Association refuse to deal with them in the future.

W. A. Beane presented this:

RESOLVED, That this Association recommend the rejection of advertisements from foreign parties, except such as are of known financial responsibility; and that cash-paying advertising agencies deserve the preference and encouragement of the publishing fraternity.

The resolution was adopted.

Platt McDonald moved, and it was carried, that the convention proceed to the election of officers for the ensuing year.

On motion of Mr. Weamer, a committee consisting of Messers Weamer, Platt McDonald and Brown, were appointed to select names of candidates for officers.

Several members reported that they had been shown the forged signatures to contracts by parties desiring to secure extremely low rates for advertising.

On motion of Dr. Rerick, it was decided to hold a social picnic at Rome City at a time to be named by the president.

The following bills were presented and ordered paid:

H. S. Fassett, 2 sets postal cards	$3.00
T. C. Mays, badges and slips	5.00

On motion the secretary was directed to compile the minutes of the proceedings of the Association since its organization, and print in pamphlet form, together with list of members, constitution, etc.

The committee appointed to name officers reported the following:

For President—T. C. Mays.

For Vice Presidents—Dr. B. F. Thomas and D. E. Caldwell.

For Secretary—H. S. Fassett.

For Treasurer—J. U. Miller.

On motion the officers named were declared elected.

The secretary presented the following report:

Auburn, Ind. June 21st, 1877.

To to the President:

The amount of money received and paid into the treasury at the last meeting	$30.70
Paid out on orders of the Association	23.00
Amount of cash in treasury	$ 7.70

H. S. FASSETT, Sec'y.

On motion, Messrs, Q. A. Hossler, Daniel McDonald, and C. P. Hodge were appointed committee on resolutions, and reported the following:

RESOLVED, That the thanks of this Association are due and are hereby tendered to the Odd Fellows for the use of their elegant hall during the present session.

RESOLVED, That our thanks are also due in an especial manner to Tom C. Mays, of the Auburn COURIER, R. H. Weamer of the Auburn Republican, S. K. Hooper, General Ticket Agent of the Jackson & Saginaw Railroad, Commodore Simmons, of Pleasant Lake, the Detroit and Eel River Railroad Co., the Auburn Cornet Band, the Angola Ladies' Trombone Band, and the Auburn Buss Line, and the citizens of Auburn generally for especial courtesies extended during the present session of this Association.

QUINCY A. HOSSLER,
DAN. McDONALD, } Com.
C. P. HODGE.

The Secretary received from W. A. Beane, the retiring treasurer, $7.70 to be turned over to the new treasurer.

The following amounts were received: A. S. Parker, $1.00; Alfred Moore, $1.00; D. E. Caldwell, $1.00; W. B. McConnell, $1.00.

Platt McDonald offered the following, which was adopted:

RESOLVED, That the pay of the secretary of this Association be fixed at $10 per year, and such additional compensation as may be proper for extra services; and that the President and Secretary be authorized to issue an order for such amount annually, without further action of the Association.

The following from Mr. Caldwell was adopted as the sense of the Association:

RESOLVED, That each member of this association, when he discovers that an advertising agency, or advertiser, is unreliable, or irresponsible, he shall notify all the members of the association of such fact by inserting a notice of the same in his paper, or by sending postal cards.

On motion of Mr. Myers the rules were suspended and the usual annual assessment was set aside, as there was sufficient funds in the treasury for current expenses. Platt McDonald tendered this, and the association adopted it:

RESOLVED, That the thanks of this association are due, and are hereby tendered to Hon. J. B. Stoll, President, and the other retiring officers, for the able and impartial manner in which they have discharged their duties.

On motion the convention adjourned to meet at Rome City on the second Thursday in June, 1878.

J. B. STOLL Pres't.
HERBERT S. FASSETT, Sec'y.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED, In Salem, Richardson Co., Nebraska, on the 14th of June at 12 o'clock, of congestion of the bowels, Frank Ervin, aged 22 years 3 months and 16 days son of James and Mary Ann Ervin, of DeKalb county Ind.

At a meeting of the citizens of Salem, Richardson Co., Nebraska, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted.

WHEREAS, In the providence of Almighty God, He has seen fit to remove, by death, from our midst, Mr. Frank Ervin, who departed this life June 14th, 1877, therefore be it,

RESOLVED, That in this sad death, we have lost one whose stay with us was short, but whose genteel appearance and manly conduct which adorned his daily life were fast winning the highest esteem and confidence from all who became acquainted with him.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES
No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the who'esale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

SEC. 2 It shall be unlawful for any citizen or resident of said town, to erect, erect, cause, maintain, continue any such nuisance, and any such citizen or resident who shall be found guilty by any court of competent jurisdiction, of the violation of any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be fined, on conviction thereof, in any sum not less than two, nor exceeding ten dollars and cost, and such nuisance shall be abated and removed.

SEC. 3 Any person causing, creating, erecting, maintaining or continuing such nuisance, shall upon being notified by the marshal of the town so to do, remove and abate the same within a reasonable time after receiving such notice, and upon failing so to do, it shall be the duty of the marshal forthwith to remove and abate the same.

Waterloo in addition to a civic display, will give several races on that and the day following. The Red Ribbon Reform Club will monopolize things here. Mr. Penfield will make an address at Pleasant Lake, where a good time is expected.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE.—Mr. C. H. Brown was happily surprised by his many friends last Friday evening. After the unexpected guests had arrived, he was made the recipient of a very beautiful gold pen and holder, scaring him not a little. But I suppose he is like the lady who scared at the question popped by her lover, he will want them to "scare him again."

Professor Tice comes forward with another prophecy. He says that on the 5th of July a tornado will visit and destroy Kansas City, Mo. He expects to be present as a spectator and make note of the attendant meteriological phenomena. Prof. Tice stakes his reputation on this prophecy and if you have any confidence in his predictions don't move to Kansas City yet awhile.

The action of Judge Hilton, in ordering that no Jews should be admitted as guests in the Grand Union Hotel, at Saratoga, is certainly an outrage upon civilization. Proscription is for kings and tyrants and not for a free enlightened people. There are some Jews whose company would not be particularly gratifying—likewise some Americans, just as mean. We believe Mr. Hilton will reap the reward he merits as the representative of the vast estate of A. T. Stewart.

Mr. H. E. Altenburg, a clerk on the Grafton & Chicago R. P. O., informs us that he saw near Garrett, Indiana, pile riven into the earth to the depth of 600 feet. Why not say 1,000 feet, Bro. A., while you are telling the story.

The above is from the Shelby Times. The reason why Hank did not say 1,000 feet was because he resembles George W in one respect—he cannot tell a lie. But we coroborate the statement which Hank made. We saw piles driven one on top of the other until their aggregated length was 615 feet. Hundreds have seen the same thing. Mr. A. is a fair representative of Auburn, and we wont permit an insinuation even from Bro. Hill to be made touching his veracity.

Fourth of July Committee take Notice.

All the committees are earnestly requested to attend the club meeting at Mr. Little's law office Friday evening, report progress and perfect arangements for celebrating the fourth Please be punctual. Com.

We learn of an accident to a little son of Mr. Hough one day last week. While he and his grandmother were in the barn yard one of the cows became infuriated and rushed upon them and got them both down. One of her horns must have caught the lower lip of the boy from the inside as it was badly torn down from the mouth. A man seeing the difficulty came to their rescue with a club and drove the cow away. Dr. Casebeer dressed the wound.

We are glad to announce that our information last week in regard to the death of Ed. F. Boren was entirely incorrect, at least he is slashing around on his farm as lively as ever. Whether our informant was borin' us, or actually believed Ed had shaken off this mortal coil, we can't say. He was really struck with a falling limb, and the process by which he was made out a dead corpus, reminds us somewhat of the three black crows. We congratulate Mr. B. on his escape from the limb and the death to which our item consigned him.

There is a dearth of harvesters at Richmond, this state. The harvest is ready but the laborers are few. In consequence of this, Messrs Dave Hampton and Daniel Littlefield left here last Monday to supply the demand. We can see them now amid the golden grain binding up the sheaves with lightning speed, and filling the air with their gladsome shouts—when a rest is called. But how will the boys look without a clean stiff shirt-collar. What a fall there will be, my countrymen.

Weamer was very sorry that our township Trustees did not resolve themselves into political parties, in the selection of a county Suprintendant. The Press of last week in answer thereto says. The Auburn Republican reads the Republican township trustees a lecture, because they failed to elect a Republican school suprintendent. Its claim that the eight Republican votes, is hardly borne out by the facts. At least three of these trustees could not have been elected without aid from outside of the party to which they belonged; but this had little to do with determining the matter. We would like to inquire what authority within the party, competent to bind the allegiance of its members, nominated these candidates? Were both gentlemen running against Mr. Barns "regular candidates?" If not, which one had the party endorsement, and how did he get it? The facts are the whole affair was a mere personal contest; and, for several reasons easily understood, Mr. Barns had the inside track and carried of the prize, much as Republicans may dislike it."

St. John, New Brunswick was almost totally destroyed by fire, last Wednesday, June 20th. The loss is estimated at $20,000,000, and 30,000 people are now homeless Fully one-half of the buildings of the city were burned, comprising every leading business house, the banks, the newspaper offices, part of the churches, all the first and second class hotels, and the markets. The city's facilities for extinguishing fire were poor, and the firemen soon became demoralized. The flames started in the heart of the town, and spread in every direction. The insurances are about five millions. Much suffering is already reported, so much, in fact, that several neighboring towns last night sent car loads of prepared food. In proportion to the city's size, it was a more disastrous conflagration than either that in Chicago or Boston. Appeals for aid have been made to the principal American cities. Almost the first city to respond was Chicago, her residents doubtless remembering that St. John's gift to the Chicago sufferers, in 1871, was ten thousand dollars.

Concert To-Night.

Mrs. Christina Garver assisted by two hundred juveniles of Auburn, will give one of her splendid entertainments tonight, at Ensley's Hall Rev. A. V. Gorrell, of Hicksville, O., says of the performance:

The musical concert given by Mrs. Christina Garver, at Commercial Hall on last Saturday night, was a success. The music was of a high order. The little folks deserve great credit for the able way in which they rendered the choruses taught them by Mrs Garver, and is also evident that Mrs. G. has the ability to impart knowledge possessed by few. The chorus in which Miss Garver presided at the piano, is well calculated to inspire in the minds of girls of her age a love for music. A pyramid of living children is a grand sight, and their sweet voices in song under the guidance of an able instructor, charms and pleases the parent and community in which and to whom they belong. Please accept this note as coming from one who was well entertained with your musical concert.

The June report of the department of agriculture indicates a better prospect than usual for wheat. The report of June, 1876, made an average for the country of 13 per centum below the standard of the normal condition, and subsequent returns of the condition were still lower, forecasting the scarcity which has occurred. The average for winter and spring wheat together is this year 100, winter wheat being above that figure and spring wheat below, 377 counties reporting winter wheat in full normal condition, 194 above 100 and 183 below it, of the spring wheat counties, 92 report 100, 117 above and 137 below. The state averages are as follows: Main, 101; New Hampshire, 102; Vermont, 103; Massachusetts, 100; Rhode Island, 100; Connecticut, 103; New York, 108; New Jersey, 100; Pennsylvania, 98; Delaware, 97; Maryland, 108; Virginia, 109; North Carolina, 100; South Carolina, 97; Georgia, 108; Florida, 100; Alabama, 96; Mississippi, 107; Louisiana, 103; Texas, 110; Arkansas, 106; Tennesee, 91; West Virginia, 107; Kentucky, 108; Ohio, 105; Michigan, 109; Indiania, 112; Illinois, 105; Wisconsin, 97; Minnesota, 95; Iowa, 102 Missouri, 110; Kansas, 99; Nebraska, 103; California, 50 Oregon, 109. The returns from California indicate half of a full crop, from the deficiency of winter and fall.

Civil Service Reform.

Gail Hamilton in New York Tribune.

I affirm what is not, of course, susceptible of absolute proof, but is, I think, warranted by a vast mass of cumulative evidence, that, except the applause of the reform claquers, there is no sign of any more civil service reform under this administration than there was under the previous administration. Its guardians and spokesmen and sponsors burden the mail with their declarations of its unalterable devotion of reform. The heavens resound with their voluble vows that the president is indissolubly wedded to reform, and will never, no, never desert Mr. Micaber; but behind and beneath all the clamors and clappings of the clique is heard the low hum of the political machine, spinning on just as steadily and faithfully as in most halcyon days of Grant's administration, and turning out exactly the same quality of work. The sole difference is that the operative was then called an old war horse, and now he is called a civil service reformer. The only difference is that then the operative did his work and said nothing about it, and now he has his muezzim on the balconies bidding all the faithful fall upon their knees in adoration of the new reform.

The Editors' Convention.

The Editorial Convention held here last week was largely attended, and if a very favorable expression from all present is considered, it was a most interesting and successful one. We are glad to say that a large proportion of the best journalists of Northern Indiana were present, and contributed largely to this success. The work of the Convention itself was more extended and thorough this session than any other we ever attended. Questions of great moment to every publisher was taken up and earnestly canvassed and discussed, and the interchange of opinions thus brought out can not fail to be of great practical benefit. We are glad the meeting was enjoyed by our guests. The excursion to Pleasant Lake Thursday evening came in very nicely, and we believe all were pleased Commodore Simmons did all in his power to make his guests comfortable, his efforts were appreciated. Our genial, clever, light-hearted friend, S. K. Hooper, General Ticket Agent of the Saginaw road, who was in charge of the party, did wonders, and his entertainment to and from the Lake was simply a re-production of the famous Christy. Few of our people knew until then that this road possessed such a gem in the way of a fun-loving, rollicing, wholesouled gentleman. The band, considering several members were absent, did very well. For full particulars of the session see another column.

Editorial Convention Notes.

Everybody said, "fine looking men."

Herb Fassett, of South Bend, talks of going into the music business.

Dr. Rerick, of the Lagrange Standard excells in horsemanship. His exhibition on that score at Pleasant Lake brought down the house—or horse.

Brown, of the Steuben Republican, is the best looking editor of North-eastern Indiana only. We want this distinctly understood.

Plat. McDonald, of the Democrat, D. E. Caldwell, of the Republican, both at Plymouth, and J. T. Bryer, of the Logansport Journal, would make a lively circus where a silver cup was to be the prize for the best looking editor.

Alf. Moore, of the Huntington Herald was perhaps the easiest masticator in the crowd. He exhibited great research on the question of dried beef.

Meyers, of the Standard, came with a copy of the "Ulster county Gazette," and thereupon Gen. Williams moved he be suppressed.

Dr. Thomas, of the Winamac Democrat, was perhaps the finest sailor in the fleet. He eclipses Tom. Sawyer in nauty(cal) terms.

Baker, of the Columbia City Commercial, resembles our friend Parker, of the Garrett News, as to hair. Both on the porcupine order.

Kist, of the Butler News, was in attendance one day only. The secretary spelled his name with an r.

Quin. Hossler, of the Warsaw Republican, was the shortest one present, but, oh goodness, he's solid.

No one was drunk, yet Bitters was everywhere present. Not in liquid form, however, but in his own propria personae as editor of the Rochester Democrat.

Dan McDonald has ceased singing, "If I had but a thousand a year." He's been clerk of the county several years.

Billy Bean, of the Goshen Democrat, was the first man here, and the last man to leave. He spoke very highly of our hotel.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS,

GARRETT.

A very heavy squall of wind and rain passed our town Monday afternoon, doing a great deal of damage to outhouses, etc. Some very large trees were torn out by the roots and twisted off bodily. Among the casualities reported is that a house about one mile east of town was blown down, and completely demolishing it, seriously injuring a woman who was alone in the house at the time. About a mile south another house was blown down, killing a woman who was the only occupant at the time. We have heard of no other serious damages except to fences, most of which in this vicinity are lying flat on the ground.

Not long since, Bro. Parker gave a glowing and sanguinary article on the growth of our town, and advising all who could make it convenient to move here to do so, as the right material was at this point for a great city. We wonder what he will say now since the shop men have been cut down to half time, being divided into two gangs, working week on and week off.

Since the visit of the Auburn nine, our base ball club has taken an interest in their grounds, having changed the lay of and cut a new diamond, graded up the ground, put up a back-stop, scorers' stand and seats for the gentle sex, and in a general manner made good improvements.

Uncle Ed. Sargent has become a disciple of Franklin. We understand the only difference being that Franklin used a kite to capture his lightning, while Uncle Ed. uses a dog. We have not heard the result, the experiment not being terminated owing to the objections on the part of the animal. But he says that he will not let his electric experiments absorb his time enough to neglect his hotel duties, which, were we to judge from the large number of his boarders, are none of the lightest.

Our dramatic club are rehearsing "Paul Pry" and "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," but have not yet appointed a night to play.

The saloon keepers have issued a circular setting forth their ideas of the Murphy movement, and calling on the prime movers to desist from their work and claiming that they have no business to incite men to sign a pledge that not ten out of fifty will keep. The circular is a well written one and has created considerabe excitement and comment.

WANTED.

100,000 lbs of wool wanted at the New York Store, Auburn, Ind., for which the highest market price will be paid. We have in exchange all kinds of woolen goods, such as Jeans, flannels, blankets, &c. We will also pay cash if desired. 3m no16.

The Storm.

About three o,clock last Monday afternoon, a black cloud was seen rising from out the horizon in the south-west, preceded by a great revolving cloud of a buff color, skirting the edge of the advancing storm cloud like a rain bow. It took a north east direction, the center seemingly passing over Auburn. In a few moments a tremendious gale swept through the town, and the rain fell in torrents. It raged with unabated fury for fifteen minutes, though the rain continued long after. Quite a number of shade and fruit trees were blown down through the town and roofs and signs torn away. A large maple shade tree fifteen inches through fell over on Eldridges kitchen doing little damage. A balsam tree did the same on the Pearce property. A handsome maple in front of Rickel's restaurant snapped asunder, about eight feet up. Two trees were destroyed in the Court yard, and Abright lost the same number in front of his residence. The roof of the Cool building, next to Snyders Hardware store, was partly torn away and the flag-staff thereon prostrated The large sign of the COURIER Office was thrown upon the awning of the Odd Fellows' building and Mr Lanning mourns a similar loss.

AT BUTLER.

The storm kept steadily towards Butler. It completely unroofed the fine livery barn of Mr. Haskins and let in the rain which did considerable damage. The roof on Haverstocks brick, over Masonic Lodge was torn away; the steeple to the M. E. Church was prostrated; the house in which Mr. Devilbus resides was lifted from its support and set upon the ground, and Mr. Boyles' barn literally demolished.

The train that carried the last of our editorial friends away on Friday evening brought the following letter, which we take the liberty of publishing for their benefit:

NEW ALBANY, IND., June 16, 1877.

TO THE PRESIDENT, OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE NORTHERN INDIANA EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION.

GENTLEMEN:—At the recent session of the State Editorial Association, I was appointed as a delegate to attend your meeting, and invite your members, one and all, to co-operate with the State Association. Afterward W. S. Lingle of the Lafayette Courier, and E. B. Martindale, of the Indianapolis Journal were added to the committee. It is with deep regret that I notify you, through Mr. Lingle, that another appointment prevents me from being with you on the occasion named. I have assurance, however, that Messrs. Lingle and Martindale will be present, and they will doubtless inform you more fully of the disappointment shared by all present at the State Association, of your absence. The meeting was one of much pleasure and profit, and the hope was indulged in, that in the future each and every editor in the State will take greater interest in the affairs of the association. While we send greeting, and the expression of a more perfect union between the sections of our common country to other state associations let us cultivate a more fraternal spirit among the professon of our own state.

As president, and on behalf of the Southern Indiana Editorial Association I hereby respectfully tender you a cordial invitation severally and collectively, to attend our meeting, to be held at the beautiful city of Madison, on the 14th the of September 1877.

Hoping that your meeting may be one of great social interest and mutual profit, I am Respectfully Yours,

JOSIAH GWIN.

THE EAST.

REV. JOHN S. C. ABBOTT, the historian, died last week at his residence at Fairhaven, Ct., at the ripe age of 71. His death was not unexpected, as he has been an invalid for a long time.

MR. JOSEPH SELIGMAN, the wealthy Hebrew banker of New York, and member of the syndicate to place the Government loan, visited Saratoga with his family the other day, and applied at the Grand Union Hotel for apartments. Somewhat to his surprise he was refused entertainment, on the ground that their presence injured the business of the hotel. The managers of the hotel claim that Christians do not like the company of Hebrews, and for that reason have heretofore shunned the hotel. There is much indignation among the Hebrews of New York at this bit of ostracism of their race....An entire Freshman class of Princeton College, numbering nearly 100, has been suspended and sent home for "bulldozing" the faculty....Several important discoveries of petroleum oil are reported in Pennsylvania, the new wells aggregating a production of over 32,000 barrels a day.

JOHN D. TOWNSEND, counsel for William M. Tweed, has written a long letter explaining the negotiations with Attorney General Fairchild for the release of his client, and accusing that official of deception and double-dealing. The letter is a very bitter one, and, from its tone, it is to be inferred that Townsend has given up all hope of effecting the release of Tweed....Four tramps were killed and one fatally injured by the giving way of the walls of a long-disused lime-kiln near Bridgeport, Pa. They were sleeping on the broken furnace....The exclusion of Joseph Seligman from the Grand Union Hotel, at Saratoga, on the ground of his being a Jew, continues to excite much public interest, and forms the topic of conversation among all classes of citizens in New York. The Hebrews are quite indignant, and are retaliating upon the firm of A. T. Stewart & Co. (the owners of the hotel), by withdrawing their accounts from that house....Mr. Short, the inventor of carpet-looms, has just died by his own hand in New Brunswick, N. J.

SIX murderers, all members of the "Molly Maguire" organization, were executed at Pottsville, Pa., on Thursday, the 21st of June. Their names are Thomas Duffy, James Carroll, James Boarity, James Boyle, Hugh McGehan and Thomas Munley. The first five were hung for the murder of Policeman Yost, of Tamaqua. Munley was one of the murderers of Thomas Sanger and William Wren, at Raven Run. On the same day, and at about the same hour, four murderers, also "Molly Maguires," paid the penalty of their crimes at Mauch Chunk, Pa., namely: Michael Doyle, Edward Kelly, Alexander Campbell, and John Donohue. Doyle and Kelly were hung for the murder of John P. Jones, a mine boss at Lansford; Campbell and Donohue, for the murder of Morgan Powell another mine boss at Summit Hill. Anthony Lanahan, another "Molly Maguire," was executed at Wilkesbarre for the murder of John Reilly. The culprits were all singularly firm in their manner, and died "game." Nearly all of them protested their innocence to the last. One of them—Kelly—confessed his guilt to the wife of his victim, and begged her forgiveness. The woman was unforgiving, and for a reply requested the privilege of hanging him.

THE WEST.

A CATHOLIC priest has just returned to Bismarck, Dak., after spending several days at the camp of Sitting Bull, in the British Possessions. The savage chief is irreconcilable in his hatred of the Americans, and refused to entertain the idea of surrendering. A council was held, at which it seemed to be determined that the hostiles will remain on the British side of the line at present, being in no condition for successful offensive war. English officers were present, who promised that the savages should not be molested as long as they kept quiet....Four persons were drowned at Eagle lake, Racine county, Wis., one day last week, viz.: Mrs. Oliver Gilbert and Miss Gilbert, and Mrs. Coblat and child. They were attending a picnic, and were out in a row-boat when the sad accident occurred. The boat leaked badly, and swamped before it could get back to the shore.

THE citizens of the usually quiet little city of Mount Vernon, Ohio, have been thrown into a disagreeable state of agitation by the cold-blooded murder of a popular hotel-keeper and prominent citizen named McBride, by one Bergin, a worthless and dissolute fellow....Ex-Senator D. D. Pratt died suddenly at his home in Logansport, Ind., a few days ago, from heart disease. Mr. Pratt was born in Maine, and was 64 years of age. He served in the Indiana Legislature in 1851 and 1855, and was elected to the National House of Representatives in 1868, but never took his seat, being chosen United States Senator to succeed Mr. Hendricks in 1869. He was for a short time Commissioner of Internal Revenue under President Grant....Hon. John Pettit died last week at his home in Lafayette, Ind., aged 70 years. Mr. Pettit has been quite conspicuous in public affairs, having held the position of Senator and member of Congress from Indiana, Judge of the Circuit and Supreme Courts, and was United States Judge for Kansas Territory in 1854-5.

THE Chicago Journal says: "Reports from every Congressional district of Illinois represent the outlook for corn generally better than it has been for some years past at this season, and a large crop is anticipated. Returns from other corn-growing sections indicate a similar prospect, while other grains throughout the West and Northwest promise the best results."

CHICAGO elevators contain 672,953 bushels of wheat, 3,800,237 bushels of corn, 288,758 bushels of oats, 155,022 bushels of rye, and 125,446 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,042,416 bushels, against 3,415,477 bushels at this period last year. Milwaukee warehouses contain 718,197 bushels of wheat....The First National Bank of St. Louis, for a long time regarded as one of the soundest monetary institutions in that city, has suspended. The assets are said to be ample enough to pay depositors 50 per cent. to be paid within a few weeks, and 50 per cent. within a few months. The stockholders are hopeless losers.

NEWS comes by way of San Francisco of a formidable uprising of Indians in the region of Salmon river, Idaho Territory, the massacre of many white families, the gathering of the white settlers and friendly Indians for defense, followed by severe fighting, in which, according to the latest accounts, the latter were getting badly worsted. The dispatches state that there is a general uprising of the savages, and the whole country is wild with alarm. The Indians are massacring men, women and children in Camas Prairie, and settlers are fleeing in all directions for safety." The hostile savages belong to a tribe known as Nez Perces, and are said to number 2,000 effective warriors. Gen. McDowell, commanding the Division of the Pacific, has ordered troops from a number of posts in the department to go to the scene of trouble.

THE first reports of the Indian outbreak in Idaho Territory were not exaggerated. About thirty citizens were murdered on Camas prairie and that vicinity. The Indians, numbering from 1,000 to 1,500, are not of the lowest class of hostiles. The trouble with them is said to be the result of an attempt of the Government to put the Joseph band of Nez Perces on a reservation. To this they had consented, when one of their number was inexcusably shot by a white man, and all endeavors to secure the punishment of the murderer failed. On Salmon river every white man was killed, but the women and children were spared. There has been some fighting between the savages and the white soldiers sent against them, resulting, according to the advices before us at this writing, disastrously to the whites, about fifty of whom have been killed and wounded.

THE wheat-harvest has begun in Kentucky, and the prospect for a heavy yield is good....Fred Douglass, the other day, visited Talbot county, Md., for the first time since he left, a fugitive, forty-one years ago, and made a speech to the colored people. Douglass also called upon his old master, Capt. Thomas Auld, by whom he was well received.

WASHINGTON.

JOHN A. HARLAN (colored), ex-member of Congress from North Carolina, has been appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District of that State, vice Powers. At a Cabinet meeting last week it was agreed that the vacancy to be created by the resignation of George F. Talbot, of the Solicitorship of the Treasury, shall be filled by the appointment of Kenneth Raynor, of North Carolina. Raynor is an old-line Whig.

THE President has appointed editor R. A. Thompson, of the Avalanche, Postmaster at Memphis....A. U. Dockery, of North Carolina, has been appointed Consul to Leeds....James Russell Lowell has accepted the Spanish mission, and will shortly leave for Spain....The question of the amount of silver coin which may be legally issued has engaged the attention of the Treasury Department and the Attorney General. The latter has decided, in a formal opinion, that the whole amount of "change," silver and paper, must not exceed fifty millions, and that silver may only be issued in exchange for paper fractional currency redeemed or known to be destroyed.

THE President is booked for a visit to the White Sulphur Springs of Virginia in the latter part of July....The name of Gen. Julius White, of Chicago, is prominently mentioned in connection with the Turkish mission....The President has appointed M. W. Gibbs (colored) Register of the Land Office at Little Rock, Ark.

SECRETARY SHERMAN has written a letter for the purpose of removing any doubt in regard to his opinion as to the payment of the 4-per cent. bonds in gold. He believes that both principal and interest ought to be paid in gold coin....Nicholas Fish, son of the late Secretary of State, has been appointed Minister to Switzerland.

THE report of the commission appointed to investigate the charges of extravagance in the Printing Bureau of the United States Treasury at Washington shows a recklessness and waste of the public money greatly to be censured. The names of 958 persons were upon the pay-rolls of the bureau at the beginning of the investigation, about 60 per cent. of whom were not necessary for the prosecution of the business. The number has since been profitably reduced to 367 persons.

POLITICAL.

KENNETH RAYNOR, the newly-appointed Solicitor of the Treasury, is a man nearly 70 years of age. He was in Congress in 1839 as an old-line Whig. Of late years he has resided in Mississippi. He was a Union man, a friend of Grant, and a member of the Alabama Commission....Gail Hamilton, in one of her recent letters, charged that George Schneider, of Chicago, loaned Secretary Schurz money to start a newspaper, and, in consideration of that loan, Schneider had Schurz's influence to secure his appointment to the Swiss mission. The latter has been interviewed upon the subject, and pronounces the story an unmitigated falsehood and slander.

THE State Convention of the Greenback party of Maine was held last week at Skowhegan. Resolutions were adopted demanding the repeal of the Resumption act of 1874, the withdrawal of the national-bank notes and the substitution of greenbacks, the remonetization of silver, and the reservation of the public domain for actual settlers. Rev. H. E. Munson was placed in nomination for Governor.

GENERAL.

THE steamer Montana, which sailed from New York last week, took out for missionary work in Europe eighteen elders of the Mormon church of Utah. It seems that Mormonism is greatly on the decline in all the British states. Great Britain at one time furnished 60,000 disciples to Brigham Young. Now the Mormons in all Europe do not number more than 11,000 souls....From Mexico comes news that the city of Acapulco has been captured by the followers of Lerdo....There were five executions in the country on Friday, the 15th inst., three at New Orleans, one at Newnan, Ga., and one at Dayton, Ohio. Three of the murderers killed women, two their wives, the other two selecting men for their victims....The official canvass of the area in cotton this year, as made under the auspices of the Agricultural Bureau, shows an increase of nearly 4 per cent. upon the acreage of 1876, giving a total in excess of 12,000,000 acres. The season has been too cool for cotton, too wet at the time of planting, and too dry since in all of the area except Texas. The plant is now generally small, but healthy, free from weeds, and in condition to improve rapidly with favorable weather.

SENATOR CONKLING sailed last week for Europe....The Collector of Customs at El Paso, Texas, informs the Secretary of the Treasury of the capitulation of El Paso, Mexico, to the partisans of Lerdo de Tejada....A detachment of Mexican Government troops recently crossed the Rio Grande near Fort Clark, Texas, to escape from a superior body of revolutionists by whom they were closely followed. The latter pursued and attacked them on Texas soil, killing and wounding a good many, and then returned to the Mexican side. The defeated Government troops, numbering some forty, were then arrested by the United States military authorities for violating the neutrality laws, and were released on parole. Recruiting is actively going on for the revolutionists on the Texas side of the Rio Grande.

ORDERS have been sent from Washington to Gen. Ord, commanding on the Rio Grande, directing the release of the Mexican soldiers who recently took refuge in Texas, if there is no danger that they will be again immediately attacked by the revolutionary forces....Reports from Havana say that the condition of Cuba is no better than it was last year; that Martinez Campos, with the 30,000 men he added to the garrisons of the island, has utterly failed to redeem his promise of pacification; that the treasury is exhausted, the production of the staples of the island interrupted, and all industrial and commercial enterprise paralyzed. The Spaniards and most of the people would be glad to have peace at almost any price. But the army contractors don't want it, and they will probably contrive to have their way.

THE case of Great Britain presented to the Fisheries Commission, appointed to adjust the differences between the United States and the provinces of the former country in North America, contains a voluminous history of the fishery difficulties. A total of $14,800,000 is claimed as damages from the United States.

THE city of St. Johns, New Brunswick, has been almost obliterated by fire. The flames broke out in the afternoon of June 20, in McLaughlin's boiler-manufactory in Portland, a suburb of St. Johns, and raged for twenty-four hours. A strong wind was blowing at the time, and the fire spread with incredible rapidity toward the business portion of St. John, clearing in its career entire streets of buildings. The entire business portion of the city, including all the banks, hotels, newspaper offices, the Custom House, telegraph offices, a number of churches and public schools, besides hundreds of dwellings, were reduced to ashes in a few hours. Several schooners and larger vessels were burned. Crafts laden with goods and household wares readily caught the flames and were consumed. The fierce wind drove the flames to the south and east and destroyed everything they reached to the water's edge. Five men and two infants are known to have lost their lives, and many are missing. The loss is estimated at from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 and the insurance will not, it is thought, exceed $5,000,000. The area burned over is about 200 acres. Thousands of people are rendered homeless, among whom there is much suffering....The fast trains between the East and West have been withdrawn, and one of the shortest railroad wars on record is at an end....A report is received by way of Victoria and San Francisco of an uprising by the Blackfeet Indians of British Columbia. The Rocky Mountain camp of the Canadian Pacific railroad was attacked by the savages, and all the men killed save one, who escaped to tell the story.

THE Sunday-school Assembly to be held at Lake Bluff camp grounds, thirty miles north of Chicago, July 17 to 27, promises to be one of the most important and interesting gatherings of Sunday-school workers held for many a day. Railroads will give reduced fares, and ample provisions will be made to entertain, at small [illegible] may desire to attend.

DISPATCHES from St. John, N. B., furnish the following additional particulars of the terrible conflagration in that city: The entire business portion of the city is destroyed. Not a leading establishment has escaped. All the principal dry-goods stores, the leading grocers, all the brokers, commission merchants, all the wholesale liquor dealers, flour, provisions, coal, salt, lumber, tea, West-India goods, are utterly wiped out. Forty-odd blocks or nearly 200 acres south of King street have not six buildings remaining. Every street, square, and alley is filled with furniture, and thousands of people are without either food or shelter. Thousands had to get away from the lower part of the city by boats. Of the 310 acres in the city boundaries, 400 are burned over and 20,000 residents homeless. They have crowded in elsewhere or are under tents. The loss is still estimated at $20,000,000, and the insurance so far as known is about $6,000,000. It is said that all the offices will pay. The number of dead is reported to be on the increase, but the facts are not fully known. Mrs. Crane and the young ladies of her school had to go to sea in one of the International steamers to save themselves. There were many heartrending scenes. A great quantity of goods saved fell into the hands of thieves, who eagerly availed themselves of every opportunity that afforded to carry off what they could lay their hands on. The following newspaper offices, with their plant and stock, were completely swept away: The Freeman, Evening Globe, Daily Telegraph, Watchman, Religious Intelligencer. The Globe, Telegraph, News, Intelligencer and Watchman had job offices attached. The churches burned are Trinity, St. Andrew's, Germain Street Methodist, Germain Street Baptist, Christian, Duke Street; St. James' Church, Leinster Street Baptist, Centenary Methodist Church, St. Phillippi, Carmarthen Street Mission (Methodist), Pitt Street Mission, St. David's, Reformed Presbyterian, Sheffield Street Mission-House.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

IT is now announced that it is the intention of the Russian army to pass the Balkan mountains in Turkey. Then, if England prevails upon Turkey to negotiate a peace, Russia will be willing to treat for a settlement of the difficulties between the two nations. Failing in this, the Czar will dictate a peace from, it is to be inferred, the palace of the Sublime Porte, at Constantinople....It has been finally decided, as the result of close communion between the Czar and Prince Milan, that Servia shall remain absolutely neutral.

ACCORDING to a late Constantinople dispatch, the failure of the Turkish campaign in Asia is attributed to Russian gold and Turkish treachery....The cable sends accounts of another desperate battle between the Montenegrins, 3,000 strong, and a column of 10,000 Turks, in which the brave mountaineers defeated and put to flight their ancient foes, with frightful slaughter. The Turks repeatedly assaulted the Montenegrins, who were strongly posted, and were as often repulsed. The mountaineers, gaining courage by a momentary wavering of the foe, emerged from their coverts, and, pouring a murderous fire into the thick ranks of the Mussulmans, put them to flight. Then, with the most fiendish yells, they attacked the panic-stricken Turks with the bayonet. No quarter was asked or given, and but few prisoners were taken, nearly all the Turkish troops that were overtaken being put to death. Over 2,000 of them were killed, besides many wounded....By way of Constantinople we have news of a five hours' battle near Delibaba, in Asia Minor, resulting in the defeat of the Russians. Mehemet Pasha, the Turkish commander, was killed.

ALTHOUGH Servia will maintain an attitude of armed neutrality, she has concluded a treaty with Russia enabling that power to transport troops through Servian territory....A correspondent at Batoum telegraphs that the Turks fired on a French vessel which was trying to enter that port. The French Consul has demanded an explanation and apology for the insult to the flag.

LATE cable dispatches represent the situation of the Montenegrins as extremely critical....Trustworthy advices from St. Petersburg confirm the reported utter inefficiency of the commissariat in Armenia and on the Danube. The Czar is exasperated. The scanty provisioning of troops has caused apprehension....The Russians have again begun to advance in Asia Minor They have re-occupied Olti, and pushed their advance beyond, the Turks retiring on their approach without offering battle....The Turks have succeeded in relieving Niesics, in Montenegro, and have revictualed it for twelve months....It is stated that the Sheik-ul-Islam has sent a delegation of Doctors of Law to the Sherif of Mecca, the direct descendant of the Prophet, for the purpose of demanding funds from the Treasurer of Islam to be applied in defense of the Islam faith. This treasure is formed from the annual offerings of the pilgrims, which are accumulated in the Kasbah of Mecca, and is said to amount to 600,000,000 francs....From Russian sources we have accounts of horrible outrages upon Christian Turks in the province of Tultcha. "Villages and farms," it is stated, "are wantonly sacked and burned with a view of rendering the country a desert before the advance of the Russians. Ghastly heads are carried every day by blood-stained murderers into Tultcha, Matchin, Babadagh and Hirsova. The flames of some burning village are visible every night."

TURKISH advices report terrible outrages by the Russians upon the Circassian population of Armenia. Towns are sacked, women ravished, and men banished. A reign of terror prevails. The Russians are reported by the Turks to have burned the military hospital in Ardahan. Eight hundred inmates are said to have perished....The Turks have again been defeated by the Montenegrins in a five hours' engagement between Danilograd and Spuz.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch asserts that Layard, the British Ambassador, has counseled the Sultan to make peace immediately. All the Ministers except Redif Pasha, Minister of War, favor peace....The Turkish Chamber of Deputies decided by a large majority that it is advisable to postpone for the present the question of the admission of Christians into the army, they continuing to pay the exemption tax....Details of the recent battle near Delibaba, in Asia Minor, represent the affair to have been very disastrous to the Turkish force. The Russians put them to flight, and then, pursuing with cavalry, converted the defeat into a rout....Relative to the late Turkish defeat near Spuz, a Cettinje dispatch says: "Later accounts show there never was a worse panic, or a more disastrous rout known in the annals of war between Turkey and Montenegro. It was only the artillery of the forts that saved the Turkish army from complete destruction. The Turkish dead cannot be counted, because they lie along the plain nearly up to Spuz, and the artillery of the city prevent approach. Gen. Petrovics reports about 1,000 dead within the ground recovered by the Montenegrins."

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

The ceremony of presenting Gen. Grant with the freedom of the city of London in a golden casket was performed at Guildhall, the other day, in the presence of a distinguished gathering of Englishmen and Americans....Lady Sterling Maxwell, better known as the Hon. Mrs. Norton, is dead. This lady, a well-known poet and novelist, was married on the 1st of March last to Sir William Stirling Maxwell, Baronet, member of the British Parliament for Perthshire. The bride at the time was 70 years of age, and confined to her chair with rheumatism. Sir William was 59.

An Editorial Brutus.

An editor out West indulges in the following talk to his subscribers and patrons. The famous speech of Brutus, on the death of Cæsar, rendered by Shakspeare, is made to do service in this amusing travesty:

"Hear us for our debts, and get ready that you may pay; trust us, we have need, as you have long been trusted; acknowledge your indebtedness, and dive into your pockets, that you may promptly fork over. If there be any among you—one single patron—that don't owe us anything, then to him we say: Step aside, consider yourself a gentleman. If the rest wish to know why we dun them, this is our answer: Not that we care about ourselves, but our creditors do. Would you rather that we went to jail and you go free, than that you pay your debts and keep us moving? As we agreed, we have worked for you; as we contracted, we have furnished the paper to you; but as you don't pay we dun you. Here are agreements for job work, contracts for subscription, promises for long credit, and duns for deferred payment. Who is there so green that he don't take a paper? If any, he need not speak, for we don't mean him. Who is there so green that he don't advertise? If any, let him slide; he ain't the chap either. Who is there so mean that he don't pay the printers? If any, let him speak, for he is the man we're after."

Potatoes.

As an article of staple food, no vegetable compares with the potato. In Ireland potatoes and buttermilk are the principal diet, the average laborer consuming of the former ten pounds daily. In Holland, boiled in fat with other vegetables, they form the ordinary repast of the working classes, who seldom eat meat more than one day in the week. Science teaches that the best proportions of food for the common wants of the system are about 9 per cent. of fat, 22 per cent. of flesh-formers and 69 per cent. of starch and sugar; hence, with the addition of a little milk or butter, potatoes are capable of sustaining life and activity. To preserve a large percentage of the nourishing properties of potatoes, they should be cooked "with their jackets on." They need to be well cooked, with a considerable degree of heat; if boiled, they should be placed at once in boiling water; if roasted, the oven should be moderately hot at the start; peeled and soaked in cold water the nutritive, starchy matter is extracted and lost; with a slow oven the skin will be hardened and thickened. To secure the fullest benefits from this valuable vegetable much depends upon a proper knowledge of the best methods of cooking.

The Depravity of the Armenians.

An English war correspondent writes from Trebizond: "Were a European to exercise his fancy for imagining the quintessence of depravity, the frightful wickedness of the Armenians would still be out of his power to conceive. Those who are not bankers to some Pasha—that is, vampires living on the blood of Christians and Mohammedans—are certain to be panders, and that word in the East signifies something much worse than with us. In Hungary, Transylvania and the Bucowina, Magyars, Germans, Roumanians and Slavs would rather find themselves among the plague-stricken than fraternize with the Armenians. No doubt they are more wealthy than the other nationalities, but by what means have they attained to prosperity? Their every word is a lie, their every act a deception. In Trans-Caucasia, the Armenians are the dirtiest, the most immoral of all nations, in every respect far behind the Tartars. A European, therefore, is not likely to feel any desire for their acquaintance."

Dried Eggs.

A large establishment has been opened in St. Louis for drying eggs. It is in full operation, and hundreds of thousands of dozens are going into its insatiable maw. The eggs are carefully "candled" by hand—that is, examined by light to ascertain whether good or not—and are then thrown into an immense receptacle, where they are broken, and, by a centrifugal operation, the white and yolk are separated from the comb. The liquid is then dried by heat, by patent process, and the dried article is left resembling sugar; it is then put in barrels, and is ready for transportation anywhere. This dried article has been taken twice across the equator in ships, and then made into omelet and compared with omelet made from fresh eggs in the same manner, and the best judges could not detect the difference between the two. Is not this an age of wonders? Milk made solid, cider made solid, apple butter made into bricks! What next?

SPEECH OF GOV. TILDEN.

Delivered at the Hendricks Reception in New York.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: I accepted your [illegible] the idea that this was to be a merely social meeting, the special occasion of which was the presence in this city of Mr. Hendricks and of Gov. Robinson and Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer. One of your guests, Mr. Hendricks, embarks to-morrow on a foreign excursion for rest and recreation. He will carry with him our best wishes for a prosperous voyage, pleasant visit, and a safe return, and for the health and happiness of himself and family. I have been availing myself, for similar purposes, of a brief interval, and find myself now, with some reluctance, drawn away from those private pursuits. But the occasion, and the apparent general expectation, seem to require that I should say a word in respect to public affairs, and especially that I should allude to the transaction which, in my judgment, is the most portentous event in our political history.

Everybody knows that, after the recent election, the men who were elected by the people President and Vice President of the United States were "counted out," and men who were not elected were "counted in" and seated. I disclaim any thought of the personal wrong involved in this transaction. Not one of the 4,300,000 of American citizens who gave us their votes but what experiences a wrong as great and as deep as I; not one of that minority who did not give us their votes but what in the resulting consequences of this act will [illegible] the mischief if it [illegible] in government [illegible]. They do not restrain themselves voluntarily. They can never be limited except by external force. [illegible] had been our pride and our congratulation that in this country we had established a system of peaceful change in the governing power. In other countries in the Old World, changes in an administration—in a succession of governments—have generally been worked out by means of by force. We felicitated ourselves that here, through the skill and patriotism and philanthropy of our forefathers, we had established a system of peaceful change through the agency of the ballot-box. And this is the first time in American history that the right of the people has been impeached. It is the first time in American history that anybody has pretended that the Government of this great country was handed over to any set of men through fraud. It is an event novel, portentous. The example, if successful, will find imitators. The temptation is always present, and if a set of men being in possession of the Government can maintain that possession against the elective power of the people, and after they are condemned at the election, why should not such an event be imitated by their successors? Devices will always be found to give the color of law, and false pretenses on which to found a fraudulent judgment will not be wanting. The question for the American people now is whether or not the elective system of our forefathers, as it was established in this country and has been respected and venerated for seventy-five years, shall be maintained, or whether we shall adopt the bad practices of the worst governments in the worst ages. This is the question of questions. Until it shall be settled no inferior administrative questions will have any significance in the politics of this country. There will be no politics in this country but the question, "Shall the people regain their rights and rule in this republic?" If one instance of the successful assumption of the Government in this mode can be established, it will find plenty of imitators if it is condoned by the people—aye, if it is once condoned. If my voice could reach throughout our country and be heard in its remotest hamlet, I would say: "Be of good cheer. The republic will live. The institutions of our fathers are not to expire in shame. The sovereignty of the people shall be rescued from this peril and re-established."

The question involves the elective system; it involves the whole structure of free government, and the rights of the people through it again will be vindicated, reasserted and forever established. The people must condemn the great and transcendent wrong that has been committed. They must condemn it with a voice and in a manner that shall prevent its imitation hereafter. They must strip from this example everything in it that attracts imitation. They must deny, they must refuse success and prosperous impunity to fraud. The people cannot trust those who are the authors or beneficiaries of this wrong to devise measures of redress. But when those who condemn this wrong shall attain the power, they, acting for the people, in their behalf, must devise measures of legislation, measures of constitutional change, if necessary, that shall make a recurrence of such an act as has stained our national history impossible.

Successful wrong is never so apparently triumphant as when it is on the eve of its fall. Seven years ago a corrupt dynasty had established its ascendency over the millions of people who live in New York. It had obtained all the powers of government and of administration. It conquered or it bribed, or it persuaded, and won the almost universal acquiescence of our people. It even aspired to social recognition. It seemed to be invincible. And yet a year or two after the members of it were either in the penitentiary or in exile. History is full of such examples. We must trust the people; we must believe in the right; we must believe in the future of our country. A great and noble nation will never separate its political from its moral life.

Gov. Hendricks' Remarks.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: I thank you for the honor you do me. I appreciate it in part as an expression of personal respect and confidence, but more as an expression and assurance of your approval of those political principles of which, in honorable association with your distinguished fellow-citizen, I was made a representative during the late political contest. And I beg to assure you that I appreciate the honor you do me, and the more because of the fact of your devotion to the principles which experience has shown are essential to the preservation of good and pure government and the prosperity of the people. Very recently the Democrats of this great city and State of Indiana, as of the other States, contended for and demanded the restoration of local self-government in all the States where it had been denied. They contended for economy in all the expenditures of government. They contended for the reduction of the vast army of office-holders and for the substitution of honest for dishonest administration. With such a cause to fight for—a grand one—the victory was a glorious one. I will not disturb the pleasure of this occasion by undertaking to recount the means adopted whereby the will and the judgment of the people were defeated. The result, as declared in Louisiana, in Florida and at Washington, is not acquiesced in, it cannot be acquiesced in, for the palpable reason that it was not true. A great and a sincere people can found their ultimate decision only upon the truth, and never upon fraud successful through technicality. Even should the President and his Cabinet adopt a part or all of the political policies and purposes for which the Democratic party has been contending for so many years, even that will not bring about an acquiescence will not quiet the public discontent; the Democrats will not consent that their most cherished principles shall be under the protecting care of a power which was acquired by fraudulent and corrupt means. The Democrats will make no factious opposition to the de facto administration at Washington. They will acquiesce in the fact that it is an administration, and will support it in that which is right because it is right and because it is for the public good, but not at all becaue of any fealty to the party that stands defeated and condemned by the people. The people cannot allow that the selection of their chief magistrate shall become a thing of chance or of sharp practice. The fraud first triumphant in American history must be assigned its proper place among the crimes against free and popular government, and be made so odious that no party in the future will dare to attempt its repetition. He who is elected President must be inaugurated ever hereafter. Until that is settled and made sure forever no Democrat can be persuaded or seduced from his devotion and allegiance to the party by the allurements of office, nor even by the [illegible] the abandonment by the Administration of [illegible] principles that we [illegible] and the adoption of better doctrines and just measures. The Democrats will rather continue their faith in the right of the majority to rule according to constitutional provisions.

All Democrats rejoice with unbounded joy that free republican governments have been allowed in the States of South Carolina and Louisiana. They rejoice in the good fruits that will follow. We all know that peace and order will prevail. We know that prosperity will return to those States, and that they will continue to give prosperity to our country. We all know that the burdens of bad government, the burdens of public corruption, will be taken from the shoulders of labor, that capital will be made more secure, and labor safer and contented and happy. We all know, too, that production will increase, and that as a consequence there will be prosperity in those States which will be the prosperity of every part of the country. But Democrats know very well that this had become inevitable, as Gov. Morton said in his recent letter. Good government to the States was not a free-will offering upon the altar of our country. It had, I repeat, in the language of Gov. Morton, become inevitable. For many years the Democrats had contended in Congress and before the people in favor of the restoration of republican governments in all the States of the South. They had contended for that with such zeal and [illegible] that it could no longer be resisted, because truth and right were too strong to be controlled in favor of wrong any more. In this Democrats find a reason to stand the more firmly by their party. I have every [illegible] that the same Democratic [illegible] will [illegible] come [illegible]. Out of power, without patronage, and without money to distribute, the Democratic party during the last ten years have restored one State after another, until now the tread of soldiery is heard in no legislative hall, until now, in every State of our Union, the people are governed by laws of their own enacting and officers of their own choosing.

I have but one word more to say. The outrage done the rights of the people—not upon me and not upon Gov. Tilden, except that we are citizens of the country—the outrage upon the people in the act that denies to the people their own selection of the public officers according to the law and the constitution, that wrong will work its own reform. I have no fear of the future. Even if the administration that is now in power shall take Democratic principles and ideas and undertake to build prosperity upon them, it can never gain the confidence and the heart of the American people. And it will never do to say that when one man has taken the land that belongs to another by a title that is not good, and holds it, that it is sufficient to say that that man who holds the land wrongfully will cultivate it better than the true owner would have done. Before we reach that question we will settle the question, Who owns the land? It is not because Gov. Tilden has been wronged, but it is because the voice of the American people has been ignored when that voice was spoken according to the constitution of the United States. And I fear not the result, as I have already said. A great and a sincere people will base their judgment and final action upon the truth. Democratic principles will be carried out in the affairs of government by Democrats and by such fair-minded Republicans as will not make themselves a party to the wrong that was done last winter. This will be corrected in 1880 by a majority in the different States that will be surprising to all parties. I think I may say for 1880, as I said in 1876, that Indiana will again do her duty.

Child-Life in Calcutta.

The annual average death-rate of infants in the city and vicinity of Calcutta, including all classes of population, is very nearly 50 per cent. of those of one year old and under. Of the non-Asiatic children the average death-rate is less than 20 per cent., which increases that of the Hindoo and Mohammedan infants to a startling extent, and of these classes the latter suffer by far the greatest mortality. The vital statistics of Calcutta for 1875 show that, of every hundred Hindoo children born in that year, about sixty died, and, of every hundred of Mohammedan children born in the same year, seventy-three died. The chance of life to children born in Calcutta is therefore fearfully small. They might as well open their eyes in a plague-stricken place.

Worse Than Chicago.

The facility of divorce here (Roumania), unequaled in any land, savage or civilized, is a needful consequence of the national manners. I was shown the other day a lovely creature, of royal blood and great wealth, who had twice divorced herself and once been divorced by her husband. She is now about to marry for the fourth time, at 26 years old. Is not this a state of society to bewilder one—for there are many such cases, some worse, and thousands not quite so bad.—Bucharest Cor. London Times.

A MIGHTY UPHEAVAL.

Particulars of the Recent Earthquake on the Peruvian Coast—Half-a-Dozen Cities Almost Completely Wiped Out—Nearly One Thousand People Swept to Instant Destruction—The Property Loss Estimated at Over $20,000,000.

From the Star and Herald, of Panama, we glean the following details of the disasters and destruction caused on the South Pacific coast by the earthquake and tidal wave of May 9, brief mention of which has been heretofore made in these columns:

The towns of Arica, Iquique, Ponta de Lobos, Pabello de Pica, Chanavaya, Huamalies, Tocopilla, Cobija, Megillones de Bolivia, Antafagasta and Canaralal are nearly all destroyed. About 600 lives were lost. The destruction of property is estimated at $20,000,000, confined mostly to the coast of Tarapaca, twenty-three leagues inland, and the villages of Picamatilla and Canchones far in the interior, are more or less ruined. The shipping of guano from the southern deposits will be indefinitely suspended, as all facilities in the way of launches, shutes, wharves, water-condensers, and buildings of all kinds have been swept away. The destruction of and damage to shipping has been very great, and was attended by very serious loss of life.

At Mallendy the railway was torn up by the sea 300 feet, and at Ilo the railway was also injured. At Arica the people were preparing temporary fortifications to repel the threatened assault of the rebel ram Hauscar at the very moment when the roar of the earthquake was heard. The shocks were very numerous, and caused immense damage. The sea was suddenly perceived to recede from the beach and a wave from ten to fifteen feet high rolled upon the shore, carrying all before it. Eight times was repeated this assault of the ocean, and four miles of the embankment of the railway melted away like sand. Locomotives, cars and rails were hurried about by the sea like so many playthings, and left in a tumbled mass of rubbish. The United States steamer Wateree, stranded in 1868, was lifted bodily and floated two miles north of her old position. The cable buoy was moved a quarter of a mile northwards. Merchandise from the Custom House and stores was carried five miles distant.

The damage done was greater than that of the calamity of 1868. The earthquake had leveled the Custom House, railway station, submarine cable office, hotel, British Consulate, the steamship agency, and many private dwellings. The people passed the night on the hills. Thieves began to rob, when the troops fired upon them, killing and wounding several.

Iquique, built of wood and cane, tumbled down at the first onset. The lamps were broken, and the burning oil spreading over the debris started a general conflagration. Three companies of firemen were instantly at their posts, although it was difficult to maintain an upright position, shock following shock with dreadful regularity. To procure water, the two best fire engines were stationed on the beach. Just then the cry arose, "The sea, the sea!" and the waves rushed in. The engines were carried out by the reflux, and the fire continued unopposed. Three elements of destruction were busy at one moment—fire, water, and the earthquake. The affrighted people left the city to its fate, flying to the neighboring eminences. The fire destroyed a large portion of the town, the earthquake leveled nearly all the rest, and water covers the ruins which it took out in its reflux. The water-condensers along the shore are ruined. This is an irreparable loss for Iquique, as no potable water is found there. Nearly 400,000 quintals of nitrate at Iquique and the adjacent ports of Molle and Pisaqua were destroyed. A small loss of life took place, probably ten in all. Coasting craft and small boats in the harbor were broken to pieces. As in Arica, robbery of goods lying in the streets was attempted, but the guards of citizens took such severe measures that the robbers were speedily checked.

Away up on the pampas, eleven miles from Iquique, the splendid nitrate establishment, "La Neuva Carolina," was completely destroyed.

The sufferings of the people of Iquique were intense. The absence of water and the destruction of their principal stores added to their hardships. It is estimated that the damage done in Iquique will amount to nearly 4,000,000 soles.

Chanavaya, a little town at the guano-loading deposit known as Pabello de Pica, with 400 houses, has only two standing. Here the earthquake was followed by fire. There were no fire-engines in the town, and the sea came in and extinguished the flames, but as it retired it carried off all that remained of the place. In one of the guano cuttings thirty laborers were buried by the falling earth. Among the shipping the havoc was terrible.

The town of Tarapaca, two or three leagues inland, and the villages of Picamatilla and Canchones are more or less ruined. The loss of life is reported as not being great.

The earthquake was especially severe at Chanavaya. The earth opened fifteen meters in depth, and the whole surface of the ground changed. At least 200 people were killed. Bodies were floating in the bay, and a pestilence was feared. At Huamalies, a guano-loading station, the damage inflicted was fearful. All the houses were destroyed. The guano cuts have fallen in, and, as at Pabello, all the loading must be suspended for at least two months. The wave which succeeded the earthquake, and completed the work of destruction, was nearly sixty feet in height. Many vessels were lost here, together with several persons on board. In short, everything except a few huts in the back part of the town has been destroyed.

At Megillones the tidal wave was sixty-five feet in height. Two-thirds of the town are completely obliterated. The guano chutes, wharves, launches, boats, water distilleries, railway station, locomotives, cars, and furniture—all swallowed up. Six persons were drowned.

At Tocopilla little or nothing remains in the town.

The mine called "La Pena Blanca," four miles to the southward, sank in, smothering 200 workmen, of whom forty were Cornish miners.

Cobija, the principal town on the Bolivian coast, has lost three-fourths of its houses. The wave, thirty-five feet high, swept along the main business street, and left it level as a desert. Wharves and launches were all carried out to sea.

A Case of Conscience.

Some years ago in a Maine village a young lawyer hung out his shingle. For convenience we may call his name Webber. He was of a social turn, and his office speedily became a sort of headquarters for the good fellows of the neighborhood. About two miles up the river lived an old farmer who was commonly known as "Old Alfred," or "Uncle Alfred." He was a character with a well-developed taste for ardent spirits and a chronic indisposition to pay his bills. The young lawyer was popular, and the storekeepers of the village sent him the bills which they could not collect. Thus it happened that many little accounts against Old Alfred came into young Webber's hands for collection. The old man would never pay until he was sued, and then would make vociferous complaints. He accused the young lawyer of grinding the face of the poor, and railed vigorously against being compelled to pay. His visits were special occasions of delight to the wags who frequented the office, as a lively discussion always ensued over payment of bill and costs. One day Webber had three bills against the old man, one of which he had sued, about one he had written a letter, and the third had just come in. Uncle Alfred came to see about the one which had been sued, and, after a prolonged and animated debate, paid it. Then Webber suggested to him the propriety of paying the one about which the letter had been sent, and thus saving the expense of a writ. The old man demurred for a while, but finally settled that, and then, remarking in a conclusive tone, "I hope I've got through with you now," prepared to go. "Well, no," said Webber, "I've got another little bill here which perhaps you'd like to look at before you go." This was too much for the old man, and he broke into a torrent of objurgations. After he had become a little calm, Webber remarked in his blandest tone, "Uncle Alfred, I will make you a proposition. If you will for the next two hours go around the streets here, mingle in the groups of the people on the streets and in the stores and lead the conversation to such a point that you can remark to them that young Webber is a very clever fellow, I will discount to you $1.50 on this bill." Old Alfred almost lost his breath at this modest proposal. He wanted the $1.50 bad, but when he realized what he was expected to do for it his heart sank. He said impressively: "Squire Webber, I'm a very old man and have done many wicked things in my life, but with my views of eternity I can't lie like that for money."—Portland (Me.) Press.

How Farmers are Oppressed in Turkey.

In the course of a report on the trade and industry of the Turkish empire, prepared by Eugene Schuyler, Consul General at Constantinople, for embodiment in the forthcoming annual report of the Secretary of State on our commercial relations, the following graphic description is given of one of the Turkish systems of obtaining revenue:

"The taxes form the great obstacle to agricultural improvement in Turkey. Besides an impost of four per thousand on the value of real estate and 4 per cent. on its revenue, the tithes are very onerous. Nominally they are 10 per cent., except when an addional half or quarter is imposed; in reality they sometimes amount to 25 or 30 per cent., as they are usually collected by tithe farmers who greatly oppress the people. The peasant, after having reaped his crop, must leave it on the ground until the tithe farmer comes and takes the large sheaf out of every ten. These sheaves the peasants must bring to the common threshing floor at their own expense and must then thresh them. In this way the carts and oxen and the threshing floor of a village are sometimes occupied for all the good autumn weather, then the peasants will be lucky if they be not compelled themselves to carry the grain of the tax farmer to market. In many cases the grain rots on the field before the tax farmer arrives. By law the tithe farmers and their guards must pay their own expenses, but this is rarely done. The party live for weeks at the cost of the peasants, demanding a receipt that they have paid in full before they estimate the harvest. The peasant submits in order to avoid greater loss. Add to this the taxes on cattle, the bad roads and the difficulties thrown in the way of introducing machines, and it is easy to understand the standstill of agriculture here."

Caring for the Wounded.

In no respect can the difference in the scale of civilization between Russia and Turkey be perceived more clearly than in their respective arrangements for the care of the wounded. In the Turkish army—so states the Journal de Geneve—the medical staff does not exceed 1 per 1,000 strength, and the physicians are ill-trained. There is also a lack of medicines, bedding, litters, ambulances, and surgical and medical necessaries of all kinds. The wounded Russian will be far more tenderly cared for. Not only is there a large and excellent army medical staff, but there is also a vigorous voluntary organization similar in aims to the American Sanitary Commission which did such humane service during the civil war. Cities throughout the empire have contributed to the funds of this organization, which is known as the Society for the Aid of the Sick and Wounded in the Army. During the six months which expired May 13, says the Russian Messager Officiel, this society expended 4,034,600 roubles in the care of 16,000 sick and wounded soldiers. (The value of a rouble ranges from 75 to 86 cents, according to the coinage.) The Russian Red Cross Society works in combination with the Government, and accordingly receives from the latter a large sum to pay for part of its support.—New York Tribune.

FLORIDA SERPENTS.

The Deadly Rattler—His Habits and His Enemies.

[Florida Cor. New York Sun.]

The genuine rattlesnakes grow to a monstrous size, and their colors are more brilliant than those of the Northern species. They have been killed twelve feet long, and as large around as a stovepipe. Capt. Devall, of Palatka, avers that he saw one, twenty-odd years ago, with forty-seven attles. Incredible as this may seem, Col. Pratt, of the Palatka Herald, declares that he has seen one with fifty-two. These serpents frequent high, sandy ridges, and occasionally lurk in the gardens and in plowed fields. They have even been known to make their way into barns and houses. The larger rattlers are said to follow herds of cattle. Cow boys say that they smell the milk dropping from the udders of the cows, and take up the trail, with a view to milking them. This is done while the cows are lying on the ground chewing their cuds. When the serpent takes the teat in its mouth, the cow stops chewing, and becomes as still as death. Thus she remains until the scaly thief is satisfied. She seems to know that the least motion would be fatal. One snake has been known to milk two cows successively.

A remarkable story is that told concerning the wife of Judge Connor, of Live Oak Hill. She is deaf; and this intensifies a natural dread of rattlesnakes, as she cannot hear their notes of warning. Some time ago her husband and a neighbor were doctering a sick colt. She was standing in the path, holding some camphor and a bottle of liniment. She felt something cold and scaly coiling around her leg. Drawing aside her dress and looking down, she saw a rattlesnake gazing steadily in her face, slipping out its red tongue, and waving its head to and fro as high as her hand. The blood rolled away from her heart. She screamed, and jumped aside so spasmodically that the snake lost its hold and was left on the ground. It is possible that the serpent was trying to fascinate her; but her deafness barred out its low musical sound.

The enemies of the rattlesnake include the hog, the deer, and the eagle. The hog thrusts his fat chops into the snake's face, meekly receives its bite, seizes the reptile by the neck, places its hoofs on its body, and tears it asunder. No blood is drawn, the poison is harmless in the fat, and the porker gets a fair meal. A drove of hogs will clear the wildest country of rattlesnakes. When a buck sees a rattler, he springs upon it like lightning, bringing his feet together upon its head and body, thus cutting it to pieces; for the hoofs of a Floridian deer are as hard and sharp as a razor. An eagle kills the snake while it is sunning itself. The bird descends with the velocity of an arrow, striking the reptile with such force as to sever the vertebræ.

But the deadliest foe of the rattler is the common black snake. He grows very long, and, unlike his Northern compeer, never assails a human being. The rattler fears and shuns him; and well he may, for the black snake is as agile and quick as the mainspring of a watch, and as full of fight as a bulldog. Meeting his antagonist, he attacks without delay. After coiling and sounding an alarm, the rattler keenly watches its assailant. At first the black snake slowly glides around its spiral enemy, as though studying its weak points. He frequently hisses and increases his speed with each cycle, ever keeping an eye on the rattler. The latter twists its head with every revolution of its assailant. Swifter sweeps the black snake around the circle. At the full bent of his speed the rattler grows dizzy. In a twinkling it is caught by the throat, and the coils of the two snakes are intermingled. The contest is decided by main strength. As they writhe in the grass the superior prowess of the black snake is manifest. The rattler is slowly strangled. Sometimes its body is swallowed, but this does not always follow. The coach whip, a long, clean-cut snake, frequently assists the black snake, and instances are given in which a dozen coach whips and black snakes joined forces and killed a small regiment of rattlers.

Vultures and buzzards, with all their appetite for carrion, will never touch anything bitten by a rattlesnake; but when his snakeship himself is killed, they devour him with the greatest relish.

Fashion Notes.

Walking dress-skirts clear the ground in Paris.

Flounces gathered at wide intervals are very popular.

Scarf-pins of dead or oxidized silver are much sought for.

Linked sleeve-buttons are taking the place of other kinds.

Trained dresses are worn in the house only by Parisians.

Black silk and black cashmere Breton suits are coming in vogue.

The Shepherdess is the newest bonnet. It is intended for country wear.

Bonnets composed entirely of flowers are worn by a few daring ladies.

Wide collars and cuffs worn over, not inside, the sleeve, are coming in vogue.

Cuffs have round or square corners, to match the collars with which they are worn.

Turned down collars are not as deep as formerly, and have a wider space in front.

The contest between short and trained street-dresses is decided in favor of the former.

English shirt-collars have turned-over points, rolled very far back, leaving the throat bare.

Sleeveless sacks, slightly loose and straight in effect, are worn with polonaises for the street.

Ribbon lacings, fastening two parts of a garment, are among the novelties in dress-trimmings.

Necklaces of lace will replace for the summer the bands of velvet worn with stylish costumes in the winter.

Last season's silks are admirably freshened into new toilets by side-plaited flowers and ruffles of Swiss or tarlatan muslin.

Stylish suits are frequently made with the Louis XVI., or Continental, basque, with its long, square waistcoat and square postilions, square collar and cuffs a la mousquetaire.

The prettiest cheap jewelry in the market is of porcelain, made to resemble enamel, representing all the flowers of the field and garden. Sets can be had to match every toilet.

The newest style of evening dress is the "baby frock," made exactly as for an infant with all the fullness of the skirt thrown back, short waist, and wide sash belt closed with slashed loops and falling ends.

TORPEDOES.

The Torpedo Boat an American Invention—Its Use in the Late Civil War.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The torpedo boat is an American institution. Capt. David Bushnell, an engineer in the Revolutionary army, made the first practical application of a submarine mine to ordinary warfare. He constructed a submarine boat that would carry a torpedo charged with 150 pounds of powder. The mechanism was very clumsy; the torpedo was to be attached by a wooden screw to the bottom of an enemy's vessel, and fired by a clockwork fuse. The first trial of this invention was made in New York harbor in 1776, when the boat, under the guidance of Sergeant Ezra Lee, was set under the bottom of the Eagle, a British ship of war, carrying the flag of Lord Howe. The wooden screw would not work, and the sergeant had to cut the torpedo adrift. During the following year Capt. Bushnell directed a percussion torpedo against the frigate Cerberus, lying off New London, but it drifted out of its course, and, striking a schooner moored alongside, sent her to the bottom. Twenty years afterward Robert Fulton constructed an improved torpedo—he invented the name as well as the weapon—and undertook to introduce it abroad. In 1805 he made an unsuccessful attempt to destroy the French fleet at Boulogne, but subsequently blew up a brig in Deal harbor by means of two drifting torpedoes. The British Government rejected his system, and he returned to America to make further experiments in New York harbor. Another American, Col. Samuel Colt, was the first to apply electricity to the ignition of torpedoes. After blowing up several vessels at anchor, he destroyed, in 1843, a brig under full sail on the Potomac, operating by electricity from a station five miles distant. During the Crimean war contact-mines and electrical apparatus were introduced on the Black sea, and explosions occurred under two vessels, but no serious damage was done. The French engineers, however, destroyed the docks at Sebastopol through the agency of submarine explosions.

During the civil war in America torpedoes were used in the defense of Southern ports. The Confederate Congress organized a torpedo service in October, 1862, and a bureau of engineers was established at Richmond. Two months afterward a Federal ironclad, the Cairo, was blown up on Yazoo river by a torpedo, and during the remainder of the war seven ironclads, eleven wooden vessels, and six transports were destroyed in a similar way. The Confederates lost the Albemarle, two steamers in Charleston harbor, and a flag-of-truce boat in the same way. The Russian engineers who recently fastened a torpedo under a Turkish ironclad did no more than Lieut. Cushing had done in the waters of the Roanoke. There were several officers in the Confederate service who lost their lives in attempting to do what Cushing accomplished. A submarine torpedo-boat, requiring a crew of nine men, was launched in Charleston harbor for use against the blockading fleet. Three crews went to the bottom in this boat before she was directed against the enemy. Fnally a fourth crew, led by Lieut. Dixon, volunteered to take her out, and attack the Housatonic. The Lieutenant steered his boat well; she struck the Housatonic fairly and blew her stern to atoms; the concussion sent Dixon and his men to the bottom, and the torpedo-boat and the corvette sank together.

Wellington's Strategy.

On a certain occasion during Wellington's campaign in the Pyrenees, that "great Captain," being displeased with the dispositions Gen. Picton had made for receiving the assault of Marshal Soult, who had menaced him in front, ordered the plan to be entirely changed. But the difficulty was to delay the attack of the French until the change could be effected. This the "Iron Duke" accomplished in person in the following manner: Doffing his cocked hat, and waving it in the air, he rode furiously to the head of a regiment, as if to order a charge. Thereupon rose a tremendous cheer from the men, which was taken up by corps after corps until it reverberated along the whole extent of Picton's line.

As the roar died away, Wellington was heard to remark, musingly, as if addressing himself, "Soult is a skillful but cautious commander, and will not attack in force until he has ascertained the meaning of these cheers. This will give time for the sixth division to come up, and we shall beat him." It turned out as anticipated. Soult naturally enough supposed those tremendous shouts to announce the arrival of large reinforcements, and did not attack until too late. Had he struck at the right moment, he would have won an easy victory; as it was, he met with a bloody repulse. This was strategy. Not the strategy of books, but the strategy of genius, conceived and executed in the same moment. The idea was born of the occasion, and carried out on the instant.

Hawks as Poultry Destroyers.

Colorado has, by legislative enactment, given a bounty of 25 cents for each and every hawk scalp. At Denver city, since the hawk season commenced, the money paid for scalps for that county alone averages from $30 to $40 per day. These hawks are mostly killed in the vicinity of chicken ranches, and the bounty does not offset their ravages on the poultry. They not only carry off the young and half-grown chicks, but actually attack the full-grown fowls, which are often killed by the furious onslaught of the rapacious hawks. Meadow larks have almost been exterminated by the common enemy.—Nevada Territorial Enterprise.

Genius and Rum.

A San Francisco editor gives a brief but interesting sketch showing what has become of some of the men who have been prominent in the political history of California. He names eighteen, and of these eight became confirmed drunkards. Among them was John McDougal, who was a United States Senator. All were brilliant men, the contemporaries of Broderick, who was killed in a duel, and of Baker, the Senator, who fell on the battle-field early in the war.

THE FUTURE OF THE FAR WEST.

The Population It Can Sustain—No Need for Many More New States There.

[From the New York Tribune.]

A gentleman who has spent many years in the Western Territories, has traveled extensively in all of them, and is thoroughly familiar with their topography and resources, gives the following estimate of the maximum population they are likely to attain and support:

Colorado	300,000	New Mexico	175,000
Wyoming	100,000	Washington	150,000
Dakota	175,000	Nevada	75,000
Montana	200,000
Idaho	125,000	Total	1,400,000
Utah	200,000

He adds Nevada and Colorado to the list because they are States only in form of government, and resemble the Territories in the poverty of soil and incapacity for much further development. This estimate, if correct—and it is sustained by the best information that comes from army officers and scientific travelers—has an important bearing upon many interesting public questions. The time is at hand when there will be no vast areas of fertile land tempting the emigrant to the West. Even now the limit of profitable agricultural settlement in Western Nebraska and Kansas has been reached. Beyond stretch vast plains available for grazing purposes only where water can be obtained. Further west comes the region of mountains and table lands, where no rain falls, and where agriculture is only practicable along the banks of rivers, or in a few localities where water can be obtained for irrigation from the streams formed by the melting snows on the mountains. These localities are rare, because the mountain peaks and chains are, for the most part, bare of snow in summer. West of the Rocky mountains and their lateral ranges the sage-brush desert, utterly worthless for culture, extends to the Sierras. Washington Territory has different characteristics from the elevated rainless interior region, but timber is its chief resource, and farming is confined to a few valleys.

The section of country described has an area greater than that of all the States east of the Mississippi river, but its population a century hence will probably not equal that of Massachusetts to-day. Each Territory, by making the most of its mining and farming resources, may acquire population sufficient to entitle it to admission as a State, but not one is likely to ever have more than a single member of Congress. Except in the Senate the relative power of the East and the West will not therefore be much changed in the future. There will be few more new States erected in the present generation. Colorado was only admitted after a long fight. Nevada ought to be set back into a Territorial condition. Her population is less than 50,000, and it is not to be expected that she will ever have as many inhabitants as in the old States are requisite to form a Congress district.

The influence which the cessation of the movement of population West may have upon the social, industrial and political phases of our national life opens a wide field for thought and discussion. Looked at in one way it will be an evil day when there is no more virgin soil awaiting the plowshare of the farmer, no new towns springing up and inviting the enterprise of the young men of the East, no region for the restless and unfortunate to flee to with the hope of bettering their condition. But there is another view to take, and it will probably be the view taken by the social scientist. It is that high civilization is inconsistent with sparse settlement, and that culture, wealth and happiness will rather increase than diminish when the population of the whole country is much more dense than at present, and the vacant spaces are filled up that have been skipped in the rush to the West.

Remarkable Increase of Russian Territory.

At the beginning of the reign of Ivan III., the first autocratic ruler of Russia, in the year 1462, the territory he governed comprised about 11,000 square miles. At his death, in 1505, the whole extent of his dominions included about 43,000 square miles. Under the Czar Ivan IV. ("The Terrible") a considerable quantity of territory was annexed, so that at the time of his death, in 1584, the Russian empire may be computed to have contained 75,000 square miles. Theodore I., who succeeded Ivan, acquired territory from the Swedes, and also pushed his conquests beyond the Ural mountains; and at his death, in 1598, the Russian sway extended over 130,000 square miles. On the accession of Michael I., in 1613, the extent of the Russian empire may be taken at 156,000 square miles. Peter I., by his numerous conquests, materially increased its extent, and at his death, in 1725, it comprised 282,454 square miles. During the reigns of the Empresses Anna Ivanovyna, Elizabeth, and Catharine II., large annexations were made, so that on the death of the latter, in 1796, the Russian dominions extended over 352,472 square miles. The Emperor Paul I. added Georgia to his dominions. Alexander I. conquered Finland and annexed other territories, increasing the extent of the Russian empire before he died, in 1825, to 366,582 square miles; while Nicholas I., by the campaigns of 1828 and 1829, secured to Russia the khanates of Erivan and Nahitchevan, the district of Ordubab, and the pashalic of Achalzic, raising the total extent of the Russian empire to 367,112 square miles. Thus since the reorganization of the Russian sovereignty under Ivan III., some 400 years ago, the territorial dominions of Russia have increased to thirty-five times their original size.

New Way to Pay an Old Debt.

Two daughters of a farmer in St. Lawrence county, New York, desired to pay the debt on their homestead, but they preferred not to do it by hard work. They hit upon an idea that suited their purpose, and have made enough money to remove the debt. They had a large quantity of porous stone sawed into small pieces and thoroughly soaked in an odorous preparation, which imparted to them a durable scent. These they peddled throughout the State, at 25 cents each, representing that they were cut from the rock of a wonderful perfume cave in South America. The girls are so demure and pretty, and tell their lie with such an appearance of simplicity, that the sales are very large. They have just put a fresh lot of stone in soak, preparatory to an extended Western tour.

WOMEN AND WINE.

Pop! went the gay cork flying,
Sparkled the bright champagne!
By the light of a day that was dying,
He filled up the goblets again;
"Let the last, last toast be woman,
Woman, dear woman," said he;
"Empty your glass, my darling,
When you drink to your sex with me."

But she caught his strong brown fingers
And held them tight as in fear,
And through the gathering twilight
Her fond voice fell on his ear:
"Nay, [illegible], I implore you,
By all that you hold divine,
Pledge a woman in tea-drops,
Rather [illegible] the glass in wine.

"By the woes of the drunkard's mother,
By his children who beg for bread,
By the fate of her whose beloved one
Looks on the wine when 'tis red,
By the kisses changed to curses,
By the tears more bitter than brine,
By many a fond heart broken,
Pledge no woman in wine.

"What has wine brought to woman?
Nothing but [illegible] and pain.
It has torn from her arms her lover
[illegible]
And her household gods, all shattered,
Lie tangled up in the vine;
Oh! I prithee, pledge no woman
In the curse of so many, wine."

PITH AND POINT.

Cool, but not always collected—An ice bill.

A crying evil—Taking the baby to church.

Paying the piper—Settling the plumber's bill.

Trying times—Going to the dressmaker's.

The young man's first razor—His father's boots.

A fiery-tempered woman ought to marry a Persian. They just worship fire.

"The kurds" says an Asiatic dispatch, "are threatening the Khan." The milk-khan, probably.

The prize for obscure punning has been awarded to the man who addressed his letters, "Chicago, Sick."

A Nevada newspaper says of a man who has sued it for libel that "he petitions the courts to stitch a golden patch over his rent reputation."

It is said to be a sure sign that a farmer learned his farming from books when he tries to keep the rain off from a potato patch with an umbrella.

If Dr. Mary Walker continues to pant for fame why don't she go and join the Turks, and when the Russians storm the Turkish stronghold she can throw herself into the breeches.

It is an assurance of success to find a horseshoe just as you are about to begin an important undertaking; but if you find two it makes horseshoerance doubly sure.

Somebody remarks that young ladies look upon a boy as a nuisance until he is past the age of 16, when he generally doubles up in value each year until, like a colored meerschaum pipe, he is priceless.

A Newcastle man at a London restaurant had called for the bill, paid it, and was leaving, when the waiter suggested that the amount did not include the waiter. "Ah," said the man from the north, "but aa didn't eat the waiter."

Charles (playfully)—"How much, really, did that hat cost, Jennie?" Jennie (archly)—"If you really want to inspect the bills for my dry goods, Charles, there is a way to do it." And what else could Charles do but propose on the spot.

"I tell you, sir," said Dr. —— one morning to the village apothecary, "I tell you, sir, the vox populi should not—must not be disregarded." "What, doctor!" exclaimed the apothecary, rubbing his hands. "You don't say that's broken out in town, too, has it? Lord help us! what unhealthy times these are!"

"Well, doctor," said a man with a bouncing toothache, who had been standing in a dentist's office for an hour and a half for his turn to come—"Well, doctor, you keep your patients waiting a good while, don't you?" "Oh, yes," replied the doctor, significantly jingling his forceps, "but then the old adage says 'a patient waiting is no loss,' you know."

HOW SHE LOOKED.

Summer was shining in her eyes;
Her cheeks were bright with exercise,
Her lips like cherries.
The falling snow in crystals flecked
Her dress, and cloak and bonnet decked
With crimson berries.
Her hair, the hue of molten gold,
Around her head was simply rolled,
Hair soft and shiny.
I marked, too, as she lifted high
Her dress, to keep her flounces dry,
Her feet were tiny.

Old Ben Tappan, a once-noted Kentucky politician, replied to a man who was denouncing him: "Sir, I will pay no attention to anything you have said. No remark that you can make will draw any response from me, sir. I have known you now for forty years, sir, and you were a d——d dog when I first knew you, and you have been a failin' ever since."

Valuable Invention.

The discovery of a cheap and complete process for keeping all kinds of fruits, vegetables, and meats fresh and sweet, is said to have been made by a Texas physician named Davenport, whose patent is on the application of the ingredients of a pickle which will arrest the process of decomposition and extinguish the germ of decay of all animal and vegetable substances, without impairing their flavor, or imparting to them any injurious effect. It is simply a pickle of the most inexpensive sort, costing less than brine or vinegar, in which any meat or vegetable may be kept in open vessels, submerged for months, and when taken out will be found as pure and fresh as when the vegetables came from the garden or the meat from the butcher's stall. This pickle may be furnished and prepared at a cost of 4 cents per barrel.

An Astonished Burglar.

A burglar broke into a Kansas City house in which Mrs. Gay was alone, and told her if she made any noise, or attempted to get out of bed, he would kill her. She was frightened, and did not speak or stir while he packed her silverware and jewelry for removal. Then, by way of emphasizing a parting injunction not to raise an alarm, he boxed her ears. That made her so angry that she forgot her fear. She jumped out of bed, knocked the burglar down with a chair, stamped on him, and yelled at the top of her voice. A police officer heard the racket, and a badly-injured man was arrested.

In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter-press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. Anderson, Topka K.

What They Say of Us.

We reproduce the following from several of our exchanges, whose editors attended the convention here week before last.

From the Lagrange Standard.

We were agreeably surprised in seeing so large and such a well built town. The population was reported to us as actually 2,100. The plan of the town is about the same as Lagrange. The public square is in the center, with large brick business block on each side, though not wholly built up on the east side. In the public square, a little larger than ours, is a substantial brick court house, built some ten or twelve years ago, at an expense of some $30,000. also a new jail, recently finished, costing $28,000. Being interested in school-houses, Hon. J. B. Rose, upon ascertaining that fact, took us to their new school house, just finished. They have commenced their educational facilities upon the ward school plan, and it was not therefore, necessary for them to build their High School building on so large a plan as where the single school house plan is adopted. Their new house, though, seemed almost large enough for the whole town, having a capacity for nearly 400 students. It is built of brick, two stories high above basement, with three schoolrooms on each floor. The basement is supplied with furnaces, which we learned are working satisfactorily. The cost of the building, if we recllect rigtly, was $15,000, but built at a loss of over one thousand dollars to the contractor.

The editors all stopped at the Swineford House, where they fared sumptiously, and came away rejoicing at the reasonableness of their bills. We do not know whether there is another hotel in town, nor would we care if there are a dozen, we would stop at the Swineford every time.

Auburn is highly favored with rail roads, three forming a junction there, and is, we should judge, one of the pleasant localities of Northern Indiana, where it is good for intelligent and enterprising men to dwell.

From the Steuben Republican.

The editorial fraternity in this part of the State are under obligations to the gentlemenly officers of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad Company for one of the pleasantest and most enjoyable excursions—from Auto Pleasant Lake—last Thursday afternoon and evening, were participated in by the "Press." A nice coach for the special accommodation of the faber pushers and their families, was furnished, and every convenience for a nice ride and a general good time, was provided. Two bands—Auburn Cornet Band and Mr. S. K. Hooper—accompanied the excursionists. There was the pretty little pleasure steamer, the S. K. Hooper, in waiting, upon the arrival of the train at Pleasant Lake, to take the company over to Simmons' Park. And to keep all the appointments of the excursion in order and render them perfect for the completest entertainment of the editors and their friends, Mr. S. K. Hooper, the gentlemanly and lively General Ticket Agent of the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R., was personally present, on hand, there, and in full attendance, himself. Mr. Simmons, at the Lake, threw open his pleasant grounds and hall, and gave the unrestrained use of his many boats, including the S. K. Hooper, for entertainment of the party. The Ladies' Trombone Band of Angola, with a fine company from this place, joined the excursionists at the Lake and added much to the enjoyment of the occasion. The convivialities—applying that term in its most refined and restricted sense—were without restraint or jar, and at about 11 o'clock, under the guidiance and suprintendance of the General Ticket Agent, Mr. S. K. Hooper, the tired yet joyful company returned to Auburn, highly pleased with the evenings entertainment. This will long be remembered as one of the pleasantest excursions we ever participated in.

From the Winamac Democrat.

The two days we spent in Auburn the county seat of DeKalb county, and the visit we paid to Pleasant Lake and the city of Garrett, will long be remembered as among the most agreeable hours in Northern Indiana. The town of Auburn, we should judge in the absence of authentic information, contains about 3,000 inhabitants, and is a thriving and prosperous place. The public buildings will compare favorably with other county seats. The court house is a large two story brick edifice erected in the center of the public square. It has brick, mortar and material enough in it to have made it more modern and attractive, without any additional expense. The court room is large, well ventilated and comfortable. The public offices in the lower story for county offices, did not strike us very favorably—they looked too much cramped and gloomy. The court building must be somewhere in the neighborhood of 70x100 feet.

The jail and the house for the Sheriff upon the same lot is a more elegant and tasteful building. It was erected at a cost of $28.000 and we should judge from an examination of the building throughout, could not have made the contractor rich. It is of the finest as also one of the most secure prisons in the State. The cells in the lower and upper stories are out of solid rock and would seem to defy the ingenuity of the most expert jail braker to escape when once inside of the cell. To the credit of the gentlemanly Sheriff of DeKalb county be it said that the prison is kept neat and clean. There is but one person confined there at this time, and he was surrounded with so many comforts we doubted very much if he could have been induced to give up the huge pile of literature into which he was diving to accept of the boon of liberty.

We were glad to notice in addition to these public buildings, quite a number of substantial and tasty church edifices. The Baptist, Methodist, Catholic Presbytearian and German Reform all have accommodation for the worshippers at their altars. Besides the churches, we noticed the public school buildings were highly creditable to the place, indeed to any city in the State. There are also good buildings owned by the Masons and Odd Fellows. The Hall of the Odd Fellows was the comfortable meeting place of the Association during its two days session. We understand besides these two benevolent orders there are the Knights of Pythias and the Red Ribbon organizations—both doing well.

Although Auburn is not a manufacturing city, yet there are several large manufacturers in the town. There are two banks—the First National, and a bank of deposit. Some idea of the business of the place may be formed when we say there are eight dry goods stores carrying good stocks, three drug stores, three hotels, two printing offices, 7 or 8 millinery stores, besides the usual number of smaller establishments. The town has the benefit of three railroads, and we could see nothing in the way of making it one of the finest business points in the State. The county has about 25,000 inhabitants. The Swineford hotel is well kept and the table well supplied with all the markets afford. The sleeping appartments are everything that could be desired—beds clean, rooms airy and comfortable and everybody obliging and kind. The prescription Drug Store of J. E. Bodine, opposite the Swineford House is neat and tastefully arranged and has one of the most competent and obliging Clerks we have met for many days.

To the officers of the Ft. W. J. & S. Railroad Company we were indebted for a special train to an excursion to Pleasant Lake, where we spent several hours in boat riding &c. The Lake is about fifteen miles north of Auburn and is a great resort for excursion parties. The sheet of water is about one mile from east to west and three quarters in width. There is a little steamer and about twenty small boats which belong to the grounds. In the center of a fine park there is a large hall for speaking, but is sometimes used for ancing. A religious party were having a social at this resort when our party arrived; and we fear they led some of our staid and usualy sober fellows into the "Mayesy" dance. The Angola Trumbone band, consisting of seven female players met us here and discoursed sweet music from their horns. We will soon become reconciled to this innovation upon the rights of man. The srtonger sex will not do all the blowing from this out. They have "blowed their own horn" about long enough. This enjoyable departure from the business of the Association was a free blow all around. The members of the Association are under many obligations to Frank. S. Hecker, Esq., Gen'l. Supt. of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois Railroad Company, and S. K. Hooper, Gen'l. Sept. of the Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saganaw Railroad for free transportation over their respective roads. We are very sure that each member will bear willing testimony to the fine condition of both of these roads, and also to the obliging gentlemen connected with them, and cheerfully recommend them to the traveling public for speed and comfort.

From the Butler Record.

The editorial convention held at Auburn last Thursday and Friday proved to be the most interesting and the most beneficial one to the fraternity that has been held yet. The business sessions, held Thursday afternoon and Friday morning, were very spirited and showed clearly that the members of the association met more for business than pleasure. The "dead beat" advertisers were fully exposed, and a resolution was passed not to take advertisements from irresponsible persons. Other important business was transacted by the association, and if lived up to by its members will prove beneficial. The social part was exceedingly pleasant, and much credit is due R. H. Weamer, of the Republican, and T. C. Mays, of the Courier, for making all the visitors feel as though they were at home. Through the kindness of the Ft. W. J. & S. railroad company in placing a special car at the disposal of the editors and publishers present to take a pleasure ride, and having S. K. Hooper, the general ticket agent of that road, as host, the members of the association, with the Auburn band, at 6 p. m, Thursday, boarded the train for Pleasant Lake, arriving there in due season. By an invitation from Commodore V. E. Simmons, proprietor of the pleasure ground at Pleasant Lake, the fraternity spent the evening in boat riding, dancing, playing foot ball, croquet, etc., until after 11 o'clock, when the party, feeling very much delighted with the courtesy shown them by the Commodore, returned to Auburn. Take the convention as a whole it was a success, and the kindly treatment received from the citizens of Auburn will be cherished by all preasant. We are sorry that our space will not allow us to give a more extended notice.

From the Ligonier Banner.

The Northern Indiana Editorial Association held its regular annual meeting at Auburn on Thursday and Friday of last week. There was an unusually large attendance of editors and publishers, and more time was devoted to the consideration of practical business than at any previous session. Indeed we may say that it was the most profitable meeting we have ever had the pleasure of attending. Thursday evening the fraternity, accompanied by a large number of citizens of Auburn and Waterloo, made an excursion to Pleasant Lake, Steuben county, the Jackson & Saginaw R. R. Company kindly placing a special train at the disposel of the excursionists and the Auburn Band enlivening the occasion with excellent music. Superintendent S. K. Hooper accompanied the happy crowd, and left nothing undone to make the trip one of pleasure and enjoyment. He is the jolliest railroad man we have has the pleasure of meeting for a long time. Pleasant Lake is a delightful summer resort, a small steamer and an abundance of boats are supplied for the accommodation and enjoyment of excursionists. The pic-nic ground is simply grand. In addition to the music discoursed by the Auburn Band, a cornet band composed of handsome young ladies from Angola agreeably surprised us with their faultless renedition of several popular pieces. The party returned to Auburn at midnight, well pleased and greatly refreshed, though evidently yearning for repose and sleep. Friday afternoon was exclusively devoted to the legitimate business of the association. A number of important resolutions were adopted. Officers for the current term were chosen as follows: President, Thomas C. Mays, of the Auburn Courier; Vice-Presidents, Dr. B. F. Thomas, of the Winamac Democrat, and D. E. Caldwell, of the Plymouth Republican; Secretary H. S. Fassett, of the Southe Bend Register; Treasurer, J. U. Miller, of the Steuben Republican. The next regular meeting will be held at Rome City, and an excursion will also be made to that point July or August of this year—Auburn is a delightful little city; it has many handsome brick buildings, excellent hotel accommodations, clever citizens, and fine prospects for future growth and proserity. The thanks of the fraternity are due Messrs Mays and Weamer for their untiring efforts to render the convention a success and to make it pleasant and agreeable for all in attendance. We yearn for a repetition.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The law-abiding people of Schuylkill, Carbon, Columbia and Luzerne counties, in Pennsylvania, are considerably excited by rumors that the friends of the men lately executed at Pottsville and Mauch Chunk are preparing to avenge their death. Two murders have been committed within a few days that are charged to the Mollies, two witnesses in the recent trials have unaccountably disappeared, several law-abiding citizens have received coffin notices, and there is a general dread that the reign of lawlessness has not been permanently checked by the late wholesale execution—that the snake is only scotched, not killed.

PRESIDENT HAYES visited Boston last week and was enthusiastically received. The entire State militia was called out for the occasion. There was a grand review, followed by a splendid banquet in the evening....The college yacht race, at Springfield, Mass., between the Harvard and Columbia crews, was won easily by the former.

PRESIDENT HAYES attended the commencement exercises at Harvard College, received the degree of LL. D., and was banqueted in the evening....At last the little financial balance between the Centennial managers and the Government has been settled and paid up. The Secretary of the Treasury allowed the board $20,000 paid special customs officers during the opening days of the Exposition, and President Welch handed over $30,000, squaring the $1,500,000 which Congress voted as a loan when the Centennial managers were sadly in need of funds.

THE WEST.

ADVICES from the scene of the Indian outbreak in Northern Idaho report that thirty-three white soldiers were killed in the engagement of the 17th of June. A dispatch of the 22d from Boise City says: "At State creek the whites have fortified themselves in a stockade fort, into which has been received the wives and children of the murdered men, together with the families of the men who had escaped the massacre. These women are thus shut up in the midst of the hostile Indians without adequate means of defense and without aid, and will certainly be overpowered and murdered, as the Indians declare their determination to take the fort and murder the men. The situation far exceeds in gravity any Indian outbreak of our day, and it will tax the best resources of the Government and of the people immediately interested to subdue the Indians and restore peace to the country. EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, June 22.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to the following paragraph in a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of the Treasury on the conduct to be observed by officers of the General Government in relation to elections:

"No officer shall be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns. Their right to vote and to express their views on public questions, either orally or through the press, is not denied, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties. No assessment for political purposes of officers or subordinates should be allowed."

This rule is applicable to every department of the civil service. It should be understood by every officer of the General Government that he is expected to conform his conduct to its requirements. Very respectfully,

R. B. HAYES.

THE Iowa Republican Convention met at Des Moines on the 27th of June, and nominated John H. Gear for Governor and Frank L. Campbell for Lieutenant Governor. The resolutions declare that "the permanent pacification of the southern sections of the Union, and the complete protection of all citizens in the free enjoyment of all their rights, is a duty to which the Republican party stands sacredly pledged;" favors the "early attainment of a currency convertible into coin;" the "gradual resumption of specie payments by continuous and steady steps in that direction;" the making of silver a legal-tender for the payment of all debts, and "a wisely-adjusted tariff for revenue." The introduction of a resolution declaring that "the so-called 'Southern policy,' which has been inaugurated and pursued by the present national administration, is in accord with the principles of the Republican party," was received amid general tumult. The resolution was laid on the table by a large majority. A resolution was adopted in favor of the rigid enforcement of the present Iowa prohibitory liquor law.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

ACCORDING to Turkish reports, the campaign in Montenegro is about ended, all the strategic positions being occupied by the Turkish troops....The crossing of the Danube was begun by the Russians at Ibrail on the 22d of June. Pontoon bridges had previously been erected unobserved by the Turks, and on the day named these were thrown across the river, and the Fourteenth Army Corps, 15,000 strong, marched into Bulgaria, taking up a position in a marsh, out of reach of the Turks....The Turks have reoccupied Bayazid, in Asia....The Emperor of Morocco refuses to furnish military assistance to Turkey.

THE cable furnishes copious details of the operations attending the crossing of the Danube by the Russians at Ibrail and Galatz. Early on the morning of Friday, the 22d of June, bands of cavalry crossed the river on barges at the points named, which are eighteen miles apart, and promptly formed a junction on the high slopes beyond the marshy river bank. Under the cover of this force, between the Turks at Matchin and the river, the Russians laid their pontoon bridges at both the above points, and two divisions rapidly crossed and effected a junction without opposition. Every movement of the Russians was characterized by the utmost skill and rapidity of action. By noon the forces were before the outworks of Matchin, which they carried by charging the defenders. The Turks were driven out and fled to Matchin, the Russians turning their own guns upon them, and that night they rested in the deserted Turkish camp, preparing for the battle of the morrow. On Saturday morning they advanced again with the intention of storming Matchin, but found no enemy to oppose them. The Turks had evacuated the place, and the Russians entered it, and held the key to the Dobrudscha.

The Turks are reported preparing to concentrate their forces on the Lower Danube and the fortresses forming the quadrilateral—Rustchuk, Silistria, Shumla and Varna—leaving the Widen force isolated."

DETAILED accounts of the terrible bombardment of Rustchuk by the Russian batteries at Giurgevo are furnished by cable: "The terribly effective character of the Russian fire can scarcely be described. The gunners seem to have directed every shot at Rustchuk without regard to the buildings liable to be injured. Shell after shell came crashing through the roofs of the houses, and burying themselves in the floors, where they exploded, demolishing the walls. The mosques seemed to be selected as particular targets at times, for two, three, and often more shells would fall on and around them, tearing pinnacle and dome with fearful effect. Not even the hospitals were spared by this awful rain of shells, and their inmates in many cases were killed in their beds. The unfortunate inhabitants of Rustchuk suffered terribly during the bombardment. Hid away in deep recesses or sheltered behind thick walls, the Russian shells found and destroyed them. As they darted through the streets toward places of greater security, their bodies were scattered in fragments by the explosion of these terrible missiles. Women flying from their burning and ruined homes were killed as they ran. Little children clasped in the arms of their terrified parents were struck dead by the fatal fragments. The scene was one of unqualified horror throughout."

THE center of the Russian army effected the passage of the Danube at Sistova, under the eye of the Czar and under the immediate command of the Grand Duke Nicholas. The Turks seem to have been taken by surprise, and offered but little resistance, the Russian loss from the enemy's fire not exceeding 200 in killed and wounded. The situation on the Danube is thus sketched by a correspondent: "The Russian left is in great force near Hirsova, and is being constantly strengthened. The right has secured a crossing at Simnitza with ease, so that the Danubian passage is secured. The center has the choice of concentrating upon the right or left wing, and crossing unopposed. Widin and Nicopolis are isolated from the Turkish quadrilateral, and present indications lead to the conclusion that this much-vaunted square of fortresses will itself soon be cut in halves, and the Turkish forces separated into three divisions without means of communication and with the whole Russian army occupying a central position between them and free to move with crushing force upon any one of them."....A bold exploit was recently executed by a Russian cruiser in the Black sea. The vessel boldly dashed into the harbor of Heraclea, and sent out launches with torpedoes, by means of which three Turkish merchant ships were destroyed.

The Famine in India.

There is no change for the better in India. The famine has not abated, and affairs [illegible] The price of [illegible] the Burmese rice-crop has been secured for English consumption, and there is no rain. The condition of the people on the relief works is gradually deteriorating. In eight districts, where the annual death-rate of the winter season is not usually more than 20 per 1,000, it ranged from 37.3 to 118.3 in December and from 62.6 to 118.7 in January. Many of the deaths are due to starvation, or diseases engendered by starvation, but these are debited to "cholera." The best authorities estimate the total loss of life which will follow from famine at 1,000,000, and think that the Madras census of 1881, with its population of 30,000,000 souls, will show, if not a retrograde a stationary population. A fact is cited by the London Times correspondent which upsets the assertion that periodical famines are necessary to keep down the redundant population of Hindostan. The remarks on this head, the correspondent holds, would be pertinent to the subject if the famine had displayed itself in the most thickly-populated districts of the country, but, as a matter of fact, the most thickly-populated districts have been able not only to grow food enough for their own necessities, but to export to places where there was scarcity. There is no evidence of any value to show that the population of India is beyond the capacity of the land to support. Every pound of grain consumed in the famine tract of the South during the present scarcity has been supplied by India itself; and, while an enormous local failure of crops over an area inhabited by 20,000,000 of people has prevailed, India has still been able to add largely to her exports of wheat to Europe.—New York World.

A Noise-Extinguisher.

Everybody that travels has experienced the annoyance of having his ears deafened when on board a steamboat by the roar of escaping steam. Sometimes accidents have occurred during the racket of "blowing off" simply because the Captain cannot make his orders heard, and everything has to be done in dumb show while the disturbance lasts. Happily an invention called the spiral exhaust-nozzle is destined to choke off the noise. It operates by breaking the waves of sound, the escaping steam being surrounded with a wire helix, and obliged to pass between the wires. A report adopted by the Committee on Science and the Arts of the Franklin Institute says: "In view of the annoyance, fright, and danger arising from the roar of escaping steam, and of the completeness with which the nozzle destroys this roar, we are of the opinion that Mr. Shaw has done a great service to the community, and particularly to the transportation interests, in overcoming an obnoxious and dangerous feature in the use of steam; and we recommend the award to him of the Scott legacy premium and medal for his spiral exhaust-nozzle."—New York Tribune.

An Old Stove.

In the Virginia State Capitol, at Richmond, is the historic stove of the world. It unquestionably deserves this designation, although it is best known as the "Old Stove," having been manufactured in England by one Buzaglio, and sent over to Lord Botetourt, in 1770, as a present to the colony of Virginia. This old stove was used in warming the House of Burgesses in Williamsburg until 1779, when the capital was removed from that place to Richmond, and served the State altogether, in heating its legislative halls, for a period of sixty years; after which it was placed in the rotunda of the Capitol, and warmed that portion of the building for about forty years more, when it was laid aside as one of the sacred relics of Virginia.—Scribner for July.

Railroad Statistics.

Advance sheets of Poor's Railway Manual, soon to be issued, show that the number of miles operated in this country last year were 73,508, against 71,750 in 1875. The gross earnings amounted to $497,200,000, against $503,100,000 in the previous year, while the net earnings were $186,400,000, against $185,500,000 in 1875. The increase in net earnings in the face of the large falling off in gross earnings is attributed to the spirit of economy which has characterized railroad management during the past year. The dividends paid in 1876 amounted to $68,000,000, against $74,300,000 in 1875, the falling off being due to the default of several corporations, notably the coal companies.

Riches and Reason.

The experience of the late Mr. John Daly, of this city, who got riches but lost his reason and committed suicide, points a moral for our time. The case of Dr. Ayer, the well-known millionaire, who is in an asylum for the insane, furnishes a commentary on the failure which some men are making by their appetite for money. There are scores of similar cases of insanity caused by a too intense application to business. Brains are of more account than bank notes, even in this world, truthfully says the Christian at Work, and it is never wise to risk one's head to accumulate a property for other people to quarrel over.—Scientific American.

A TORPEDO TRIUMPH.

Detailed Description of the Destruction of a Turkish Monitor by Torpedoes on the Danube—Matchless Bravery and Skill of the Russian Sailors.

[Cor. of the London Daily News.]

The destruction of a Turkish monitor the other night by torpedoes seems to have been a most brilliant and daring exploit. Two steam launches, with a handful of men, steamed boldly into the midst of the Turkish flotilla, placed two torpedoes under one of the monitors, and succeeded in blowing it up and completely destroying it. This feat, accomplished with impunity, without the loss of a single man, is a very remarkable one, and if it can be shown that it can be repeated with ease, [illegible] and gunboats on inland rivers will be rendered completely useless, and even the modern monster ironclad, built at such expense, will likewise [illegible] of no [illegible] for any kind of service near an enemy's coast. An ironclad will not even be safe at sea, for any kind of ship, even a wooden one, can send out half a dozen steam launches in the night, surround an ironclad, and destroy it with impunity.

The little expedition which succeeded in blowing up the Turkish monitor was composed of four small steam launches, two of which were to make the attack and the two others to hold themselves in readiness to render assistance in case, as was possible, of an accident to either of the attacking ones. The two launches which were to make the attack were commanded by Lieuts. Dubasoff and Shestakoff, and manned, one by fourteen and the other by nine men. The crews were protected by an iron screen or awning, which covered the boat completely over from stem to stern, and which was sufficiently thick to stop a bullet. This screen, as well as the boat, was painted black, so as to be scarcely distinguishable at night, and the crew were thus protected against the fire of small arms, except the man at the wheel, who directed the movements of the boat, and who was necessarily exposed. The crews embarked in the boats a little after 12 o'clock on Friday night, at a distance of about seven miles from where the Turkish monitors were lying. The night was dark and rainy, and the clouds completely obscured the moon, which nevertheless prevented the night from being one of complete pitchy darkness. There was just enough light to enable them to distinguish the dark masses of the Turkish gunboats without themselves being easily seen. After an hour's steaming they came within the immediate neighborhood of the enemy's flotilla. The engines of the launches were so constructed as to make very little noise, and when they were slowed down all the sound they made was a low, dull kind of throbbing noise that was almost drowned by the continual croaking of the frogs, which are very large and very numerous along the marshes of the Danube. Nevertheless, the quick ear of a Turkish sentinel caught the unusual sound and cried out, "Who goes there?" in Turkish. The boats advanced without replying. The sentinel again called out and again remained without an answer. He called out the third time, and, as it was becoming evident that the ship would be alarmed, Lieut. Dubasoff replied in Turkish, "friends!" and continued to advance. The sentinel, however, was by no means satisfied, and, after calling out again two or three times, he finally fired. Then the Russians, who were by that time very near the doomed monitor, heard a noise in the ship. There was a scuffling of feet, the rushing about of sailors, cries and shouts, and the voice of an officer commanding them to prepare the guns for action. They heard the order given for the gun in the bow to be fired. They heard it given three times, and three times they heard the click of the hammer, showing that an attempt had been made to fire, and that the gun had refused to go off. Finally, the third time the order was given, a globe of flame leaped over the side of the gunboat, and a shell went whistling over their heads. They were evidently seen by the Turks. One of the boats, that of Shestakoff, now drew off, while that of Dubasoff continued to advance. Each boat was armed with two torpedoes, attached to the end of a long spar that projected from the bow. These spars were arranged to move on pivots, and could be swung round so as to describe a half-circle. The torpedoes were so placed that they could be detached from the spars at any moment, and, in addition to this, long, light chains were attached to them, by which they were to be tied on to any projection of the attacked ship, and they were connected with the boat by a fine, flexible wire about 100 yards long. The officer in command carried a small electric battery fastened round his chest. A lively fusilade had now been opened upon the boat by the Turks, but, in spite of this, the launch of Dubasoff shot under the bow of the monitor, the chain which was fastened to the torpedo was flung round a chain or rope that was hanging from the bow of the ship, the torpedo was dropped from the spar, and the current of the river carried it against the bottom of the ship. The launch then shot away again until the full length of the electric wire had been reached. The officer applied it to the battery round his chest, and at the same instant a huge volume of water rose up into the air, which half-filled and nearly swamped Dubasoff's launch, and a fearful explosion was heard, which completely drowned the shouts and cries and firing of the Turks. In the meantime the other monitors became alarmed, and, without knowing the cause, fired at random, and a fearful scene of terror and confusion ensued. They not only fired on the Russian launches, that still kept dodging about like mosquitoes, but in their panic and confusion fired into each other. The bullets rattled over the iron awnings of the launches, but did them no harm. They were not once struck, although the bow of one was pierced and sunk by a piece of shell that exploded near it. The two launches were now on opposite sides of the doomed ship. Dubasoff perceived that the monitor was sinking down before, but very slowly; while the Turks continued to fire away blindly, but incessantly, both with small arms and cannon. Dubasoff cried out to Shestakoff to try and place another torpedo in order to make sure of the ship, and the latter slipped in under the stern and put down another torpedo in the same manner as the previous one. He then shot off until he was at a safe distance, applied the electric battery in the same manner, and a still more terrible explosion followed. Parts of the ship were blown into the air, as they very soon perceived by a large plank which a few seconds later came down endways, driving its way through the iron screen into the boat between two of the sailors who were back to back, close to each other, without injuring either of them. Then the monitor sank rapidly, and after a few moments nothing but her masts was visible above water. The crew had all either been drowned or had escaped by swimming. Day now began to break, and the position of the two little launches within the near range of two other Turkish monitors became very critical. To add to the danger of the situation, the screw of one of them got fouled, and the boat became unmanageable. While they [illegible] a Turkish launch from one of the other monitors bearing down on them. They opened a fire of small arms on the Turkish launch, which veered off and showed no disposition to come any closer. One of the sailors got out into the water, and, after several minutes' exertion, succeeded in clearing the screw, and the two launches, having accomplished their mission of destruction, darted off, passed under the fire of the two other Turkish gunboats, escaped unharmed, and, rejoining their two consorts, returned in triumph to their places of starting. The Grand Duke received the news with joy two or three hours after, and the rejoicing among the Russians was very great. The two officers and the crews of the two boats have all received the cross of St. George.

Serfdom in Russia.

In 1861, after some years of cautious preparation, Alexander II. proclaimed the emancipation of the serfs, and with one blow the fetters were stricken from 40,000,000 of human beings. Of this number, a little over 20,000,000 were attached to the estates of private proprietors, 1,467,000 were domestic servants, and the remainder belonged to the state demesnes, which cover about one-half the area of Russia. The peasant serfs were immediately invested with the civil rights before enjoyed by the free rural classes, and the communes were allowed to retain the lands which they already occupied, paying for the use of them certain yearly dues, with the liberty of purchasing them within thirty-nine years. The domestic serfs were compelled to serve their masters for a term of two years after the emancipation, and were thereafter free, but had no share in the communal lands. The peasant serfs, comprising, as has been said, five-sixths of the whole population, are still governed by the communes; but how much longer these organizations are destined to survive it is impossible to predict.

The condition of the serfs has not materially improved since the emancipation. It could not be expected that their advancement would be rapid. They form a colossal body for the Government to provide for and bring up to a point where they will be able to make the most of their opportunities. A few of them—two or three perhaps—in a commune can read and write; the remainder are illiterate. They are no longer subject to the rule of a private master, they have no more fear of the knout, or of banishment to Siberia, or of enrollment in the army at the caprice of a brutal owner; but, on the other hand, they can no longer turn for help and protection to a proprietor who is responsible for their welfare and in a majority of cases shows himself humane in conduct toward them.—Chicago Tribune.

Mark Twain.

And this is how Samuel L. Clemens obtained the name which he has made famous. The explanation is given in a letter to Mr. John A. McPherson, of San Francisco:

DEAR SIR: "Mark Twain" was the nom de plume of one Capt. Isaiah Sellers, who used to write river news over it for the New Orleans Picayune. He died in 1863, and, as he could no longer need that signature, I laid violent hands upon it without asking permission of the proprietor's remains. That is the history of the nom de plume I bear. Yours truly,

SAMUEL L. CLEMENS.

IT is estimated that the school fund of the State of Texas will be $30,000,000 when the school lands are all sold, and the annual income will be $2,800,000.

ST. JOHN'S CALAMITY.

Detailed Account [illegible] of the New [illegible]

"Wednesday, the 20th of June, 1877, was [illegible] in the [illegible] N. Nothing," says a correspondent, "could have burst more suddenly on the [illegible] citizens than the fire which [illegible] so many valuable lives, wasted property by millions, laid an arresting hand on many and varied forms of industry, and [illegible] not only [illegible] consternation, all around. Public buildings, palaces of commerce, temples of religion, banks, palatial residences, newspaper and telegraph offices, school-houses, almost everything of which the citizens of St. John felt proud, were all in a few hours laid in ruins." The account continues:

The loss of our hotels, churches, school-houses, [illegible] a thousand times more painful by the lamentable destruction of life accompanying it.

The fire was discovered in a building owned by Mr. Fairweather on the south side of York's Point slip, next to McLaughlin's [illegible]. To the latter building the [illegible] before the firemen had reached the scene. The engines [illegible] to stop the flames, but all efforts were in vain. Nothing could be done. The flames [illegible] on Hare's wharf, which were also quickly consumed, and the fire broke out with a roar into Smith street, carrying everything before it. From there the flames spread into Drury lane and Mill street, following that into Dock street, taking both sides. Ere this, however, the rear of the London House and adjacent buildings had been attacked. When it was seen that the first fire would inevitably sweep along Dock or Mill streets, aid came from Portland in the shape of the town engine [illegible] boxes on fire, [illegible] by the wind, proved a combination too much for the gallant workers, and, almost in despair, they saw the flames advance upon them, not slowly, but with a rapidity that appalled the stoutest hearts.

The Carleton engine came in on the ferryboat and lent its aid. One engine had been stationed at the corner of Mill and Union streets, while men with branches were down on Union street opposite Drury lane. The buildings were a mass of flames at the end of Smith street and Drury lane, and, while the workers were vainly endeavoring to have the fire end there, a momentary gale took the flames across Union street to the opposite houses, and then they receded, but their touch had been fatal, and in less than five minutes the buildings were doomed to destruction. Both sides of the street were soon in the grasp of the devouring element, and men were obliged to drop their branch-pipes and run up the street, after which they dragged the hose after them.

Another lot of men were working at the foot of Union street, and, by placing boards in front of their faces managed to battle with the flames until their clothing became singed.

Proceeding along Smith street in a southerly direction, the fire soon reached Nelson street, and then Robertson's place, then extended to Robertson's wharf, and then up North wharf. As it gained Nelson street on the south, it met the flames coming up that street, and the combination made a terrific heat that could not be borne. Allied with the strong wind from the northwest, it did not take long for the entire wharf to be in a blaze. Half a dozen wood-boats were at the head of Market slip, and at the end of the wharves about the same number of schooners.

Before the fire had assumed formidable shape on North wharf the men on the vessels began to pour pails of water on the decks. The water was low just then, and something like this was necessary to extinguish the sparks that were continually showering down upon them. Those at the head of the slip were, in a quarter of an hour, on fire in so many places that it was impossible for each outbreak to receive attention before the vessels had been well on fire. The flames passed above their masts, that soon offered a stepping-stone to the shops on South wharf. Not one of these west of Ward street was capable of withstanding the intense heat and sparks. All being of wood, they went down as if felled by a hurricane, the schooners in front having been hauled to a place of safety. Many of the occupants of stores were off helping their unfortunate brother merchants, and some arrived just in time to save their books. Others were just enabled to witness the destruction of their stock.

Some of the embers lodged in the steeple of Trinity Church, Germain street, and, with nothing to save it—for the fire was so high as to be almost beyond reach—the flames were left to pursue their own way.

As news spread that some wooden houses on Horsefield street, as well as others on Duke street, near the Victoria Hotel, were on fire, thousands were alarmed, as it was soon seen that this fire was spreading south and east to Germain, Charlotte, Duke and Horsefield streets. Not an engine was to be had, and everything was going down before the unrelenting fire. A building on Charlotte street had hardly become a prey to the flames when others on the other side followed. In half an hour all the Germain street side of the square was in ashes.

The buildings at the southern corner of Dock and Union streets and on the opposite corner caught almost simultaneously. To say that the fire raged fiercely here would but too faintly describe the terrible manner in which it kept on, unheeding streams of water directed upon it. The engine was obliged to shift its position from this quarter, the heat being most terrific. There was danger, too, of the hose being burned, and, of all things, the preservation of that was most essential. The engine was taken down Dock street, but the fire kept up its rapid pursuit. It also spread along the western part of Mill street, crossing over to the opposite side, and igniting Rankin & Sons' biscuit manufactory. Then, following onward toward North street from South wharf, the flames entered into Ward street and extended to Peters' wharf in a remarkably short space of time, carrying everything before them. Then they proceeded to Water street, and from thence soon made their way to the southern part of the Market square, making a jump up to Prince William street.

Then the flames advanced to Princess and King streets, and to Germain street.

The fire commenced at the York Point [illegible] south [illegible] street, where [illegible] the public buildings, hotels and the business portion of the [illegible] wharves. Great dread of starvation is felt, as not a grocery or provision store is left. Fifteen thousand persons are homeless. All the business portion of the town and fully one-half the residences are gone.

The following are among the list of public buildings burnt: Postoffice, Bank of New Brunswick, City Building, Custom House, Maritime Bank Building, in which are this bank, that of Montreal and Nova Scotia, office of the School Trustees, etc.; Bank of Nova Scotia, new buildings; Academy of Music, in which were the Knights of Pythias Hall; Victoria Hotel; Odd Fellows' Hall; No. 1 engine house; Orange Hall, King street; Temperance Hall, King street, East; Dramatic Lyceum; Victoria School House; Temple of Honor Hall; Barnes Hotel, Royal Hotel, St. John Hotel, the Acadia Hotel, the Brunswick House, Bay View Hotel, International Hotel; Wiggins' Orphan Asylum, Deaf and Dumb Institution.

Editorial Bulls.

Editors of newspapers have a good deal of fun over queer expressions in copy that comes before them, for reporters are compelled to write so hurriedly that they frequently compose sentences that are extremely funny.

A reporter once gravely stated that an inquest had been held over a child which "was one of a pair of triplets"—a statement that was almost as confusing as the assertion regarding a dead man, "that the places that knew him so long have known him no more ever since."

A writer was once ordered to write an article on an approaching election, and he announced that the "polls would be only open between the hours of sundown and sunset," which was rather short notice for the voters.

Another, in describing a "shooting scrape," stated that the wounded man had been hit by a ball in the head "near the corner of Broadway and Twenty-fifth street." That was as puzzling a problem in phrenology as the anatomical one contained in the statement that Dennis O'Rafferty had been "wounded in the fore-arm near the left shoulder."

Quite recently an evening paper stated that President Hayes went to Senator Sherman's residence on his arrival in Washington, "where a substantial breakfast and several of his intimate friends had been prepared for him." A cannibal President is not a very cheerful prospect for the office-seekers. Another paper stated that the new President had privately taken the oath of office in the presence of Chief Justice Waite, President Grant and Mr. Fish, who were absent. Now who were absent or who were present on that occasion must remain a mystery forever.

A police reporter, in concluding his account of a dreadful murder, made the astonishing statement that "the victim expired before making an ante-mortem statement."

Another knight of the pencil, in writing on the ice question, declared that "as for the thousand and one carts that go about the city peddling ice under the names of the Crystal Ice Company, etc., they have no existence except on the sides of the wagons." Now what had no existence, the carts or the companies, it is of course impossible to decide.

But reporters are not alone in making funny sentences, for at a recent Spiritualists' meeting in this city a medium rose and said he "was prepared to nail every skeptic to the mast-head." Unless to say that no skeptic presented himself for the execution of the direful threat.

In writing about an assault, a reporter stated that the assailant was arrested for striking a man who was driving a sleigh with a brick.—Harper's Magazine for July.

Split Away.

"I should like 'n oyster," said William Driscoll, a rather well-dressed but intoxicated young man, last Wednesday evening, as he staggered up to the counter of an oyster-saloon in Seventh avenue.

"Stew?" asked Henry Smith, who stood behind the counter hammering the bivalves.

"I want mor'n two; you just split 'em open and I'll eat 'em."

Accordingly Henry Split and William ate until, with tired arm and perspiring brow, the splitter laid down his weapon at the [illegible] oyster and [illegible].

"[illegible] kill yourself!" said he; "take a rest."

"Certainly take the rest; that's what I'll do; split away, young feller!"

"But," said Henry, hesitating, "suppose you pay me $1 on account, you know?"

William then became angry; he threw oyster-shells at Henry and kicked up a tremendous row. A policeman was called, and the roystering oyster-destroyer was locked up in a cell. In an hour Henry was avenged—William howled for a doctor; his supper did not agree with him.—New York World.

A Barber's Trouble.

A deserter from the United States army went into business as a barber in Oakland, Cal., and prospered. A former comrade recognized him, and extorted blackmail by threatening to expose him to the authorities. The barber paid regularly $5 a week for silence. Then the blackmailer took into the plot a friend, who, by similar threats, got $3 a [illegible] and the barber, seeing [illegible] pay-roll [illegible] to increase beyond his resources, resolved to kill off the recipients of his money. He shot one of them, was caught in the act, and is now in jail, where, awaiting prosecution, he is at least free from persecution.

Some one says the Russians sleep in their clothes. We should think it would destroy the [illegible].

McPARLAN'S JOB.

The Work of a Fearless Detective Among the Molly Maguires—Bringing Murderers to Justice.

[Pottsville (Pa.) Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

* * * In the fall of 1873, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, whose President, Franklin B. Gowen—also the President of the Reading railroad—had formerly been District Attorney of Schuylkill county, became fully convinced that these frequently-recurring outrages were the work of a criminal organization with far-reaching arms and adequately equipped with every possible means of screening the instruments of its nefarious deeds. They determined that the reign of terror must cease. Mr. Gowen had seen its work even while prosecuting officer of the county, and he knew that it could only be done by secret detectives, and that the detective who operated for rewards who was only paid upon the conviction of the offender, was not the man they needed. He had had experience before, and he applied to the National Detective Agency. Allan Pinkerton, an intelligent and broad-minded Scotchman, replied: "I will secure an agent or an officer to ferret out the existence of this society. Whoever I get is to be paid so much a week, no matter if he finds out nothing. He is bound to me never, under any circumstances, to take a reward for his services from anybody, and if he spends five years and obtains nothing in the way of information he must have every month or every week exactly the same compensation as if every week he had traced a new murder, and every month had discovered a new conspiracy. He is never to gain pecuniarily by the success of his undertaking; but, as a man who goes into this organization as a detective takes his life in his own hands, I will send no man on this mission of yours, Mr. Gowen, unless it be agreed beforehand, and I can tell him so, that he never is to be known in connection with the enterprise." On these terms was James McParlan engaged.

For a better understanding of the work that this intrepid man undertook, with his life in his hand, I will anticipate a little, in order to explain the working of this order. The Mollies date back to 1842—more than a generation. French's "Realities of Irish Life" speaks of them when they were known as the Ribbonmen of Ireland. This order sprang up at a time when there was an organized resistance in Ireland to the payment of rents. The malcontents became known as Ribbonmen, and they generally made their attacks upon the agents of the non-resident land-owners, or upon the constables or bailiffs who attempted to collect the rents. Their object was to intimidate and hold in terror all those to whom they owed money, or who were employed in its collection. As a branch of this society, and growing out of it, sprang the men known as Mollie Maguires, and the name of their society simply arose from this circumstance, that in the perpetration of their offenses they dressed as women, and generally ducked or beat their victims, or inflicted some such punishment as infuriated women would be likely to administer. Hence originated the name of the Mollie Maguires.

One of the first executions of members of this order was brought about in the same way as the executions of to-day—by the "squealing" of some of the accomplices—and, as the law was then in Ireland, the punishment of death was inflicted just as much for a conspiracy to murder as for the actual perpetration of the offense.

The order was first known in the coal regions as the Buckshots, and in 1863 the courts of Carbon county became powerless to execute their processes in certain cases, and to punish criminals who belonged to the Buckshots. This was during the war, and the military had to be called in aid of the civil authorities, and a military court was organized, called a military commission, which tried some of the offenders known as Buckshots.

There is no way of ascertaining when the Mollies succeeded in getting control of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, but McParlan discovered that this organization in four counties had no other purpose than revenge and murder, and it was pretty well shown that the order never had any other object in the coal regions.

Arriving in the county in October, 1873, he first stopped at the lower end, at Port Clinton, and then went all over the county, stopping from a week to a day in a place. Returning to Philadelphia for a fortnight at the end of November, he came back to Pottsville in December, and remained around about there until February, when he settled in Shenandoah. All this time he was forwarding a daily report to Supt. Ben. Franklin at Philadelphia. He joined the order in Shenandoah on Tuesday, April 14, 1874. The members meant business, and they did not have the order for show. They did not bother themselves about regalia, and such articles in the constitution or such by-laws as they had no use for they paid no attention to whatever. They paid their dues to the State order regularly, but they never paraded, never attended church, and never paid a cent for the furtherance of the ostensible objects of the society.

McParlan was finally discovered, and so all motive for keeping him off the witness-stand disappeared. He first took the stand in the trial of the Yost murderers in May, 1876. President Gowen, in his opening address to the jury in that trial, thus graphically described the result of MacParlan's testimony:

> Then we knew we were free men. Then we cared no longer for the Mollie Maguires. Then we could go to Patsy Collins, the Commissioner of this county, and say to him: "Build well the walls of the new addition of the prison; dig the foundations deep, and make them strong; put in good masonry and iron bars, for, as the Lord liveth, the time will come when, side by side with William Love, the murderer of 'Squire Gwither, you will enter the walls that you are now building for others." Then we could say to Jack Kehoe, the high constable of a great borough in this county: "We have no fear of you." Then we could say to Ned Monaghan, chief of police, and murderer and assassin: "Behind you the scaffold is prepared for your reception." Then we could say to Pat Conry, Commissioner of this county: "The time has ceased when a Governor of this State dares to pardon a Mollie Maguire—you have had your last pardon." Then we could say to John Slattery, who was almost elected Judge of this court: "We know that of you that it were better you had not been born than that it should be known."

This is a summary of the result of Detective McParlan's fearless work: About seventy person have been arrested in the coal region. Of those, twelve have been, by a jury of their countrymen, found guilty of murder in the first degree, four of murder in the second degree, and four of being accessory to murder, sixteen of conspiracy to murder, six of perjury, one of assault with intent to kill, eight of aiding and abetting a murder, one of assault and battery, one for aiding in the escape of a murderer, and several others of lesser crimes. The sum total of the time of these sentences to imprisonment foots up to 124 years and eight months. Eleven have received sentence of death.

A Burglar's Terrible Fate.

At about half-past 12 o'clock last night, as Mr. Casper Kuhn was approaching the store of Miss Mary Kuhn, his sister, on North Summer street, near Monroe, he noticed that the gas lamps on each side of the building had been turned down. This aroused his suspicions. He had no sooner entered the yard than he saw a man trying to bore through one of the shutters. Mr. Kuhn at once opened fire, and the burglar dashed out of the gate and along North Summer street. The pistol-shot had not been heard by policemen Broderick and Tindall, who were near the corner of Monroe and North Summer streets. As the burglar came dashing along, Officer Broderick ordered him to halt, and, the command not being obeyed, followed it with a shot. The man was then about ten yards off, and, as he came up, was collared by the two policemen.

The officers had hardly lightened their grip upon the prisoner before, as if by magic, they were surrounded by thirty or forty excited men. How they got there so quickly, the policemen say, is a puzzle to them. One of them, who had a handkerchief tied over the upper part of his face, said, fiercely: "This man is our meat." "No," put in Broderick, "he is ours; you must not interfere with officers of the law." "Give him to us, or you are dead men," demanded the unknown, and, as he spoke, his pistol was poked into Broderick's face. The officers saw that resistance was useless; they were overpowered, and understood that the crowd meant business.

In half the time it takes to write this, a rope was thrown over the burglar's head, and he was dragged off along North Summer, then down Madison street to the river. Dr. Haggard followed the lynchers, but was warned off when he reached the bluff. He distinctly heard a loud shriek, a splash, and then all was quiet. The burglar had met his fate in the Cumberland.—Nashville (Tenn.) American.

A Big Invention.

A patent has just been granted Loring Pickering, one of the editors and proprietors of the Evening Bulletin and Morning Call, of San Francisco, for a method of rapid telegraphing of fac similes of stereotype plates. It is claimed that by the process an entire page of newspaper can be transmitted by telegraph in from fifteen to thirty minutes, delivering the copy directly from the instrument in such form that it can be handed immediately to the printers. In other words the copy will be a substantial reproduction of the original except that it may be given in larger sized letters if so desired. The stereotype requires no preparation for the purpose of telegraphic transmission other than the filling of its depressions or spaces between the faces of the letter with a non-conducting substance, which may be quickly applied, the faces of the type being left clean by means of an equally simple process. The plate thus prepared is placed upon a cylinder, arranged to revolve rapidly, so as to present each successive letter to fingers attached to the traveling frame. As the cylinder bearing the plate revolves, the frame gradually advances by the operation of a screw, and thus each and every line is successively presented to the fingers or magnetic points mentioned. Necessarily the circuit is open when the points are passing over the non-conducting surface, but as often as the metal type presents itself to said fingers the circuit is closed, and the corresponding magnetic points or pens at the receiving station make the record there on the same letter as the original, delineated in a series of fine lines, either upon chemically prepared or ordinary paper fixed on a corresponding cylinder at said receiving station.

Hobart Pasha.

I saw at the hotel last night Admiral Hobart Pasha, the real life and heart of the Ottoman navy. He called to pay his respects to Capt. Gambier, of the navy, now of the Times corps of correspondents, and a former chum. He is a man certainly 50 years of age. He is rather short in stature, but compactly built and lithe in his movements. He was dressed last night in a plain black suit, buttoned-up frock coat, and he wore the simple red fez which is the indispensable adjunct of the Turkish official. He carried in his hand a little stick, a sort of dog-whipper. His complexion is sallow, his whiskers are gray and stubbly, his hair, which grows well down his neck, is tinged with silver, and his tout ensemble is that of a well-conditioned Pasha. No one passing him in the street would suspect his English origin, the orange color of the face and the fez effectually hiding the traces of Anglo-Saxon blood and breeding. There was a depressed look about his gray eyes. His manner is short, abrupt and full of nervous energy. In conversation you have scarcely finished a sentence before he is ready with his reply. I should take him for a man of wonderful executive ability, but then his naval training and years of arbitrary will may give him that seeming decision of character which so promptly captivates all.—Constantinople Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

Dr. David Livingstone, a nephew and namesake of the explorer, is living in San Francisco. The only other near relatives of the traveler are a brother John, who lives at Listowell, Ontario; a son Oswald, a physician in Trinidad, West Indies; an unmarried daughter, Anna Mary, who is finishing her education in Germany; and a married daughter, Mrs. Bruce, who lives in England.

SERVIA AND AUSTRIA.

What May Possibly Follow the Declaration of Servian Independence.

The Chicago Tribune, discussing the situation in Europe, says: "It is not impossible that a new element will arise in the Eastern complication that may lead to a general war, growing out of the manifest determination of Servia to follow in the steps of Roumania, and sever her connection with Turkey. Notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the Czar and Prince Gortschakoff to keep Servia quiet and neutral, it now looks as if she would declare her independence, and prepare to maintain it by force, as soon as the Russians are over the Danube. It is no secret, also, that at the recent meeting of the Czar and Prince Milan at Ploesti an arrangement was concluded allowing the Russians passage across Servian territory, if they desire to approach Turkish soil from that direction. Any movement which tends to draw Servia into the conflict, which threatens to change her relations toward Turkey, and constitute her an independent Slavonic state, or which indicates the possibility even of an occupation by Russia, must of necessity involve Austria in the struggle and compel her to occupy Bosnia, Herzegovina and Servia as far as the valley of Morava, thus realizing the cherished dream of her millions of discontented Sclavos of uniting these principalities in one grand Sclavonic empire. The mobilization of the Austrian troops in Transylvania and on the Servian frontier, which has already been decided upon, is an unmistakable indication of Austria's policy and of the predominance of the Sclavic element in her councils.

"And what then? Will Austrian occupation localize the war in Bulgaria, or will it increase its area and drag in other powers? Will Russia consent to this occupation, and, if she objects, how far is she able to oppose it? The answers to these questions undoubtedly depend upon Germany, and what response the sphinx in the spiked helmet will make no one can foresee. Russia certainly will not care to encounter Austria and Turkey combined, while if Germany sides with Russia for the sake of securing the German provinces of Austria, most certainly England must side with Austria, or at least oppose Russia, for the sake of securing Egypt and the Suez canal, which, in turn, must antagonize the Mediterranean states, whose interests might be menaced by English monopoly of the canal. It is evident that it only needs the match to fire the material which has been heaped up for a general conflagration. The success of Russia does not depend altogether upon the issues of the battle-field. She not only has to cut her way through the Turkish forces and fortresses, but she must follow a very tortuous diplomatic path without treading upon the interests of other powers, which are as thickly strewn in it as torpedoes in the Russian harbors. If she can localize the war and confine it to Bulgaria on the one hand and Armenia on the other, there can be no doubt of the result. A very slight misstep, however, like the Servian complication to which we have alluded, may precipitate Austria, Germany, Italy, and even France, into a struggle whose duration and final catastrophe no one can foresee."

The Burned City of St. John.

Canada, during the past few weeks, seems to have been specially unfortunate in the losses of towns by fire, but the St. John conflagration is the most serious of all, as the destruction was complete. In the other localities something was left; in this, all the business and half the residence was lost. It must prove a very disastrous blow not only to the city itself, but also to the business interests of New Brunswick, as it is the most important commercial city in that part of the Canadian Dominion, and is the center of a large trade with Portland and Boston on the one hand by steamers, and with Halifax on the other by rail. Its chief export is of lumber, which finds its way to Great Britain, the West Indies, and the United States. It is also a ship-building center, and, as a manufacturing city, possesses considerable importance. Its business relations with Boston are very intimate—so much so, in fact, that many Americans have gone there and opened business, and are now among the heaviest losers. The harbor of St. John is one of the finest on the American continent. The city, including its suburbs, has a population of nearly, if not quite, 50,000. It is—or was until nearly obliterated by fire—a well-built city of brick and stone, with wide, clean streets, running at right angles, lighted with gas. St. John was originally founded by American loyalists, who left the United States at the close of the Revolutionary war. It was chartered in 1785.

About Kissing.

It is not considered a la mode for a lady to bestow a kiss upon one of the rougher sex, except in leap year, when, according to theory, if not to the uses of strict etiquette and propriety, we are told it is excusable. Our fair friends, however, with few exceptions are not by any means without partiality for this method of salutation, and we have heard young gentlemen loud in their complaints about the tantalizing practice of ladies kissing babies and one another in the presence of gentlemen, who long themselves to be so favored. It is Moore, we think, who sings thus:

"I never give a kiss," says Prue,
"To naughty man, for I abhor it."
She will not give a kiss, 'tis true—
She'll take one, though, and thank you for it!

The only animal that knows how to kiss is man. Dogs lick their masters and bears their ragged cubs, cats their kittens, while donkeys and the Esquimaux rub noses, cows and horses fondle each others' necks and heads, love-birds, pigeons, and other birds, nestle together, and have methods of their own of showing affection peculiar to each, but none of these creatures kiss. Even low-class savages do not kiss like civilized men; so that we may take this habit and function to be actual evidence of intellect and civilization, which is a pleasant idea at any rate.—Appletons' Journal for July.

A Fire-Defier.

A Frenchman named Buvert has invented what seems to be a highly-successful dress for defying fire. It is believed to be chiefly formed of sponge, which is soaked just before use. The portion which covers the head is sufficiently large to contain the air necessary for breathing while the operator is at work. M. Buvert rolled over red-hot coal without apparently experiencing any inconvenience, and it is believed that the dress might be of great value in enabling the wearers to save valuables at fires.

FIREFLIES.

I saw, one sultry night, above a swamp,
The darkness throbbing with their golden pomp!
And long my dazzled sight did they entrance
With the bright chaos of their dizzy dance.
Quicker than yellow leaves, when gales despoil,
Quivered the brilliance of their mute turmoil,
Within whose light was intricately blent
Perpetual rise, perpetual descent.
As though their scintillant flickerings had met
In the vague meshes of some airy net!
And now mysteriously I seemed to guess,
While watching their tumultuous loveliness,
What fervor of deep passion strangely thrives
In the warm richness of these tropic lives,
Whose wings can never tremble but they show
The hearts of living fire that beat below!

The Johannisbrod, a black bread used so largely by the Russian army for food, is made with a quantity of some kind of grease, which forms a substitute for butter. It can be eaten dry; but the Russian soldier prefers, when he can get it, to break the bread into small pieces. These he puts into a bowl and pours hot water over them. The grease then develops into a gravy, and the whole forms a simple kind of soup.

Hold up that flower that is thy face,
Fresh, fair and fragrant, unto mine,
And bless me with its tender grace,
Dearer than that immortal wine
Which Hebe, cup-bearer to Jove,
Held up with two rose-touched hands—
Sweet heralds of the sweeter love
That winged her feet at his commands!
But let these hands, so full of charms,
Hold up to me no other boon,
But just themselves; and let those arms
Wreathe round me soft and swift and soon!
Hold up that flower that is thy face,
Its sweetness consecrate to me.
What was Jove's throne and its high place
To this rare right I hold in thee,
Since I may call thy face my flower,
And know my mouth its honey-bee?

A Question of Cuticle.

"An old club fogy" reminds the London Truth that when Puckler Muskau was in England some forty years since, being one night at Almack's, he personally complimented Lady Jersey, who was pardonably vain of the clearness of her complexion, on "her beautiful leather."

The fair lady stared.

"Pardon," resumed Puckler Muskau, "I did mean your Ladyship's beautiful hide."

"Skin, your Highness, skin," whispered a friend to the Prince.

"I did not say shin," retorted the Prince in a most dignified manner. "Shentlemans do not look at ladies' shins."

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 5, 1877.

What They Say of Us.

From the Warsaw Indianian.

Dr. Rerrick is conceded to be the champion trapeze performer of the editorial fraternity.

We met many of our editorial brethren whom we have not seen for several years, and were glad to take them by the hand again.

Tom Mays and Hooper furnished the music on the way over to Pleasant Lake, and in this respect far excelled the brass band.

The moonlight ride on Pleasant Lake was decidedly fine, and gotten up at an hour, too, that did not interfere with the business of the convention in the least.

The best of feeling prevailed amour the various publishers, and there seemed to be a general desire to do something to advance the interests of the profession.

The Swineford House at Auburn, is the best hotel for a town of its size that we have ever known. Everything is new, nice, comfortable, pleasant and agreeable. What more can be said.

The Angola Ladies' Trombone Band, is an institution of which that town may feel proud. It is composed of young ladies rangiug in age from fourteen to twenty, and they have arrived at a very fair state of musical perfection. The only difficulty we see is that its members may marry and thereby make vacancies too common.

From the Rochester Sentinel.

Auburn is situated on the Detroit and Eel River road, and near the junction of the Jackson & Srginaw and Baltimore and Ohio railroads. It is in the midst of a rich farming country and being devoid of any extensive manufacturing establishments is mainly supported by its agricultural interest. The town contains a population of about 2,000, chiefly acquired within the past five years. The prosperity of the place demonstrates the business qualities and enterprise of its citizens. It has a goodly number of substantial business houses and one of the best hotels—the Swineford—to be found in northern Indiana. The Court House was built about fifteen years ago, and although the architectural design is of the plain and ancient order, yet it is large and meets the demands of the county. The county jail is of more recent construction, and is a monument of beauty and practical utility. Its exterior is a marvel of cleanliness and modern architecture To be incarcerated within its walls would seem to be a pleasure, aside from the repulsive thought of restrained liberty.

In the matter of churches and school buildings, Auburn takes rank with more pretentious towns and cities of the State. It is also favored with two well conducted newspapers—the COURIER, by T. C. Mays, and the Repulican, by R. H. Weamer. Both are six Column quartos and are deserving of the liberal patrnage they receive. To those gentlemenly newspaper men the editorial brotherhood assembled there on the 6th and 7th are indebted for the many comforts and pleasures they enjoyed. By their management the courtesies of the Jackson & Saginaw railroad were extended by Mr. S. K Hooper, General Ticket Agent on that road, for an excursion to Pleasant Lake, in Steuben county. Leaving Auburn at 5 o'clock p. m. on Thursday, an hour's ride through a beautiful country brought us to the little town and the lake so appropriately named. The town is small, likewise the lake, but it afforded every advantage for the pleasure and comfort of the quill driving squad and the ladies accompanying them. By the kindness of Mr. V. E. Simmons, proprietor of the well arranged grounds adjoining the lake, the steamboat and numerous other lake-going crafts, the party was permitted to enjoy them at will. The Auburn Band accompanied the excursion, and added much to the pleasure of the trip by its excellent music. At Pleasant Lake was also a ladies' band, from Angola, who were present to do honor to the visitors with their delightful music. The Band comprised eight members, all ladies except the leader. Moonlight boat rides and games of all kinds were indulged in for several hours, when all repaired to the large summer house within the park, where to the soft floating strains of the violin upon moonlight air, tripped the light fantastic toe until low 12 at night, the hour for returning to Auburn. Friday was profitably spent in the business of the convention, and in the evening all departed for their homes better prepared for their usual duties and feeling that the time was well and pleasantly spent with the good and accommodating people of Auburn.

From the Plymouth Democrat.

The fourteenth annual session of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association, met at Auburn, DeKalb county, on Thursday and Friday of last week, the proceeding of which are published elsewhere. Believing it to be the duty of publishers to aid and strengthen this association by all means in their power, we carefull inventoried our passes, and finding them satisfactory, resolved to attend. Through the courtesy of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois railroad, all editors in the southern and western part of the district were passed both ways over the road. This line which reaches from Logansport to Butler, on the Michigan Southern railroad, passes through a finely timbered region, which will, before many years, be a rich agricultural country. The business of the road is rapidly increasing, under its present excellent management.

Auburn is blessed with three railroads—the Detroit & Eel River, the Ft. W. J. & S., and the Baltimore & Ohio. The town has greatly improved since it became a railroad center; but it is so completely environed with other towns near by—Garrett City being but three miles away, and Waterloo but five—that it cannot hope to be a large city. The court house is a plain, substantial brick structure. The jail is built on the modern plan, and is about all that could be desired for the purpose. The Swineford House, is a comfortable hotel where good fare is dispensed at reasonable rates.

Thursday evening, by invitation of the Saginaw railway managers, an excursion was taken to Pleasant Lake, fifteen miles north of Auburn, the company being taken care of in the best manner possible by Mr. S. K. Hooper, the gentlemanly passenger agent, who spared no effort to furnish amusement and entertainmnet for the company. Capt. Simmons, the proprietor of the grounds at Pleasant Lake, has fitted up the grounds in admirable order for the convenience of pic-nics and pleasure parties of all kinds. A steamer and a large number of row boats are let to visitors. A large dancing hall gives those who indulge in such sport, ample opportunity to gratify their wishes. The excursionists were accompanied by the Auburn Cornet Band, and were met at the lake by the Ladies' Trombone Band, of Angola, and many other citizens. Dancing and other means of enjoyment were indulged in until a late hour, when the party returned to Auburn, well pleased with their visit. The association met at an early hour Friday morning, and continued in session until the afternoon, when the members had to leave for home.

Tom Mays, of the COURIER, and Mr. Weamer, of the Republican, were successful in their efforts to make the stay of the editors pleasant and profitable. The next meeting of the association will be held at Rome City.

From the Warsaw Repulican.

The arrangements for the social part of the meeting were about perfect; and for this Bros. T. C. mays, of the COURIER, and R. H. Weamer, of the Republican, deserves special credit. On Thursday Mr. Mays introduced S. K. Hooper, Esq., general passenger agent of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Sarinaw railroad, who tendered the use of a special car to the Association for an excursion to Pleasant Lake that evening. The courtesy was accepted and at 6 o'clock p. m. the members left on a special train, in charge of Mr. Hooper, on one of the pleasantest pic-nic excursions we ever enjoyed. Mr Hooper was the right man in the right place. Good natured, accommodating, careful and just boiling over with fun, he made a special friend of every member of the Association by his gentlemanly conduct during the trip. We earnestly hope that we may meet him on many such occasions. Capt. Simmons, the proprietor of the club house and boats was also equal to the emergency and provided every facility for the enjoyment of the company in boat riding, dancing, croqet, etc., till 11 o'clock, when all returned to Auburn, delighted with the trip and all that had contributed to make it enjoyable. Pleasant Lake is becoming a very popular place of resort during the summer months. On Friday the convention adjourned, to meet at Rome City on the second Thursday in June, 1878. The Detroit, Eel River & Illinois railroad, through their Superintendent, Mr. Frank J Hecker, of Logansport, extended favors to editors who had to travel over that road that would indicate that the managers are not of the grasping, selfish kind that expect everything from the press and concede nothing. Auburn is quite a lively place, containing 2,000 inhabitants, and boasts the finest jail in Northern Indiana, two good papers, good schools, court house band, churches and secret societies, a good cornet band, pleasant people and good hotel—the Swineford House. Taken all together the editoral convention of 1877 was a pleasant affair in a pleasant place.

From the Goshen Democrat.

The social part of the meeting deserves a separate reference, and Mr. T. C. Mays, of the Courier, and R. H. Weamer, of the Republican, spared no pains to make all of their visitors feel perfectly contented while there. On Thursday evening, the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad company placed a special car at the service of the convention to take an excursion to Pleasant Lake, up in Steuben county. They also sent the general ticket agent, Mr. S. K. Hooper, of Jackson, Michigan, to accompany the excursion there and back. And no better man could have been selected if they had ransacked all creation. He is one of the best natured and liveliest fellows, except Tom Mays, we ever met. He made a host of friends for himself and the road he represents, by his gentlemanly conduct and bearing on this occasion. We earnestly hope he will be present at the editorial excursion to Rome City this season. He will be made an honorary member if he will only come. The evening was spent at the Lake in boat riding, dancing, croquet, &c., till about 11 o'clock, when the company returned back to Auburn. Capt. Simmons, the proprietor of the club house and boats, extended a free invitation to the fraternity. It is one of the finest resorts in that part of the State, and parties from all parts of the country are flocking there almost daily through the summer months. The Detroit, Eel River and Illinois road, represented by Frank J. Hecker, General Superintendent at Logansport, extended favors, which were highly appreciated by the editors who had to come on that line of road. Auburn contains about 2,000 inhabitants, has a very fine jail, tolerable court house, bank, good schools, about all the secret societies, two good papers, and as good a hotel—the Swineford house—as there is in Northern Indiana.

From the Kendallville Standard.

The Northern Indiana Editorial Convention held at Auburn last Thursday and Friday, was a very pleasant and profitable meeting, and was largely attended by the editorial fraternity. The discussion of subjects connected with the publishing business, in a social gathering of this character, cannot help but be of service to any one, no matter how long they have been in the business, and the meeting last week was of more than usual interest, owing, doubtless, to the large attendance.

The members are under obligations to Messrs. Mays and Weamer, of Auburn, for their efforts to secure a full attendance.

Suits for slander seem to be on the increase. We noticed last week one between Philips and Baxter, and now comes our old friend Sol Boyer, of Fairfield, with the same complaint, against our excellent fellow citizen, Adam Deetz. We have always regarded it as a huge joke when newspapers are parties to these suits, but when two of our best farmers lock horns in an affair of this kind it looses its humorous phase, and looks serious.

The Toledo "Bee" says: The express robbers arrested last Friday night, near Ligonier, were arraigned Tuesday morning at Albion, plead guilty, were put on the stand and confessed the conspiracy. They stated that they had been organized eighteen months for the purpose of committing depredations of like character. They had arranged to fire a hotel in Ligonier, and during the attending excitement rob the bank at that place. Owing to some untoward circumstances, they failed to do the job. They put a tie upon the track some six months ago with the intention of ditching the train near Elkhart and then robbing the express, but tne pilot of the engine having thrown the tie off they made a failure of that attempt. "Old Jarvis," as he is familiarly called, is one of the celebrities of Whitley county. He has a passion for exhortation, and will travel miles at the dead hour of night in order to be present and hold forth to the assembled multitude. He is an "old liner" in his theology and believes in the good old Methodist doctrine of eternal burning for ever and ever. Not long since he was addressing an audience that did not respond to his sentiments with that alacrity he expected, and after appeal upon appeal, they were unmoved. Then in stentarian voice he broke forth as follows: "My dear hearers, you may think that Old Jarvis wants to come it, Old Jarvis don't want to come it. He is here as one of Christ's recruiting officers, and if you don't want to enlist under the blood-stained banner of King Immanuel, you can go to h—l, so far as Old Jarvis is concerned.

The Fourth.

The celebration of the first anniversary of the second century of American Independence, passed very pleasantly yesterday. There was not a large crowd here, and this gave our juveniles a wide berth, and we must say, they did enjoy themselves to the greatest extent. We went over to Newville and listened to one of the finest orations we have heard for many a day. Rev. Mr. Hendrix, the orator, has about the greatest command of language, for a man of his size, we ever saw. His treatment of the subject of government was brilliant and exhaustive, and showed great research and perfect familiarty with the subject. His closing words on the perpetuity of our national existence were grandly eloquent. He speaks very rapidly, too much so, but we suppose this come from an effort to keep up with the rapidity of thought of an active mind. No short hand reporter could ever follow him and get every word. Half the number of words now used in a given time, would add much impressiveness to his polished manner. The celebration was a grand success, and the best of order prevailed. The game of ball between the Spencerville and Newville clubs was witnessed by a large number. A little more animation would have proved interesting. The former won by a score of about 20 to 40. Our excellent friend, Hathaway, of the hotel, was full to the eyes in business, and his facilities were well nigh exhausted in taking care of his guests. He keeps a good house, and is a pleasant, clever gentleman. At Butler, the attendance was not so large, but everybody seemed to be enjoying themselves. At Waterloo, the races were the great attraction, and proved quite interesting. There will be no races there to-day.

The Difference.

The family that don't take a newspaper, is always more ignorant than the family that does take a newspaper. You can in any crowd or company observe the difference, for the members of a family that does take a newspaper are always talking about something that the members of the family that don't take a newspaper know nothing about and are all the time asking questions and seeking some information which is familiar to newspaper readers. All newspaper readers are more or less posted about every thing of public importance that transpires at home or abroad. But nothing shows the relative value of newspapers, better than the relative intelligence among newspaper readers. When one reader is possessed of important intelligence that another reader is not, it shows that he has access to the best newspaper. Nothing so clearly demonstrates the competency of a journalist and his rare qualifications for his high calling than the amount of intelligence he daily or weekly or monthly scatters among his readers. Knowledge is the legitimate fruit of his profession, and there can be no such amount of knowledge gained for so small amount as the subscription price of a good newspaper. It is brain answering to brain on a sort of spiritual telegraphy along which thoughts and ideas run continually, raising the standard of human intelligence and fitting the human family for a yet higher destiny.

A writer, and one who is good authority too, says, never take "come and see me" as a phrase meant in earnest, unless it be accompanied with a date—such an invitation amounts to nothing at all. If a lady or gentleman desires your company he or she will appoint a time for your visit. "Call on me when you can make it convenient," "Drop in as you are passing," "make us a visit whenever you have an hour or two to spare," are social ambiguities by which men and women of the world understand that they are not expected to do the thing requested. When people wish to be cheaply polite there is nothing like this kind of vagueness. The complimentary small change of society must always be taken at a large discount. It is never worth its face value or anything like it. Yet it is a convenient medium of exchange, and heavy debts of gratitude that ought to be acquitted in better coin are often paid with it. People who have more polish than principle use it lavishly, plain, blunt, honest men and women, sparingly or not at all. Whoever makes a friendly visit to a fashionable house on the strength of a mere "come and see me" will often find that the family circle he has dropped into by request is as ungenial as the Arctic circle, and he will probably leave it with a chilly feeling that will prevent him from venturing into the same high latitude again. But when a whole-souled man, or woman grasps you vigorously by the hand and says, "come and dine with me to-day, dinner on the table at five o'clock, be sure to come, we shall expect you," you can take it as certain that your presence is warmly desired. It is pleasant always to make or receive a visit from a friend, but a nod on the street is all sufficient from a fashionable acquaintance.

Wool is still coming into this market in fair quantities. We apprehend, however, that nearly all the wool is sold and that the market will be considered closed before long. With the good flush prices paid by our wool-buyers in Auburn, and the reasonably good quantity raised hereabouts, the people in this vicinity have been helped to a very appreciable extent in money matters.

TO TEACHERS.

A Normal School.

We repeat the announcement that on the 10th inst. we shall organize, in this place, a Normal School to continue six weeks.

No pains will be spared to make this school NORMAL in all that the name implies. The work has been planned with exclusive reference to the wants of teachers, and of those expecting to teach. By visiting, we have endeavored to acquaint ourselves as perfectly as possible with the wants of the common school teachers of DeKalb county, and to these wants special attention will be given in the work of the school.

In addition to classes in all the common school branches we shall also sustain one in "Primary Methods." This last will be, to some extent, a novelty, and will be of invaluable benefit to those teachers who will have more or less primary work to do. The methods presented will be those sanctioned by the ablest educators in the state, and used in the training schools of our State Normal School.

PECULIARITIES.

(1) Our classes will discuss "subjects" rather than "text-books."

(2) We shall approach each subject "from the standpoint of the teacher."

(3) The nature of our instruction shall be our best exponent of the theories that we hold.

(4) Should the attendance at the Normal be large enough to warrant the expense, we shall employ a professional primary teacher to carry on a "normal primary school" in connection with the Normal, so that those attending may have the opportunity to observe the practical working of the best methods of the time.

BOARDING.

Board can be obtained in private families at very reasonable rates; also rooms for self-boarding. Assistence in finding boarding places will cheerfully be given upon application.

TEXT-BOOKS.

Bring such as you have.

TUITION.

Five dollars in advance.

The school will be conducted in the new school building.

For further particlars send to C. P. Houser, Auburn, for circular.

The Doctors and Lawyers appeared upon the diamond field in a game of base ball last Monday, and a large crowd gathered to witness the fun. And it was fun, to see the brilliant playing of both nines. Davenport was chosen shortstop and said he knew his position well. He was afterwards found in the center field where he did some most delightful muffing. Moody made a home run, passing two men on bases who remained where they were not having the wind that D. D. developed. A fly ball struck Doc. Casebeer square in the hands, nearly knocking him down. Doc. Allen was a beauty in the left field, and did some fine under throwing to the bases. Doc. Collar made every base at one run, and would have been put out but that the ball had to go about three times farther than he, as by superb throwing they missed every base. John Davis sent the ball in from right field every time about half way to second baseman. It is estimated that he can throw a ball twenty yards without straining, and we believe it. On second inning Lockwood took 2d base where he was left on former inning, and he squealed because they would not let him stay. Doc. Littlefield struck out four times and made five tallies, making two at one batting, by going around twice. Spooner made a splendid bat and started for third base, utterly ignoring the other two. Doc. Ford was the best general player in the crowd, but didn't know it. The game was checked by rain, and is to be began again next Monday.

Just why horses and mules shall not have the freedom of the town, when cows, which are a thousand times more filthy, are running at large, we cannot understand. While there is no objection to their running at large in fields and bottoms, they should be kept up at night.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

GROVE BETHEL, IND., July 1, 1877.

The following preamble and resolutions of respect and condolence were adopted by Grove Bethel Sabbath School:

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, Death has removed from our midst our much loved and respected Sabbath School companion, Ada J. Essig, thereby casting a gloom over us which is deep and lasting; and,

WHEREAS, We deeply regret and mourn the decease of our beloved friend, a friend whose worth is known to all of her companions, and whose kindness and sympathy were alike blended with ours and knit to us by a tie which only death has severed; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we collectively, each and every one as her Sabbath School companions, bow submissively to the will of God, who, in His all-seeing wisdom, has deemed it proper to remove from us by the hand of death, although her demise causes the genuine tear of friendship to flow unrestrained.

Resolved, That we sympathize most sincerely with the friends and relatives of our deceased companion, in their bereavement, and would inform them that their sorrow is in unison with ours, and as sincere, though it may not be so deep; and when in future years we look back and recall the pleasant and happy hours we had together before her demise from our midst, we can but cherish with fond recollections her memory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to the Auburn papers for publication, and that copies of the same be forwarded to the friends of the deceased.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Tourist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. THE TWO SERPENTS.

An Oriental Fable.

[illegible], the Sultan, put his son
With Saib, the wise; and, when the boy was done
With studious tasks, it was the teacher's way
To weave for him some moral tale each day.
One evening when the hour had come around,
This tale he told—in Persian annals found:

"Once a magician, skilled in every art,
Meeting King Lohak, breathed upon his heart;
When from that region, venomous and bright,
Two hideous serpents wriggled forth in sight.
The King, who saw them follow in his path,
[illegible] the magician with his fiercest wrath;
But he, undaunted, answered back again:
'These are the tokens of your glorious reign;
And, if you wish [illegible] good,
Fail not to feed them well with human blood;
Give them your sturdiest men in sacrifice
For their suppers—say this is just and wise.'
The King, at first, grew pale when this was said,
But by degrees to the result was led,
And scattered slaughter till tumultuous fear
Smote all his stricken subjects far and near.
At length his people, seeing so many slain,
Revolted at the King's bloodthirsty reign,
And locked him in a cavern far away.
[illegible]"

"O history horrible!" the young Prince said.
"What could have put such [illegible] in his head?
Now tell another tale more fair, I pray,
That I with shuddering may not end the day."
"[illegible]," said Saib, "and, when 'tis done,
You will confess it is a simple one:

"Once on a time a young Sultan was led
To heed all things an artful courtier said,
Who charmed him with delusions that were rife
With all the [illegible] of sinful life—
With dreams of glory and imagined joy,
And things that dazzle only to annoy.
Pride and [illegible] performed their part
Till they became joint rulers of his heart;
And, held by them, above his people's [illegible]
He walked, until they snatched him from the throne.
Still, though he lost his crown, Pleasure and Pride
Clung, like two adders perched upon his side,
Till, sinking down within their coiling snare,
He died, at length, of sorrow and despair."

Then said the Prince, when Saib paused for rest,
"Untrue or true, I like this tale the best."
"Alas!" said Saib, "why do you thus exclaim?
Better or not—both stories are the same!"

THE LADY OF LAROSE.

Not many years ago the gay world of Paris was excited by a strange and romantic affair. Emilie Lamont, a young lady with a splendid fortune, and highly accomplished in mind and manners, announced to the world that she would bestow her hand and fortune upon any gentleman who pleased her, but that he must be willing, in consideration of her wealth and other attractions, to put up with a face of unparalleled ugliness. A certain time each day was appointed to receive the suitors at Larose, Mademoiselle's beautiful residence in the vicinity of Paris.

Among the first who responded to the singular announcement was Sir Charles Dashington, a young Englishman of noble family, who had squandered a princely fortune in the gaming-houses of the dissipated capital of France. He eagerly seized upon the opportunity to mend his broken fortunes, and to establish himself again in the world of pleasure. Dashington was possessed of that beauty of form and face which attracts the gaze of artists and wins the love of women. His self-conceit led him to suppose that no woman could resist him; and he thought it only necessary to present himself before the Lady of Larose in order to win her hand, and, what he valued more, her fortune. With this object in view he attired himself in a magnificent suit of clothes, hired a carriage, and proceeded in dashing style in search of wealth and a wife.

It was a delicious day in June, and the gardens and grounds of Larose presented a scene of ravishing beauty to the eyes of Sir Charles Dashington, who looked upon himself as soon to be "monarch of all he surveyed." After a drive of a quarter of an hour through winding roads, bordered with sweet and brilliant flowers, and through shady and cool groves, the superb villa of Larose burst upon his enraptured sight. As he drove up he was met by a servant in handsome livery, who conducted him through an elegant marble gallery into the spacious reception-room.

The matchless splendor of this apartment dazzled the eyes of Sir Charles Dashington. The floor was composed of exquisite mosaics, wrought into quaint and curious patterns; the walls were beautifully frescoed after the manner of Raphael; before the crimson-tinted windows hung purple silk curtains, which trembled in the vibration of low, melancholy music, whose origin could not be discovered; tables of pearl and agate were placed in different parts of the room, some of them loaded with richly-bound books, and others having on them gorgeous vases of flowers, whose odor pervaded the whole apartment. In one corner stood a massive cabinet containing curiosities, and surmounted with busts of celebrated authors, among whom the Englishman was pleased to see Shakspeare crowned with immortelles.

While he was admiring the splendid saloon, a door glided softly back, and Emilie was announced. Dashington rose and advanced to meet the person who entered. He was prepared to see a face ugly, indeed, but when his eyes fell upon the frightful features of the lady he shrank back with an exclamation of horror. Her lips were withered and bloodless; her eyes were sunk deep in their sockets; her large and misshapen nose was a revolting object; and her skin was as dry and yellow as an Egyptian mummy.

Without appearing to notice Dashington's embarrassment, Emilie welcomed him to Larose in a few sweetly-spoken words; and, to his surprise, she spoke in English, with a slight but charming accent; for among many accomplishments of this singular creature was a perfect knowledge of the modern languages. Sir Charles was somewhat reassured by her kind welcome and winning voice; and he succeeded in overcoming, or at least concealing, the disgust which the horrible ugliness of her face first occasioned. After a long preliminary conversation he ventured to approach the subject which had brought him to Larose.

"Mademoiselle," he said, with a bow, "if I did not know that the Garden of Eden was in Asia, I should think that I had found it to-day in your delicious retreat."

"Sir Charles Dashington is pleased to flatter my poor Larose."

"Mademoiselle, it is no flattery; the beauty and splendor of your grounds far surpass all my expectations. Oh, how dream-like my life would be, passed in this lovely spot! With a congenial companion to share its sweets, this place would be a paradise on earth."

"What do you mean by a congenial companion?" Emilie asked.

"One who possesses an appreciating love of nature; one who finds a greater delight in books than in balls; one who prefers meditation and study to the frivolities of modern society."

"You say nothing of beauty; is not that a requisite?" demanded Emilie, who saw the serpent lurking beneath his flowery language.

"Give me the lasting beauties of the mind, and I care not for the fading beauties of a pretty face," cried Dashington.

Soon after this interview terminated, and Sir Charles rose to depart. Emilie told him he should hear from her in a week.

"I shall expect your communication with impatience," said Dashington, bowing himself from the room.

As he crossed the long gallery to reach his carriage he muttered, in a sufficiently loud tone to be overheard by a servant who had kept close behind him:

"What a monster! But for the gold that gilds her hideous face, I never could have gone through the interview. But her manners are easy and elegant, and her voice—how can such sweet sounds proceed from such repulsive lips?"

Those remarks were duly reported to Emilie Lamont, and they were not likely to advance Sir Charles Dashington's suit. Inquiries were instituted about his habits and prospects, and nothing very favorable to that gentleman was elicited. The consequence was that one evening, as Dashington was preparing to go to one of his accustomed haunts of vice, the following note was placed in his hand:

"Mademoiselle Emilie Lamont begs leave to say to Sir Charles Dashington that he need not take the trouble to repeat his visit to Larose."

This unexpected termination of his suit destroyed all Dashington's hopes of retrieving his position, and to "avoid the wrath that was to come" from tailors, shoemakers and other creditors, he fled from Paris to Baden, where he soon afterward lost his life in a gambling quarrel with a Russian nobleman.

The novel announcement of Emilie Lamont continued to attract many persons to Larose. All admired the beautiful grounds and magnificent reception room, but, when Emilie appeared, her frightful face drove them away in disgust.

At last Victor St. Aubyn, a poor but accomplished youth, ventured to advance his claims. He was of an old, respectable family, which had become impoverished during the stormy days of the French Revolution. At 20 Victor went to Paris to begin the battle of life. Like Alexander the Great, when he set out to conquer the world, he took nothing but hope; the Grecian hero depended for success on his sword—Victor relied on his pen. He was a graceful and elegant writer; but, poor and friendless, his success was not equal to his genius; he was obliged to write for bread, not fame. Victor was not discouraged by his want of success. He was persuaded that the dark clouds which hovered over him would at last be dispelled, and that the world would acknowledge his merit. Young St. Aubyn's dreary existence was sometimes brightened by delightful dreams.

In these exquisite moments his disappointment was forgotten, and his cheerless chamber was changed as by magic. He saw before him galleries of light, airy beauty, filled with lovely women, who crowned him with amaranthine wreaths as he approached. One morning, while Victor was dreaming a gorgeous dream like this, the etherial fabric was suddenly demolished by a gentleman coming in and exclaiming, "Victor, would you like to change this poor room for a charming retreat near Paris, a beautiful villa in the midst of sunny groves and blooming gardens?"

"Certainly a most desirable exchange, my dear Eugene! But how is it to be done?"

"By marrying Emilie Lamont."

"And, pray, who is Emilie Lamont?"

"Who is Emilie Lamont? Why, all Paris is ringing with her name."

"The sound has not ascended so high as my room. Tell me about her."

"Emilie Lamont, better known as the Lady of Larose, has announced that she will accept the addresses of any gentleman who pleases her, and bestow on him her hand and fortune, if he can be satisfied with an inconceivably ugly face. Many have visited her, but only one gentleman as yet has mustered up sufficient courage to pop the question."

"Really, Eugene, this is a most singular and interesting affair. I am tempted to visit the Lady of Larose, merely out of curiosity."

"Do so, Victor; perhaps something may come of it. Good-by."

A few days after this conversation Victor put on the best suit of clothes that his wardrobe contained, and proceeded to visit the Lady of Larose. He did not go at once to the house, but wandered about the grounds delighted with the beauty of the scene. A new surprise met him at every turn. In one place he came to a little rivulet running through the grassy turf, which was gemmed with a thousand flowers. Here he came across a grotto, whose cool recesses wooed him to enter. In another place he saw a fountain of water sparkling in the sunlight. He reached the flowery eminence, which was adorned with a pavilion so delicately constructed that it might have been the work of fairy hands. Around and about the spot gorgeous pheasants and stately peacocks walked with pompous steps. At last his eyes rested upon the crowning glory of the scene—the superb villa of Larose.

Victor advanced with hesitating steps to the magnificent porch, where he was met by a servant, who politely invited him to walk into the house. Entering the saloon, the poor young man was amazed at the splendid display. He began to repent of his presumption in daring to offer himself as a suitor to be the possessor of so much wealth; he dreaded to meet the Lady of Larose, and a thousand times wished himself back in his poor chamber.

While occupied with the thought, the door opened, and Emilie Lamont entered. Victor arose and bowed as she came forward, without raising his eyes to her face. With a voice sweet as angels when welcoming souls to Elysian bliss she addressed him, and on the subject which is always interesting to every man—himself.

"May I ask whether you are Monsieur St. Aubyn, the poet?"

"I do not know, Mademoiselle, whether I deserve the name of poet, but I plead guilty to publishing a volume of verse a year ago, which brought me but little fame and less money."

"Your beautiful book should have secured you both."

"Am I to understand that Mademoiselle Lamont has read my little book?"

"I have read and admired it over and over again, and if all the world were like me your book would have made you famous."

"If all the world were like you this world would be a paradise," cried Victor, overjoyed to hear his neglected book praised.

"Look at me, Monsieur St. Aubyn; is paradise composed of such?"

Victor raised his eyes to her face. Those lips were indeed hideous, but from them came words of praise and encouragement to cheer him onward in his efforts to reach Fame's proud temple. Those cheeks were pale and yellow, but perhaps they had glowed with enthusiasm over his poetry.

"If you will excuse me, Mademoiselle, I will say that the hearts are not quite so plain——"

"Don't mince matters, Monsieur St. Aubyn—my glass tells the truth, and I want you to do the same."

"But, Mademoiselle, it is not customary for gentlemen to speak so plainly to ladies about their personal appearance."

"Monsieur Victor St. Aubyn, I want you to understand, once for all, that Emilie Lamont is not like other women. Therefore, do not hesitate to say what you think of me."

"Well, then, if you insist on it, I can only say you are bitter ugly."

"Bitter ugly! I like that; that is refreshing—bitter ugly—very good!" cried Emilie, with a laugh as sweet and musical as a silver bell.

"I am glad my plain language has not offended you. It is certainly venturing upon dangerous ground to tell a lady that she is ugly."

"You must remember that I am not like other women."

Emilie rang the bell and ordered the servant to have everything arranged in the blue room.

"You have a harp, Mademoiselle; do you play and sing?" asked Victor, drawing her attention to a superb instrument in one corner of the room.

"Sometimes to while away a weary hour."

"Will you favor me with some music?" he asked, handing her the harp.

"With pleasure," lightly touching the strings, and eliciting strains that might have come from the inspired fingers of St. Cecelia.

Victor was deeply affected, and, when the last sad notes had died away, he said: "Mademoiselle, I thank you on my knees for your sweet kindness in singing that and calling it your favorite."

As he spoke a door in the lower end of the room glided back, displaying an inner apartment arranged for a repast.

"Monsieur, will you partake of some fruit which is served in the next room?"

"Thank you," said Victor, rising and offering Emilie his arm to escort her to the the next apartment.

"Monsieur," said Mademoiselle Lamont, as they sat down to a tempting array of delicacies, "Monsieur, I wish you to see what I can produce. All the fruit of the table came from my garden."

"They are like everything else here—delightful," said Victor, tasting a luscious peach. "Indeed, I can hardly believe that all I have seen to-day is real and substantial. Walking through your splendid grounds I could have imagined myself in the garden of Hesperides. Seated in yon gorgeous saloon, I could hardly help fancying that I saw an enchanting vision which would soon dissolve, leaving me nothing but the dull realities of life."

"You poets are like that ethereal bird, the huma, which never touches the ground; you are always flying in the air, and dislike touching this poor earth of ours."

"Had I the wings of an angel I could not fly to a more delightful abode than I have found to-day, nor receive a more gratifying welcome than that which you have so kindly given me."

Victor returned to his books and studies from his visit to Larose with a feeling of satisfaction to which he had long been a stranger. His prospects looked brighter. He had secured a powerful friend in the Lady of Larose. Her kindness to him had touched his tender heart, and it seemed as natural for her to be agreeable as it is for the flowers to bloom and the birds to sing.

Emilie had invited Victor to visit Larose by moonlight. He did so one beautiful evening. They strolled about the lovely grounds. He told her of his struggles, of his golden aspirations, and of his disappointments. She consoled him with sweet and gentle words, and she pointed to the future and assured him that his hopes would be realized. Victor felt the influence of that delicious voice, and in that soft hour he knelt at her feet and told her that he loved her.

To shorten the story, the day appointed for the wedding arrived. Everything was ready. Victor, handsome and expectant, advanced to meet the bride, when a lovely girl of 19, with a face and form that might have served as a model for Apedes when he painted his exquisite picture of Venus, came forward and took the hand of the future husband.

This beautiful being was none other than the Lady of Larose, who had so long excited the curiosity of Paris, her ravishing beauty being concealed by a frightful and ingeniously-constructed mask.

Her object in veiling those charming features from the gaze of the world was to secure a partner who would not marry her for the accidental advantage of wealth and beauty alone, but for her own intrinsic worth. She obtained such a partner in Victor St. Aubyn.

THERE are 14,441 persons in England members of the Society of Friends. Last year they numbered 14,253, so that they have slightly increased of late. Of 95 members who were married last year, 49 were united to persons not belonging to their society, and these mixed marriages are not favorable to the perpetuation of Quakerdom. There is one fact worthy of note respecting Quakers, namely, that they are a long-lived race. The rate of mortality among them is remarkably low—only 18 per 1,000 for the past year.

WILD COLLEGIANS.

A Whole Princeton Class Suspended—Punished for Bulldozing the Faculty.

[Princeton (N. J.) Cor. New York World.]

There has been a custom at Princeton College for some years past, among the outgoing Freshman class, of anticipating the [illegible] rights of the Sophomore year, and of making it as uncomfortable as possible for the incoming class while they were undergoing their examinations for admission. These annoyances rarely consisted of anything more than a few amusements, such as "right-leting" the pseudo Freshman across the campus, for which process all that is needed are about a dozen loud-tongued "Sophs" and a timid Freshman. The "Sophs," when a new man is espied, will begin to chant their pæan, "Right, left, right, left," and so on, keeping time with his steps. If he gets what in college parlance is termed "a case of the grins," their fiendish object is accomplished; if not, they give it up and await another victim. In the catalogue it is announced that all candidates for admission are required to register their names with the President on the evening before the examination. This gives a good opportunity for the "Sophs" to insinuate that the new-comers are "Fresh;" to this end they assemble in full numbers in the neighborhood of Dr. McCosh's residence, and form a regular gantlet, through which the candidate for college honors has to pass, and, by the time he gets into the President's mansion, if he is not convinced of his verdancy it certainly is not owing to the fact that he has never been assured of it. In this custom the class of '80 were so demonstrative that they brought out the venerable Dr. McCosh from his study, who warned them to immediately disperse and let the incoming men alone, but neither this nor the presence of the grim-visaged proctor had the desired effect, and the thing continued.

On the next day the same thing was carried on as the '81 men were going into Examination Hall. In this "bulldosing," the faculty and the "'80" men were not of one mind, and consequently some thirty-two of the latter were ordered to leave town before Monday noon. On Friday night the "'80" men, having finished their examinations, serenaded their several tutors in a style more boisterous than musical, interspersing among other things large fire crackers, cheers, and certain songs uncomplimentary to the faculty. This was the straw that broke the camel's back. On Saturday night the whole class of '80, numbering almost a hundred men, were summoned, suspended from college, and required to leave town by noon Monday. If any of them were seen here after that time a longer suspension would be the result.

This is the first time a whole class has been suspended from this college, and as a consequence there is a great deal of excitement over the matter. A member of the faculty told the World correspondent that this extreme measure had to be adopted in order to check the growing evil, which was injuring the reputation of the college. It was having the effect of keeping men who were naturally timid away.

Homeric Warriors.

The Montenegrin army is described by a correspondent of the London Times as a mass of tatterdemalions. In the ranks a majority are more or less ragged, and the battalions in their ranks do not trouble themselves much with being in exact line or keeping any particular position, although no army drill could secure more absolute obedience to any order. Life at the headquarters of the Prince of Montenegro is an Homeric study. When in the morning the Prince appears, a line is formed instantly, and all uncover while he takes his walk up and down the terrace. As he walks along the line, now and then a man runs forward, catches the hand of his Prince, and kisses it, dropping back into his place and then another and another, the ruler accepting the homage with a manner which has a great fascination for the simple-minded folk—with a smile, a word of interest, in some cases a question as to their affairs; for he knows, it is said, every head of a family in his dominions personally and by name, and occasionally breaks his promenade to enter into conversation more seriously, or even to provoke a general discussion, when a circle rapidly forms around him to listen and take part. There is nothing servile in their manner even to him, but the most unbounded reverence and devotion. It is a favorite amusement of his to wake up the emulation of the men by talking to some one of them of some heroic deed he has done, and provoking comparisons, when a contest of pretensions to equal or greater merit begins, every man considering himself entitled to push his claims, which he does in no vainglorious way, but by recounting what he has done. As they are surrounded by witnesses of the deeds, no man dares to exaggerate his exploits, and the crowd confirms. These are the warriors who are now renewing in Western Turkey the battle which they have waged with the Turks for four centuries.

Why Farragut was "Lashed."

The press has frequently spoken of an incident in Admiral Farragut's life which in the popular mind adds to his well-earned reputation for gallantry. In a well-known painting the Admiral appears lashed to the mast of his ship in the midst of the Mobile bay fight. The question why the Admiral took that unusual position has often been asked, but as far as I know the true answer has not yet been given. I have now read attentively a charming letter from Mrs. Bartlett, to a Portsmouth (N. H.) journal. Mrs. Bartlett, who met the Admiral at a ball given in his honor, availed herself, during a pleasant conversation, of an interval to inquire why he lashed himself to the mast. His answer, as given by that lady, is incomplete. He was lashed to the mast, as she relates, to protect him from being precipitated to the deck by casualty. He had another reason for the lashing which she does not mention. He needed the free use of his hands, in one of which he held his speaking-trumpet. But the Admiral's object or reason for going aloft instead of remaining on the quarter-deck is still a mystery.

And yet that reason, as he gave it to me, very much in the spirit of his conversation with Mrs. Bartlett, was a very simple and yet a very satisfactory one. In his former battles below New Orleans and up the Mississippi river he had been seriously embarrassed, once by the condition of the atmosphere and again in the vicinity of bluffs, when the smoke of his guns, instead of rising and leaving his view unobstructed, formed and hung about the decks. The high bluffs in the bay of Mobile, with a heavy atmosphere as he was about to commence the engagement, induced an apprehension that his view might again be obstructed by the smoke of his own guns. He went aloft, therefore, to get above the smoke and to obtain a clear view of the enemy's batteries and of the position and movements of his own ships.—Thurlow Weed, in the New York Tribune.

At the athletic games at Cornwall on the Queen's birthday, Mr. R. R. McLennan, the champion hammer-thrower of the world, after repeated solicitations from those present to give an exhibition of his power and skill as a hammer-thrower, decided to accede to their requests. Several parties were sent out to warn the crowd to keep back, and, everything being announced in readiness, Mr. McLennan took up the hammer, a twelve-pounder, we are informed, and, after swinging around with it five or six times, sent it spinning through the air a distance of about 300 feet. As soon as the hammer left his hand all eyes were turned in the direction in which it was going, as it was evident it would fall in the crowd at the southwest corner of the field. The people at that end of the field were seen making effort to get out of the way, but alas! they were not all able to escape. A shriek of horror went up from the crowd when the hammer was seen alighting among them and striking a young girl. All rushed to the spot, fearing that it was a daughter, sister, or some friend that had been crushed beneath the hammer. It was soon made known that the victim was a daughter of Michael Kavanagh. The ball struck her on the back of the head, completely smashing it in. Those who were near by say the girl never moved a muscle after the hammer struck her. The blood poured out of her mouth, nose, eyes and ears. She was about [illegible] years of age. The tears poured down poor McLennan's cheeks when he was informed that the girl was killed. Of course no blame could possibly be attached to him. He had not been in the habit of throwing the hammer for some years, and had very little idea of the distance or direction it would go. Had it gone in the direction he intended, it might not have reached the crowd.—Toronto Globe.

What a Damsel!

She was young and fair, and a tear glistened in her eye as she laid her curly head upon his shoulder and exclaimed, "Oh, George, I think if I found you did not love me I should die." "My darling," he answered, passing his hand gently round her dimpled chin, "I will always love you. Do you think I would marry you if I did not feel sure of it. In a few days, at the altar I shall vow to love you all my life, and I will keep my vow." A lovely kind of beatific happiness played for a moment like sunshine on her lips, and then she whispered, "Oh, George, I like to hear you talk like that; you have been so good to me. You have given me a diamond locket, and a gold watch and chain, and rings that an angel might wear outside her gloves and not be ashamed, and if I thought that one day you'd be sorry you'd given me all these nice things and want them back again, I should break my heart." He held her gently against his manly breast, and answered with a quivering voice: "Oh, my own darling, there is nothing on earth that could happen that would make me repent giving you a few tokens of my love or make me want them back again." She sprang from his arms like a joyous deer, she shook back her sunny curls, and, with a whole poem in her hazel eyes, exclaimed: "Oh, George, you have taken a load from my heart. I've come to say I can't marry you after all, because I've seen somebody I like better, and I thought you'd want your presents back again."

London.

London is the greatest city the world ever saw. Babylon, Thebes, Rome were never so populous, while the largest city in India at the present time contains less than a million inhabitants. Within the borders of the metropolitan and police districts, a circle of fifteen miles, it is computed there are at the present time upward of four million persons. London is three times more populous than New York, four times more populous than St. Petersburg, twice as populous as Constantinople, with two-thirds more people in it than Paris, and one-fourth more than even the hiving multitudes of Pekin. All Scotland but equals it in the number of its people, and half as many Yorkshiremen again as are numbered in their own county could find accommodation within its circle. Every eight minutes of every day of every year a soul goes out of London, and in every five minutes of every day of every year a new immortal enters upon this scene of its probation. It is at once the court, the seat of Government, the center of fashion, the home of all the charities, and the general rendezvous of all the criminal and desperate characters of the United Kingdom.

John at the Auction.

The other morning, at an auction sale on C street, a lot of worn-out household furniture was under the hammer, when a Chinaman, who had been carefully watching operations for some time, put in a bid of "two bittee" for an old dilapidated washstand. "Two bits—do I hear the three?" shouted the auctioneer. There was a long pause, broken at last by the Chinaman bidding again, "Tree bitte." The crowd laughed at the Celestial for raising his own bid, and the auctioneer, taking in the situation, sang out: "Three bittee—do I hear four?" and looked over at John. There was another long pause, but at last "Fo' bittee," came from the Chinaman, and a roar of laughter went up, in which even a number of old women joined so heartily as to almost shake their false teeth out. Still the auctioneer held on to the washstand, and the Chinaman, determined to secure it, bid five, six, seven and eight "bittee" successively, and it was finally passed over to him for $1. He received it with a smile of awful dimensions, remarking: "Me ketchee washstand, you bettee — heap — cheapee."—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

NO KISS.

"Kiss me, Will," sang Marguerite
To a pretty little tune,
Holding up her dainty mouth,
Sweet as roses born in June.
Will was ten years old that day,
And he pulled her golden curls,
Teasingly, and answer made:
"I'm too old—I don't kiss girls."
Ten years pass, and Marguerite
Smiles, as Will kneels at her feet,
Gazing fondly in her eyes,
Praying, "Won't you kiss me, sweet?"
She is seventeen to-day;
With her birthday ring she toys
For a moment, then replies:
"I'm too old—I don't kiss boys!"

Cause of Headaches.

The cause of headaches has latterly received much investigation. Dr. George T. Stevens, of Albany, has been at pains to demonstrate the relation between disordered eyesight and many nervous diseases, including headache. By means of diagrams in the New York Medical Journal he shows how difficulties in the ordinary use of the eyes, arising from far-sightedness, short-sightedness, and other defects of the kind, must cause continual irritation to the nerves. Especially is this the case with far-sightedness, and numerous instances are cited where patients suffering frequently and severely from headaches have been entirely cured by wearing spectacles suited to their eyes. Other affections of the eyes result similarly, but the instances met with in practice are fewer. There seems to be abundant evidence that several more serious forms of nervous disease may be an outgrowth of such irritation.

Around the Farm.

Six quarts of soot to a hogshead of water makes a serviceable manure for watering forced plants—as well as for most bulbs, flowering plants and shrubs.—American Garden.

My experience in planting corn has been that more can be raised per acre where there is but one stalk in the hill than where there are six; better two than five; three than four; that is, three stalks per hill give the best yield.—Prairie Farmer.

About seven years ago Mr. Stratton began to plant eucalyptus trees near Haywards, Alameda county, Cal. He is now selling railroad ties, telegraph poles and firewood at handsome figures. One-fifth of the trees are left standing for future use.—Pacific Rural Press.

The First Food for Chickens.—Just before the chick breaks from its narrow cell, the last of the yolk is taken into the stomach, which gives it the strength to make its own grand effort for freedom. This food will certainly last twelve if not twenty-four hours after it is free. During that time no other food is needed; only rest is required for the little stranger after its exhausting labor.—Poultry World.

A Suggestion to Grape Pruners.—A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer gives as the results of his experiments with grapevines that it is of the greatest advantage to prune them so as to have the main arms as long as possible. He has trained some to a length of twenty-four feet, and purposes letting them grow longer. The advantages are that much less summer pruning is required when there is no time for it, they are more easily protected in winter, and they bear more and larger bunches than vines set closer together, covering the same extent of trellis.

In France a gentleman owned a grand country estate; surrounding his mansion were orchards containing fruit trees of all kinds that could be acclimated, about three acres in plums, which were healthy-looking trees, blooming each spring, but none of the fruit coming to maturity. He became disgusted and turned the plum orchard into a chicken yard, leaving the trees for shade. To his profound astonishment the next season the trees were fairly breaking down with ripe, full-matured fruit. The poultry had accomplished what man had utterly failed in—successfully battling the curculio.

Ventilation of a Smoke-House.—But little ventilation is needed for a smoke house; a smoldering fire that will make a dense, cool smoke is what is wanted. If there are any openings needed for the admitting of air, to sustain the necessarily slow combustion, they must be very small, and may be at the bottom instead of at the top, where smoke only is wanted. Flies must be kept out by all means, and, if any ventilating openings are made, cover them with fine wire gauze, and provide something to close them with when the fire is not used. To protect the meat the house must be quite close and dark.—American Agriculturist

One pound of corn is equal as food to about three and three-quarters pounds of potatoes, or eight and one-half pounds of cabbage, or to eleven and one-half pounds of white turnips. Analysis gives the nutritive value of corn to be, compared with that of oats, as 70 is to 60. An average of several tables takes the value of a given quantity of oats to represent 100, while the value of the same quantity of corn would be 95, weight being identical in each case. In practice, one bushel of corn is equal to two of oats for fattening, but oats are altogether better for the growing animals than corn.

Standing Water.—A very important work is to let off any water that accumulates upon the surface. This requires constant attention, and the use of a hoe or a shovel. Whether there is a crop in the ground or not, it is equally necessary to do this thoroughly, else the soil is soaked and dries very slowly. The amount lost through water remaining upon fields would each year buy for every farmer who permits it a good paper and more books than he could well study in a year. Barn-yards, especially, should be freed from water; the wash from the roof should be carried off before it has soaked through the manure and dissolved out all the valuable parts of it.—Canada Journal.

About the House.

Currant Pie.—Four table-spoonfuls of currants, five of water, four of sugar, and one of flour, will make one pie; bake in two crusts.

Lemon Cake.—Four cupfuls of flour, three cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of butter, one cupful of milk, five eggs; season with lemon.

To Clean Collars and Wristbands.—Grease the soiled parts before wetting with any kind of fat or dripping; let them remain a few hours, or over night; wash with soap in hot water. They will become wonderfully clean.

Cocoanut Cake.—One cupful of butter, two of sugar, four eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, two of cream tartar, in one cupful of milk; one grated cocoanut should be mixed with flour and the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Flour enough should be used to make it as stiff as pound cake.

How to Paint Woodwork.—In painting woodwork, a priming coat followed by a dark coat, such as chocolate or purple brown, and finished off with a coat of common varnish, is cheaper than, and as durable as, four coats of common color; it looks better, is more readily executed, and bears washing well.—Economist.

How to Preserve Ice.—During illness ice is generally needed in the sick-room. The following method of preserving it is highly recommended, and is certainly worth trying: Cut a piece of flannel about nine inches square, and secure it by ligature round the mouth of an ordinary tumbler, so as to leave a cup-shaped depression of flannel within the tumbler to about half its depth. In the flannel cup so constructed pieces of ice may be preserved many hours, all the longer if a piece of flannel from four to five inches square be used as a loose cover to the ice cups. Cheap flannel, with comparatively open meshes, is preferable, as the water easily drains through it and the ice is thus kept quite dry. When good flannel with close texture is employed, a small hole must be made in the bottom of the flannel cup, otherwise it holds the water, and facilitates the melting of the ice. Placed in a cup of this kind, two ounces of ice has been known to last for nine or ten hours.

Why Old People Remember Things.

The extraordinary persistence of early impressions, when the mind seems almost to have ceased to register new ones, is in remarkable accordance with the law of nutrition. It is a physiological fact that decline essentially consists in the diminution of the formative activity of the organism. Now it is when the brain is growing that a definite direction can be most strongly and persistently given to its structure. Thus the habits of thought come to be formed, and those nerve tracks laid down which (as the physiologist believes) constitute the mechanism of association, by the time the brain has reached its maturity; and the nutrition of the organ continues to keep up the same mechanism in accordance with the demands of its activity so long as it is being called into use. Further, during the entire period of vigorous manhood, the brain, like muscles, may be taking on some additional growth, either as a whole or in special parts, new tissue being developed and kept up by the nutritive process, in accordance with the modes of action to which the organ is trained. And in this manner a store of "impressions" or traces is accumulated which may be brought within the sphere of consciousness whenever the right suggesting strings are touched. But as the nutritive activity diminishes, the "waste" becomes more active than the renovation; and it would seem that while (to use a commercial analogy) the "old-established houses" keep their ground, these later firms whose basis is less secure are the first to crumble away—the nutritive activity, which yet suffices to maintain the original structure not being capable of keeping the subsequent additions to it in working order. This earlier degeneration of later formed structures is a general fact perfectly familiar to the physiologist.—London Mirror.

The Public Printing-Office.

John D. Defrees, Public Printer, has issued the following circular:

It is now more than sixteen years since the establishment of the Government Printing-Office. Since that time compositors, pressmen and bookbinders have come here from every part of the country for employment. Many of them obtained it, and have by hard work and economy secured homes for their families, which in many instances have not been entirely paid for; others, who do not own houses, rent them or board, and nearly all have families to support out of their daily earnings. There are now more sober, industrious and capable workmen of this character here than can at any time be employed. It would be unjust and cruel to discharge any of these workmen merely to put others from a distance in their place, and it will not be done. As letters have been received from a great number of persons asking employment it is deemed best to adopt this method of informing all concerned that it cannot be had, so that the expense of coming here may be avoided.

It must also be understood that this establishment cannot be made either a religious, political or charitable asylum. It is a great workshop—the most extensive publishing-house in the world—and must be managed with the same regard to economy as is observed by the managers of similar private workshops, or else it were better for the Government to abolish it.

John D. Defrees, Public Printer.

Perplexing in the Extreme.

A tramp sat on a doorstep back in Pine street yesterday afternoon, tenderly caressing his head and shoulders, when his "pard" came up.

"What's the matter with you, Jacob?"

"I'm in doubt, I'm in doubt."

"In doubt; what about?"

"Well, Henry, I went into that alley gate up there to get something to eat. I might a-knowed somethin' 'ud happen, for there was a dead book-agent layin' on the flower-bed, and a liniment man with the side of his head all caved in, leanin' up agin the peach tree."

"Well?"

"You see, I allers wuz ventursum, an' I axed a woman standing there would she give me a rhubarb pie and a piece of fresh shad."

"Well, what happened then?"

"Now, Henry, that's what I'm in doubt about. I don't seem to make out whether the back porch fell down on me, or I stepped on a keg of dynamite, and it busted under me. Why, Henry, I'd sooner work half an hour than go into that yard again."—Easton Free Press.

Tobacco and Fire-Crackers.

All the small boys in the country will be grateful to The New York Tribune for saying this: "Pipes have caused more fires than fireworks ever did. But the insurance men are silent on the subject of tobacco. It is the pipe of patriotism which they want to put out. Some doctor has said that a city hospital on the Fourth of July looks like the evening of a general engagement. The wounded in the hospitals come to grief by the firing of salutes. Why do not the National Board of Fire Underwriters prohibit cannon? The reason is obvious. The plan is to nip patriotism in the bud, to suppress it in the boy of the period. He is to be bereft of his feeble fireworks and crackers. The glorious Fourth is to be made to him like all other days. We have given up the Independence day parade, the annual feast, the civic pomp and show, and the Fourth of July oration. Let us hold on to the fireworks as the last refuge of popular liberty."

Senator Dawes, when he was Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, was once listening to the arguments of a Yankee paint manufacturer who wanted a change in the tariff upon iron pyrites, saying that it would greatly benefit his trade. Mr. Dawes asked him if he wanted to use it for the same purpose that the English and French do. The eager painter answered, "Yes." Dawes then turned to a tariff dictionary and read: "This article is chiefly used by the English and French to practice most gross deception and frauds in the mixture of paint." The Washington correspondent of the Troy Times, who tells the story, adds that the Yankee did not further press his claim, and withdrew.

What a "Good Fellow" Is.

The word "good"—according to the Pittsburgh Leader—is one fitted to subjects of the widest difference and opposing nature, and is finely fitted to illustrate the fact that the object of words, instead of being the expression of ideas, is really to conceal them. A good fellow is far from being a fellow who is good. He never has his eyes more than half open, is good-natured, and as gentle and mild as a mouse. He takes "the world and all its hollow crew" pretty much as he finds it, and never contemplates any improvement in it, as tearing it to pieces to make it run better, as he does with watches. The typical good fellow will be sure to agree with you on all subjects, religion, politics, etc. He resembles a tame bear, being somewhat clumsy, but capable of being led elsewhere. He will tell you good stories and you will listen to him, and if not he will kindly listen to your bad ones. He will eat or drink at any time or place. He will never be the first to break up a party, but will sit by until midnight, entirely oblivious of his wife and children. A good fellow is quite in his glory when he is either half-drunk or asleep. He cares for nothing, but is at everybody's service; he bears no resentments, but is obliged to everybody but his own family, whose existence he seems to be scarcely aware of. His mind, like his body, seems to have acquired a chronic habit of quietly sitting down and calmly "waiting for the facts." He is a nose of wax, to be pulled or squeezed into any shape. He has no mental or moral character. He is not a good man, or a bad man, but is a good fellow; he has neither wit nor wisdom, but is a good fellow; he has done nothing that anybody can recollect, but is a good fellow; in short, a complete nonentity, a hideous failure, but nevertheless a good fellow.

During the fifty-eight years which have passed since American Odd Fellowship was established, over $60,000,000 have been collected, of which upward of $22,000,000 have been expended for the relief of those entitled to it. Some 720,000 brothers have been aided.

It is with love as with apparitions. Everyone talks of it, but few have ever seen it.

"The Conflict of Ages."

Men differ on nearly every issue. There have always been opposite parties in politics and religion, though the measures fought over one day may be universally adopted at another, and those sacrificed regarded as heroes and martyrs. Medicine has also been subject to revolutionary disturbances. When Drs. Harvey and Jenner announced their discoveries, they were held in contempt and ridicule by an incredulous and ignorant public, yet to-day they are received and honored by all as benefactors. When Dr. Pierce announced his Discovery, many seemed to doubt, and were skeptical concerning all medicines and doctors, but proof of merit has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the Golden Medical Discovery is the standard remedy in curing the most obstinate diseases of the liver and blood, having almost entirely superseded the old-time sarsaparillas by reason of its superior merits.

Norwich, Chenango Co., N. Y., Nov. 3, 1876.
R. V. Pierce, M. D.:

I was afflicted with a scrofulous affection on one of my legs. It was very troublesome for over two years, so much so that I could not wear a boot, and I had to keep my leg bandaged. It resulted in a raw sore. It got so bad that it became a general talk that I would have to undergo amputation of the limb. One physician told me he never saw such a sore cured. I commenced taking your Golden Medical Discovery together with your Pellets as directed on the bottles, and when I had consumed six bottles of Discovery, my leg was entirely well, and has remained so ever since—a period of over two years—and I would not swap it for fifty wooden legs. Yours truly, John Shattuck.

"Making Old Bones."

People who neglect their minor ailments rarely live to make old bones. The secret of hale and vigorous old age lies not only in taking care of one's health in early life, by the observance of sanitary rules, but also by judicious medication when the premonitory symptoms of bodily disorder manifest themselves. Indigestion, bowel and liver complaints, are fruitful causes of injury to the constitution. Those diseases should be, therefore, checked without delay. The best medicine for the purpose is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This standard preparation disciplines the digestive organs, gives renewed impetus to the bilious secretive function, and exerts a beneficial influence upon the organs of urination. It has no rival as a remedy for and preventive of chills and fever and bilious remittents, infuses vigor into the debilitated frame, and is an excellent appetizer and nervine.

There's Something in a Name.

Juliet to the contrary notwithstanding. The name of Dooley is now synonymous with delicious, light, healthy biscuits, rolls, griddle cakes, pastry, etc. The genuine Dooley Yeast Powder is sold only in tin cans, the fac-simile signature of the manufacturers is printed on each label.

Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word, and maintains its reputation unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession, and prescribed daily in the Charity Hospital and other Hospitals in New Orleans. Wilhoft's Tonic is thus highly recommended by the leading medical men of the country, and is worthy of such indorsement. G. R. Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

The attention of Advertisers is called to our List of Weekly Newspapers.
Send for a Catalogue.
MARVELOUS CHEAPNESS.
An advertisement occupying the space of One Inch will be inserted one week in 1,100 newspapers for $37.50—or less than eight cents per newspaper.
CUTS AND ELECTROTYPES.
No extra charge for cuts, trade-marks, unusual display, or advertisements inserted across two or more columns; only twenty-six cuts are required for the whole number of newspapers. Cuts should not be over two and one-eighth inches in width.
AN INTERESTING STATEMENT.
To send an advertising order to 1,100 newspapers would require an investment of $34.50 for postage; stationery would cost nearly as much; the labor of addressing 1,100 envelopes is considerable; to write 1,100 orders would be a great task; to print them would cost something. Our price for a five-line advertisement in the whole 1,100 papers, one week, is $43.75, or less than the cost of postage and stationery.
NOTICES IN NEWS COLUMNS.
To have an advertisement set up in the form of reading matter, and inserted in the news columns of newspapers, is a very efficient mode of advertising. These lists of newspapers offer advantages in this respect which no other newspaper or lists of newspapers possess. Manufacturers and merchants desiring to publish a description of their wares or establishments will find this plan very serviceable. By publishing a series of brief notices, they can soon make the merits of their goods familiar to the people of the regions in which these papers are published.

THE SUN.
1877. NEW YORK. 1877.
The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.
The price of the Daily SUN is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.
The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.
The Weekly Sun, eight pages of 56 broad columns, is furnished at $1 a year, postpaid.
Special Notice.—In order to introduce The Sun more widely to the public, we will send THE WEEKLY edition for the remainder of the year, to Jan. 1, 1878, postpaid, for Half a Dollar. Try it.

Mr. H. R. Stevens:
Dear Sir—I have been sick two years with the Liver complaint, and during that time have taken a great many different medicines, but none of them did me any good. FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle man which adds 15 to 20 per cent. ; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced. our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS.

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so flow that now they are as cheap as before the war. We have a good tea at 25 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 80 and 90 cents.

A Few Words of Wisdom.

For all who are seeking new homes in the West. If you are going to change your location, by all means you should keep on about the same latitude as where you formerly lived for in this way you will escape the severe climatic changes in the weather incident to the extreme North or South, having none of these things to contend with, your self and family are healthy and you become a producer at once, consequently soon independent; on the other hand should you listen to the many glowing accounts of the sunny South, or the mild climate of the North, and thus be induced to try your fortunes there, you will find the reality is not all your fancy painted it. If you go South it usually takes about two years to get acclimated to the climate, during which time, not being able to work, yourself and family are consumers, besides being constantly exposed to the malarial fevers which abound there, and the experience of many is that they return discouraged, leaving not a few loved ones beneath the sod in the sunny South. Therefore, in going West keep on about the same latitude which will insure health and happiness. There are most excellent lands in Northern Missouri on the line of the Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. and in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, "just as cheap and good as the sun ever shown upon," why not accept a certainty rather than run the risk of losing all? Through day and sleeping cars are run from Toledo, Ohio, via the Wabash R'y and Quincy to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas city, and from Chicago via Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., whereby all are furnished firstclass accomodations.

Notes and Items Of Early Times.

BY MAJOR M'FADEN.

My last left me with the Indians on the Tippecanoe, and before telling you of hunting and fishing with them for over a week on the Tippecanoe, and at Lake Manitou, I want to give you a little history of the Miamas, Pottawottamies and other Indian tribes who occupied this part of the country as far back in the dim past "That the memory of man (or Indian) runneth not to the contrary," as I learned from the Indians and other reliable sources. As far back as can be ascertained the Miami Indians occupied all south of the Wabash river to a large extent from above Ft. Wayne, and to below Lafayette, and the Pottawottamies occupied all the territory north of the Wabash river to Lake Michigan and west to a line running from the west end of the lake to the old Indian town below Lafayette. The territory now the State of Illinois was occupied by a tribe of Indians called the "Illini," which means men, or full grown man, as they were large and fine looking Indians. The Sacs and foxes occupied the territory north of Lake Michigan.

After many a hard fight between the Miamis and Pottawottamies it was agreed and settled that the Wabash river should be the dividing line between them, and was so held until and after this country was discovered and settled by white men.

I will now relate to you such historical facts as have come to my knowledge, trusting to my memory, relative to the legend of Starved Rock. In boyhood my father met the celebrated Indian chief, Shick-Shack, who gave to him the facts which I am about to impart to you. He said he had then seen 104 winters. His appearance and memory of facts that were already recorded in history, gave ample credibility to his history. He was fully six feet in height, and the perfection of physical form. He was an old Ottawa or Poet'n chief, both tribes merging into one. The Pottawottamies and Pontiacs, like Tecumseh, had formed an alliance of all the Indian tribes to subdue the whites, and secure possession of the Indian burial grounds, and on the death of this noted chieftain, the Ottawas and Pottawottamies united. It was in September, 1673, that Marquette, the French missionary, passed up through the Illinois river from its confluence with the Mississippi to the lake where Chicago now stands, and to Green Bay. It is not material to the legend whether he was upon Starved-Rock on the Illinois river, but if he passed this grand rock without stopping, he would have been derelict of his duty and his vows, for it is one of the most splendid monuments of the great I Am in all this region of country. The Illini or Pottawottamies, then occupied all this territory to the Wabash. To the east of the Wabash were the Miamis and Kickapoos, who, having exhausted their grounds, made occasional forays to the west of this dividing line until they had excited the enmity of the Illini, and the law of the tomahawk and scalping-knife was enforced against the marauders. These depredations became raids, and finally the two tribes to the east organized an expidition to conquer the Illini, and invaded their territory in the spring of 1768. In May of that year they crossed at the mouth of the Little Wabash, where they were met by the Illini, and a bloody battle ensued, in which the allies were victorious, owing not to their numbers—for the Miamis had the superior force—but to their muskets, a weapon which struck terror to their ignorant foe, who supposed the Great Spirit had turned his thunder against them. Another stand and battle was fought at Kankakee; another at Blue Island, and a final and most desperate encounter at Morris, all with disasterous results to the Illini, who were thence driven to Starved Rock. Two hundred years ago, at a point on the Illinois river three miles below Starved Rock, on the plateau between old and new Utica, stood the lagest Indian city on this continent, and Starved Rock was their strong footstep. The French [illegible], and now these same Indians were driven hither by their foe. The fences near by was used as a protection in summer for their garden and fields of maize. At Morris, Mocket, the warrior chief of the Illini or Pottawottomies, fell, and was buried in a mound over which is a red-cedar pole standing to this day. Shick-Shack became their chief then. This was in 1768, probably later in the fall, when this tribe was driven to this rock. After entering the forte and being surrounded by their victorious and insolent foe, small-pox broke out among them in all its terrors. The Indian remedy for their diseased cases is to place the patients in caves or holes in the ground, such as you will find on the summit of the rock. Soon after this dreadful malady they were cut off from all supplies of water, except such as they could draw up in a buffalo horn by means of a rawhide thong, and many a poor red man in this effort perished by becoming a mark to the musket of the foe. One dark night the besieged made a desperate last attempt to escape, and as my legend goes, only seven men of the hundred upon that rock succeeded in getting away from the terrible massacre which followed. All the remainder were butchered and scalped, the young squaws and papooses alone being allowed to live, and they weier divided among the conquerers.

In the spring of 1779 the victorious tribes met near Harding, LaSalle county, Illinois, to divide their conquered territory, in a grand feast of jubilation, but this became an open rupture, and a tremendous battle followed, resulting in a four years' war with varying results on both sides, until the great duel near Terre Haut, on the Wabash. History fails to record a more bloody scene than this. Three hundred warriors a side were picked out between the Miamis on the one side and the Kickapoos on the other. These tribes receded twenty miles away. At sunrise they met and fought till sunset, twelve hours without food or water, and in the evening there were found alive out of these six hundred stalwart warriors but twelve men, seven on one side and five on the other, the Kickapoos being victorious. Of these survivor, Shick-Shack was one, and Sugar, a noted chief, another. The latter was buried in a pen above ground about two miles from Starved Rock. He was a man, as proven by his skeleton, to have been between six and a half and seven feet tall.

I will now give you a few more items of Indians of a later day, from the first settlement of this country to the year 1837, when the Indians were moved west.

The Pottawottamies and Miami Indians were at that time very commonly seen in Logansport. Ewing's establishment was a means of attracting the Indians to this point.

It was headquarters, too, for the receiving of peltries, brought in quantities. There they were properly packed and shipped to the East. It was not unfrequently that some of the Indians came to Logansport to buy goods at Ewing's trading establishment, which stood diagonally to the Washington Hall, then kept by our friend, Captain C. Vigus.

The Miamis were frequent visitors to the vicinity of Logansport, for the purpose of paying a reverential tribute to the memory of the dead, as there was but a few rods distant from the south section of the bridge which immediately led to the "National Reservation," an extensive Indian burial ground, which was an attraction to the curious traveler, as he was passing through this new undeveloped country. No doubt but what this repository of the aboriginal dead was mostly confined to the Indians who died at the village of Ke-na-pa-cum-qua, which stood on the north bank of the Eel river, some six miles above the confluence with the Wabash. "Charley's Reserve" is known as being in the vicinity of the old village. Many of the elder citizens are familiar with the beautiful view that could be seen from Reed's old log cabin on the northern bank, near the Peru road. The scene that presented itself to the eye included the old site of the village of Ke-na-pa-cum-qua.

The Miami burial ground, near Logansport, contained the remains of the renowned chief and warrior, No-ka-me-nah, or as he was more familiarly called, Captain Flowers. The graves were generally coverd with bark. The chief's loomed up above all others of greater consequence. It was rudely constructed of logs, within which was placed a pine box, or cho-po-em-kak, protecting the remains. The chief's rifle, tin cup, powder horn, and other relics were deposited, so that the spirit might carry along with it in its flight, the chosen earthly objects, to the beautiful world of the future hunting ground There are no signs now to indicate the burial ground.

It was a painful fact, on which no doubt rested, that the grave of No-ka-me-nah did not rest long after burial in a peaceful repose. It was a good rifle that was consigned to the grave with the chief, but the enterprising Christian man had soon possession of it, and many a deer has fallen since at its sharp crack, and the venison sold at fifty cents a saddle, proving satisfactorily that the violation of a red man's grave was a pecuniary gain.

I will now mention Captain Brouillette in whom we are more particularly interested; He was a French half breed of elegant appearance, very straight and slim. His mind was clear and strong. He had great comprehension and scope of thought. Brouillette had a great reputation as an orator, possessing great volubility of language. He was a peaceable man, and a great friend to the white man, among whom he claimed many friendships. He was also a "medicine man," (though not a juggler) professing a knowledge of the healing art. Some time in the summer of 1843, when in Berthelot's trading establishment, at Peru, word was brought in that Pee-waw-pe-o had stabbed his squaw, in revenge for some family grievance, and that she had been taken up to the "Deafman's village," on the Mississnewa, where Brouillette resided with his mother-in-law, Frances Slocum known as the "Lost Sister." Under Brouillette's care the Indian woman recovered from her wound. Captain Brouillette, for he was proverbially known among the white men by that title, was the first Miami Indian that cultivated corn with the plow. Brouillette had often visited LaFayette. In the year 1851, he was on his way to the Wea Plains, a spot identified with his early childhood. The purport of his visit then was to obtain certain roots possessing medical properties. At that time the noble looking Indian, though still retaining his erect bearing, the unmistakable marks of increasing years were shown in the deepening lines of the face, and the former jet black hair impinged with time's frosty touch.

More recently, perhaps in 1863, Brouillette, with some other Miamis, were on a visit to Peter Longlois', in the vicinity of LaFayette. Among them was Jim Godfrey, son of the old war chief, Francis Godfry. Captain Brouillette and Jim gave a friendly recognition, and a little pow-wow followed.

Brouillette's birthplace was on the Wea Plains. The period of his birth was a time of fearful strife, and when "grim visaged war" disturbed the peace of this remote region. The famous Indian village of Ouiatenon was a stronghold of the Miami Indians, and to destroy this ancient village was regarded by the United States government of such importance that an expedition, in the year 1791, was sent out from Kentucky, three hundred strong, commanded by Brigadier General Scott. Dillon in his historical notes in reference to this village, states that "many of the inhabitants of Ouiatenon were French, and lived in a state of civilization. By the books, letters and other documents found there, it is evident that the place was in connection, and dependent on Detroit. A large quantity of corn, a variety of household goods, peltry, and other articles were burned with the village, which consisted of seventy houses. Many of these were well finished."

An Indian once very beautifully and touchingly expressed himself in reference to the strifes that grew out of the pale face's invasion of their country: "Know ye, that village of Ouiatenon is the sepulchre of all our ancestors."

Brouillette was a half breed; his father was a Frenchman, and was made a Captain when a youth. By a remarkable coincidence, Captain Brouillette's wife's mother was also a captive, whose discovery in her old age, after a captivity of sixty years, in the year 1837, on the Mississinewa river awakened an intense interest. Frances Slocum, the "Lost Sister," was captured from the village of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, on the Susquehanna, in 1777, by some hostile Delaware Indians. She was five years old when made captive, and was adopted into the family of the Chief Tuck-hos, who was a man of great distinction. Frances, when she grew up to womanhood, was married to a Delaware, and subsequently to a Miami chief, called the "Deaf Man." The village on the Mississinewa, was called "Deafman's village," where the captive lived for twenty years previous to her discovery. This village was well known to the Indian traders, and the old settlers. There are but a few of his tribe remaining in the old forest homes, to hold him in remembrance, But while a Miami lives Brouillett will ever have place in his mind and heart.

Some Indians live to a great age. The old Indian chief, "White Loon," died at Roanoke, near Fort Wayne, at the advanced age of 107 years. "White Loon" was a relic—and about the last one of this part of the country—of the Miami tribe of Indians, which was formerly so powerful in this section. He was born at the place where Peru is situated, in 1760, when the famous chief Richardville, the Shawnee, was in command. "White Loon" retained his faculties in a wonderfull degree until within a few months of his death. His sight and hearing were somewhat impaired, but his memory was not at all affected, and he could distinctly remember events which occurred ninty-nine years ago. He recollected Tecumseh distinctly, and described the building of old Fort Wayne frequently. He understood no other tongue than the Miami, and never referred to Fort Wayne save as Kekionga.

The Indians I was with, as I told you before, were some of the great tribe of Pottowattamies, who inherited the country for hundreds of years before the cruel white man came, and still lingered around the camp fires and graves of their fathers. I am now through with the historical part, and I am glad of it, as I know you all are, and you would rather read snake and fish stories, and if I run out of material, I will dig up that Indian and bury him over again. You see I had to write some history or you might think that all I knew was fish and snake stories, and as I have got that out of the way, look out next week for wolves, buffalo fish, pike four feet long, love and almost murdor, rattlesnakes in the camp, pappoose sick, ets., Devil's Lake, "I want to go home," and how Kilkomic, a fat Miami Indian, weighing 400 pounds, and about five feet high, came over to camp to see us from the Mississinewa, ets. We will now close by singing the "Star Spangled Banner."

EDUCATION.

A Word About Normal Schools.

Probably the most important feature in the history of Indiana during the present decade, is the deep interest in the condition of the public schools which is everywhere manifested by her people. Never before was her public school system subjected to such examination, analysis, and criticism as at present, and as within the last five years. And the result of it all has been progress. A few years ago the name Hoosier, "in the minds of eastern people, was a synonym of ignorance and general depravity; now it is a fact established by statistics, that in Indiana the people who can neither read nor write constitute a smaller percent of the whole population than in Massachusetts. The "plan" of the public school system in Indiana is not surpassed in general completeness by that of any other state in the Union. Every grade of instruction, from that of the lowest primary up to that of the State University, is open to every child of the state "free of cost."

If there be at present any one particular in respect to which the schools of Indiana are behind those of any other state in the Union, it is that of the qualifications of teachers. Here is the crying want of the common schools of the state. The teachers lack professional fitness, both in respect to scholastic attainments and pedagogic skill; and so the net result of our common school work is far from satisfactory to the thinking observer. To meet this want of the schools, our state legislature a few years ago created our State Normal School, an institution whose design is to furnish professional teachers to the state. Hundreds of young men and young women have received professional training there, but the demand is still far in excess of the supply.

Teachers as a class are poor; and although they may be keenly sensible of their own deficiencies, their poverty renders it impossible for them to go far away from home to receive the training which they need. Within the last few years, however, this difficulty has been met in part, at least, by the establishment of normal institutes in nearly every county in the state .These institutes continue from five to ten weeks, and are attended by thousands of young men and young women, many of whom receive no other special training for their work in the school-room than these afford.

The aggregate of the influence exerted by these so-called "normals," upon the common school work of the state is immense. How important, therefore, that they be organized and conducted upon a correct basis—that they exemplify correct methods of instruction, and that they give due prominence to the "rationale" of the science and art of teaching.

It is a fact to be regretted, however, that many of these "normals" are not normal in any proper sense of the term, and could not readily be distinguished from other schools, except by the fact that they are attended largely by teachers. The time is devoted to the study of texts in a manner altogether similar to that of other schools. Of course this is mostly unavoidable, because of the scholastic deficiency of the persons who attend those schools; but then the idea should be abandoned that the legitimate object of a normal school can be reached by this kind of work. The work of a normal school, strictly speaking, should be confined, in great part, to the discussion of "methods of instruction." It should furnish good answers to the questions—what subjects should be taught in the schools, in what order should they be presented, in what manner, and "why?" It should create in the mind of every teacher an ideal school—an ideal pupil, the former correct in all of its appointments, the latter a model both of moral and intellectual developement. Moreover, such a school should lead the teacher to discover his conscience—his professional conscience, whereby he would be made to feel that by merely "going through the motions" of the schoolroom, he is by no means fulfilling his duty to the state.

ON A NAUGHTY LITTLE BOY, SLEEPING.

BY BRET HARTE.

Just now I missed from hall and stair
A joyful treble that had grown
As dear to me as that grave tone
That tells the world my older care.

And little footsteps on the floor
Were stayed. I laid aside my pen,
Forgot my theme, and listened—then
Stole softly to the library door.

No sight! no sound!—a moment's freak
Of fancy thrilled my pulses through:
"If—no"—and yet, that fancy drew
A father's blood from heart and cheek.

And then—I found him! There he lay,
Surprised by sleep, caught in the act,
The rosy Vandal who had sacked
His little town, and thought it play.

The shattered vase; the broken jar;
A match still smoldering on the floor;
The inkstand's purple pool of gore;
The [illegible] scattered [illegible].

Strewn leaves of albums lightly pressed
This wicked "Baby of the Woods;"
In face of half the household goods
This son and heir was seized—possessed.

Yet all in vain, for sleep had caught
The hand that reached, the feet that strayed
And fallen in that ambuscade
The victor was himself o'erwrought.

What though torn leaves and tattered book
Still testified his deep disgrace!
I stooped and kissed the inky face,
With its demure and calm outlook.

Then back I stole, and half beguiled
My guilt, in trust that when my sleep
Should come, there might be One who'd keep
An equal mercy for His child.

MYRA'S MISTAKE.

Gilbert Gorham, at the age of 10, was left orphaned and destitute, and was taken into the tender care of his loving grandfather, and his Aunt Jane, a venerable spinster, whose severity was a most wholesome restraint upon his grandfather's extreme indulgence. Old Mr. Gorham being a man of enormous wealth, his grandson and heir was the most favored of boys and youths, every whim of his boyish and youthful fancy being gratified as soon as expressed.

And so, when Gilbert had attained the age of 21, and blushingly announced his undying love for Miss Myra Wilbur, the belle of many watering places and seasons, and some five years his senior, his grandfather only nodded and said:

"Suit yourself, my boy; suit yourself."

So a magnificent diamond was slipped on Myra's finger, and Gilbert entered into a fool's paradise, blind to the fact that he was the dupe of an accomplished coquette, whose whole hard nature was incapable of the tithe of the love laid at her feet.

For, being sensitive, poetical and over-indulged, the boy made unto himself an idol, and, calling it Myra, worshiped it.

And the actual Myra, being eminently practical, worldly and mercenary, erected a gold idol of unlimited indulgence, and, calling that Gilbert, worshiped it.

Mr. Gorham, although he was old and feeble, took a carriage and drove from Fern Nook, the family country seat, into Poolsville, the town honored by Miss Wilbur's presence, and made a formal call.

After he was gone, Miss Wilbur, turning to her mother, made a strange speech for a maiden just betrothed, for she said:

"After all, mamma, a rich widow is better than a rich wife, for she can spend the money then uncontrolled."

"Well, my dear?"

"I was only thinking that Gilbert told me once he was entirely dependent upon his grandfather, having nothing of his own while the old man lived."

"It would be well, then, to keep in the old gentleman's favor."

Evidently Myra was of that opinion. She worked a pair of soft quilted slippers for the aged feet, she sent flowers and little dainty dishes to Fern Nook for dear Mr. Gorham, and she made herself a hundred-fold dearer to her infatuated lover by her delicate attentions to his relative.

Business connected with the settlement of a claim of his grandfather's against the Government called Gilbert to Washington, early in the winter following his betrothal. There was the usual pathetic parting, and, with assurance of Myra's undying love, the young man left Fern Nook.

After two months' absence, when he was preparing to return home, a telegram reached him:

Wait in New York to see me. Will put up at the Grand Central. JANE GORHAM.

Of all strange experience this was the strangest. His Aunt Jane leaving her home to visit the metropolis! Gilbert vainly tried to remember if ever she had been absent from home before, and, thoroughly bewildered, hurried to meet her.

His first surprise was to find her gentle and kind, all the grim severity of her manner gone. Her kiss upon his lips was tender as Myra's own.

"My boy," she said, "I have news for you that will distress you, but before I tell that I want you to listen attentively to some business details that were never of any special interest to you before. You have always supposed Fern Nook and the wealth that sustains it to be your grandfather's."

"And are they not?"

"No, my dear, they are mine. Your grandfather holds a life lease only of the house and half the income. The property was all his wife's and left to me, with the lease, as I said, to my father during life. While we were all one family and you the heir, it was quite unnecessary to make any talk or any fuss about the matter; but now it is as well to understand my rights and yours."

"Now?"

"Your grandfather, my dear, being, I charitably believe, in his dotage, has married—Myra Wilbur!"

It was a crushing blow. Gilbert swayed to and fro in his chair, and then fell insensible.

His ideal poetic life was more real to him than the actual world about him, and he suffered acutely. But his aunt was the best of comforters, for, while she was full of tender sympathy, she was eminently practical, and with clear, forcible words she made him realize fully how unworthy was the idol he had worshiped.

With her own personal property she had also brought Gilbert's from their old home, and she took a house in New York, where both soon felt at home, returning no more to Fern Nook. Then, with true practical kindness, she persuaded Gilbert to allow her to buy him a partnership in a light business, and rouse him from his dreamy, sensitive moods, to active, natural life.

He might have become soured and hard but for the love of this old maid, who had never before let him read the tenderness of her heart. But while he suffered keenly his manhood developed, and he was a stronger, better man for his disappointment.

When Myra's name ceased to be a torture, Aunt Jane made herself known to old friends of her girlhood, and gathered about her a pleasant social circle, where Gilbert was soon a favorite. There was no hint of the spinster's hope when she said quietly, "Any attention you can pay to Ella Rayburn will be very pleasing to me, Gilbert. Her mother has been my warmest friend in past years, and we have renewed the old times most pleasantly. If Ella is like her mother she is a pure, sweet, unselfish woman."

And Ella was like her mother, and was soon taken into Aunt Jane's close intimacy.

Still smarting under the past pain, Gilbert was merely attentive to his aunt's young friend, and not yet realizing that a reality filling his old ideal was near him.

And while these old residents of Fern Nook were quietly gathering up broken threads of life, to weave a more perfect web of content, Myra Gorham was eating out her heart in bitterness. Instead of an old, indulgent husband, ready to humor every whim, to give her idolatrous devotion, she found herself tied to a querulous invalid, who had been accustomed to the unquestioning obedience and devotion of his daughter and grandson, and who exacted a similar care from his reluctant wife. In place of balls, concerts, and opera, the gay life of the metropolis, Mrs. Gorham found herself shut up in a country house, certainly sufficiently handsome and well appointed to meet the most fastidious taste, but lonely beyond endurance to the woman miles away from her own friends, and coldly ignored by the friends of the Gorhams, fully aware of her mercenary treachery.

Yet she endured as patiently as possible, till the old man, pining for Jane and Gilbert, sickened and failed visibly.

It was when all hope was gone that the young wife cautiously, but very plainly, urged the necessity of making a will. It seemed to her as if all the misery of life concentrated in the peevish reply:

"I have nothing to will. All he property belongs to Jane! I only hold a life lease in my late wife's estate."

"Jane!" gasped Myra, remembering the insulting terms in which she had intimated to that spinster that she preferred to reign alone at Fern Nook.

"Certainly! If Gilbert's father had lived he would have shared in the property, but it all reverts to Gilbert if Jane dies unmarried."

All Gilbert's? And might have been all hers.

Myra felt too stunned and miserable even to cry! To think that all her base scheming, her feigned devotion had led her only to this, the beggared widow of an old man.

But after the funeral was over Mrs. Gorham made a few discoveries. First, all the deep black of her dress, with the fine white line of her widow's cap, the somber crape and soft snowy tarletan were most becoming to her brilliant blonde beauty. She studied her dress to its minute detail, and when it was perfect formed her new plans. In her late husband's desk she found $5,000 which she appropriated, leaving Miss Jane and Gilbert, who came to the funeral, to defray all expenses. She accepted Miss Gorham's offer of the use of the house for a year, and when she was left in possession unscrupulously sold many small but valuable articles there.

When the year was over, and Miss Jane Gorham once more opened her house to her friends, she was mute with consternation when one day a carriage, heavily laden with baggage, drove up to her door, from which alighted her father's widow, who threw herself into her arms, sobbing.

"Do not send me away. I am dying in the gloomy seclusion of my dear husband's home. Let me stay with you!"

She stayed, of course. Miss Jane's old-fashioned notions of hospitality were too strong to permit her to turn a guest away, even if uninvited and unwelcome. But she smiled grimly to see how Gilbert's face fell at the announcement of the visitor.

"She is my father's widow," the spinster said gravely. "So we must endure her for a time."

She was a most fascinating widow when she appeared at the late dinner, in a thin, black dress, all jet and trimming, with some knots of black ribbon in her profusion of golden curls. Her color was softly tinted as ever, her blue eyes as babyish and winsome; yet when her first evening was over she knew she had gained nothing in her effort to recapture the heart she had thrown aside.

But she did not despair. She sang the old songs that Gilbert had once heard with rapture. She varied her dress with laces, ribbons and jewelry, till its pretense of mourning was a mere mockery. She put herself in Gilbert's way with every dainty device of feminine needle-work. She entreated permission to prepare his favorite dishes with her own white hands. And, as if to try his constancy, Miss Jane aided and abetted this scheme for her nephew's fortune, and spoke but little of Ellen, never inviting her now to the house, so that Gilbert was forced to seek her more and more in her own home, and found her ever more lovely and winsome from the contrast with the idol he had proved to be clay. It was six months after the arrival of Mrs. Gorham in her step-daughter's house, when Gilbert, returning from a drive with Ella, met his aunt in the hall, and, clasping her in a close embrace, whispered very softly:

"Ella is mine! Wish me joy!"

"From my heart," she whispered back.

Radiant with joy and hope, Gilbert, after changing his driving-dress, hurried to the sitting-room, to tell Aunt Jane "all about it." He had absolutely forgotten their guest, and it gave him an unpleasant shock, when he found her, seated in a low chair, busied about some wool work, that showed to great advantage her tiny white hands, glittering with jeweled rings.

She rose to greet him, and then, to his embarrassed surprise, she clasped her jeweled hands, and, bursting into tears, sobbed.

"Oh, Gilbert, do not look at me so coldly. I cannot bear it. I know I deserve nothing from you but contempt, but if you knew how sorely my mother urged me, how importunate your grandfather was, you would forgive me. I was insane with their persecutions, and I thought in my misery that I could still see you, and perhaps—some day—when I was free again—I—I——"

And here even her effrontery gave out, and she only sobbed convulsively. Taken by surprise, every gentlemanly instinct urged Gilbert to comfort this woman so recklessly offering him what it was once his fondest hope to possess. But his whole soul shrank from her, his manly, true heart was only outraged by her unwomanly advances.

Gravely he stood, looking down upon her as she shrank into the chair, sobbing and covering her face, and yet furtively watching him.

"Gilbert, speak one tender word to me," she implored; "say you do not utterly despise me."

But he did. He sought for words to convey his meaning kindly, and they would not come. Blushing like a boy, in his confusion and pain, he said, gently:

"I am very sorry, Mrs. Gorham"——

"It used to be Myra," she sobbed reproachfully.

"True, but those were days that can never be recalled."

"You are cruel."

"I do not wish to be so, but I must be frank with you. The past is dead! Never can we revive that love that was once so very trifling to you."

"No, no; you wrong me. Alas for me it is my misfortune that I cannot conquer my love."

"But mine died when it was insulted and slighted."

Here Gilbert drew a deep sigh of relief at the appearance of Aunt Jane, entering the room behind Myra's chair. Mrs. Gorham did not hear her light step, and sobbed:

"Your love cannot be dead, Gilbert. It will live again. Pity and forgive me."

"I both pity and forgive you," said Gilbert, very gently.

"But"—

"But," said Aunt Jane, in her hardest tone, and with her face set in rigid lines, "you forget, Mrs. Gorham, the law does not permit a man to marry his grandmother."

With a cry of rage, Mrs. Gorham sprung to her feet, but something in the cold, grave faces checked the torrent of wrath upon her lips, and she left the room.

The next day she terminated her visit, and loftily declined an invitation, sent three months later, to be present at the wedding of Gilbert Gorham and his gentle bride—Ella.

Many Bosoms With a Single Thought.

An amusing incident happened on a Kansas City paper the other day. Two brothers, named Hart, were arrested somewhere in the interior for obtaining goods under false pretenses. There was unusual commotion and mystery among the members of the editorial staff that evening, and each said unto the other, "I've got a bully thing for to-morrow's paper—just you wait and see;" and, being asked what the bully thing was, declined to go into further particulars just then. Next morning the mystery was solved. There was an editorial note in the first column as follows:

"The Hart Brothers were arrested yesterday, at ——, for defrauding their creditors. They were evidently, as the poet says, 'Two Harts that beat as one.'"

Half-way down the same page was another editorial paragraph, as follows:

"Two Harts that beat their creditors like one, or even more, were arrested yesterday, at ——. Let us hope that the righteous Judge will, in the words of Cicero, Soc et tuum."

Over on the second column there was a display heading, in big black type: "Two Harts That Beat Like One;" away down at the foot of the third column was a little item, surreptitiously inserted by the advertising clerk, about two hearts that beat as one, and half way down the fourth was a letter from "T. Y. Po," the acknowledged wit of the composing-room, addressed to the editor of the Kansas City Whangdoodle, and asking if that wasn't a case of two hearts (Harts) that beat as one. The different authors of this exquisite witticism spent the morning in paying visits of condolence to each other, and remarking with disparaging sniffs, that it would only be in accordance with fraternal feeling and newspaper etiquette to let another member of the staff know when one intended making a dum fool of himself in a specific direction.—Chicago Tribune.

A Great Curiosity.

Yesterday a great curiosity was placed on our table—a deer's heart containing the flint barb of an arrow. Last Sunday, Mr. E. Sharp, of Arcata, was out on Boynton's prairie on a deer hunt. He saw a large five-point buck and brought it down with his rifle. Taking off the hide and securing the heart and other rare bits, he started home. On arriving there Mrs. Sharp boiled the heart and when the meal was ready placed it on the table. In attempting to cut the heart the knife struck against something hard. The lady split the heart open, and in the fleshy part the flint barb of an arrow was found. It must have been there a long time, as the flesh calloused all around it, and the scar, where the barb entered, is plain to be seen. This is quite a curiosity, as only a few such instances are known to be on record.—Humboldt (Cal.) Times.

The Fifty-Dollar Coin.

It appears that the new $50 gold coin, which is to be struck from a die now in course of preparation by the officers of the Mint, will not be the first coin of that value struck in the United States. In 1851 $50 gold coins were issued at the Assay Office in San Francisco. It is said that millions of dollars of this denomination were coined and went into use, but that they gradually disappeared, for the reason that they were intrinsically worth more than $50 in gold by reason of the silver they contained in excess of the standard. They came to be used for mechanical purposes, or they were sent to the Mint for recoinage. Washington Cor. New York Tribune.

THE NEZ PERCES INDIANS.

Causes of the Trouble in Idaho—The Indians and Their Home—A Charming Spot.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

The Nez Perces Indians occupy a reservation uncommonly rich in timber, hunting, tilling and grazing lands, even for an Indian reserve, which is generally a small paradise, the choicest region owned by the Government. It contains in the neighborhood of 746,651 acres, and is situated in Idaho, between and embracing the Clearwater and Salmon rivers. The reservation is surrounded by Indian tribes which cherish an ancient hatred of the Nez Perces, who a few years ago vanquished the encroaching Sioux, and effectually kept at a respectful distance the Flatheads, Snakes or Shoshones, and the formidable Blackfeet and Crows, not to mention other smaller tribes. [illegible] given by the Nez Perces occurred many years since. Those who have read Washington Irving's entertaining narrative, "Bonneville's Adventures," will remember the many narrow escapes the courageous Captain had from predatory bands of Indians in his famous passage of the Indian country from the Missouri frontier to Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia river, forty years or more ago. The Nez Perces were very friendly to Capt. Bonneville's command, and paid them many graceful attentions. They fed them when they were at the point of starvation, and actually gave them horses and a guide when they resumed their march across mountain and plain, prairie and chasm. The neighboring tribes have never forgiven the Nez Perces for aiding and abetting the encroaching march of the white men, and hate them for it to this day, though the Nez Perces made themselves obnoxious in other ways. They were not wanting in barbarity, and could give lessons in roasting captives at the stake, the tear-'em-to-pieces trick, and other diversions. Of late years they have apparently recovered from their weakness for the pale face and have made trouble for the Government on various occasions; but, whatever diabolism they may commit within their reservation, they are securely caged within its boundaries and there is no fear of their escaping, for to do so would be braving the lion's jaws. They are surrounded by their enemies of yore. On the south are the Bannacks and Shoshones; on the east and north, Bannacks, Flatheads, and Blackfeet; while on the wooded prairies to the west, in Washington Territory, roam the Pigehous and Walla Wallas. The reservation contains from 3,000 to 3,500 Nez Perces and an equal number of whites. They are fine specimens of the American Indian. Their physiognomy is marked by the Roman nose—the infallible indicator of courage, resolution, and tribular intelligence—large eyes, an oval face (flat, stolid, faces, with pug noses, are rare among them), and high foreheads. In stature they are large and symmetrical, and are athletic and proficient in acrobatic sports. They are excellent equestrians, and are good warriors. Their dress in incongruous, consisting of the Caucasian hat, shirt and coat, and the Indian breechclout, leggings and moccasins. Their mode of living is hunting, fishing and raising vegetables, all the drudgery and menial labor being performed by the squaws, in conformity with the recognized ancient Indian custom. The Nez Perces tribe is divided and subdivided into many ramifications, of one family each. Every family—cousins, brothers, parents, grandparents, etc.—has a separate camp, governed by a small chief. The Nez Perces belonged to the Sahaptin family, and called themselves Numepo. No better evidence of the progress of the Nez Perces need be given than the fact that school-books and the New Testament have been printed in their language.

The reservation lies in Nez Perces and Shoshone counties, Idaho, Camas prairie, a very rich and desirable expanse of country, being the nucleus of the reservation. This well-known tract is situated on the Salmon river, about sixty miles south of Lewiston, and is about forty miles wide. In summer it is covered with vast herds of cattle, driven there to fatten on its luxuriant herbage. It is occupied by a few large ranches, with an occasional small farm. Its fertility of soil and excellence as a cattle range is attracting many settlers and it is rapidly becoming settled. This is one of the causes of the present outbreak, as the Indians resent this intrusion.

A Shrewd Young Tramp.

The tramp industry, like other industries, seems to flourish because it pays, as witness the two diaries of the systematic Master Frank Labelle, or Taylor, aged 17, originally of St. James parish, La., then of the wide, wide world, and now of the Albany Penitentiary, where he will remain for six months. He is slight and effeminate in appearance, and his lay was to work lawyers' offices, asking for $2.70 with which to get home to Maine. He wanted to get copying, and, as the lawyers usually had no copying, neither any $2.70, they would compromise by giving him a quarter or an order for a dinner, or something of the sort. He always asked for his benefactor's address, nominally to return him the sum, but really to enter it in his diary, with the day of the month and the amount of the donation. This diary showed that, between December 7 and May 9, five months, he had received $449.05, and during the last week of that term $35.05. His best day's work was at Galveston, March 15, when he took in $15.50. He says that Galveston and Houston are the best and most generous places he has met with. The names of his victims include railroad and steamboat officials, newspaper men, United States Senators, bankers, lawyers and the like.—New York World.

A Child Asleep in a Tall Tree Top.

A very remarkable escape occurred yesterday to a little nephew of Edward Powers, boot and shoe dealer. The child, who is 5 years old, was missing at 12 o'clock, when looked for at dinner time, but, after calling him, the family ate dinner, and, the child not appearing, became alarmed and instituted a search throughout the neighborhood. His hat was found in the yard under some large maple trees. Nothing could be heard of him until about 3 o'clock, when a girl discovered him up in one of the limbs of a maple tree, forty feet from the ground, asleep. The girl called him, but he did not awake, and, the situation being discovered, his aunt prevented any noise being made until two boys climbed the tree and awoke him, and he got down safely.—Detroit Post.

That Big Frog.

It was remembered afterward that he had a sneaking, low-down look, and the boys were sorry that they didn't arrest him as the Nathan murderer. He called at the Ninth Avenue Station and asked if they had an aquarium there, and if they didn't want a Lake St. Clair frog to put in it, and he added:

"Gentlemen, it is a frog which I caught myself, and he really ought to be on exhibition. I never saw a frog of his size before."

"How large is it?" inquired a Sergeant, instinctively glancing toward the [illegible].

"Gentlemen, I hate to give you the figures, because I'm a stranger," replied the man.

"There's some old whoppers up in the lake," put in one of the relief squad. "I've seen 'em as big as a stove-cover, and even bigger."

"Well, some one ought to have this frog who can feed him up well," said the stranger. "I ain't much on natural science, and I've seen about all there is to see, but this frog—great heavens! Some man ought to take him round the country!"

"How did you catch him?" asked the Captain.

"Run him down with a tug and threw a fish-net over him."

"And he's a monster, eh?"

"A monster. Well, I don't want to give you dimensions. Three reporters were at my house last night to get his length over all, breadth of beam, and carrying capacity, but I wouldn't let them in. I don't care for the glory of the capture, but simply desire the advancement of the general interests of the State."

"I've heard sailors tell of seeing frogs up there as large a nail-keg, but I thought they were lying," observed the Sergeant.

"Nail-keg! Why, d'ye suppose I'd come around here with a frog which you could put into a nail-keg?"

"I suppose he'd go into a barrel," tremblingly remarked the Sergeant.

"Gentlemen, you may have sailed across Lake St. Clair," coldly replied the stranger, "but it's plain to me you never shoved a boat through the marshes. Would I fool away my time on a frog no larger than a barrel? Would a tug-boat chase such a frog?"

"I shouldn't be a bit surprised if this frog was as large as a hogshead," said the Captain. "I've seen 'em up there even larger than that."

"A hogshead! Gentlemen, I see that you don't care for this frog; you are willing that I should ship it away to some other town. Good-by, gentlemen."

"Hold on!" called the Captain, holding out his last cigar. "We believe you, of course. If you said this frog was as large as a wagon-box I should believe you, for I've seen 'em up there fully as large as that. Please give us the dimensions of this frog."

The man lit his cigar, took a pill-box from his vest pocket, and, shaking out a frog not over three days transformed from a pollywog, he quietly observed:

"Gentlemen, get out your tape-lines!"

When they rose up he had vanished.—Detroit Free Press.

Religious Fanaticism.

The birthday of the Prophet, which coincides with the return of the pilgrims from Mecca, was celebrated this year at Cairo with the traditionary doseh, or passage of the mounted imaum over the bodies of the faithful. These, being for the most part of the very humblest classes—camel and donkey drivers, grooms, runners and fellahs—had been drugged with hasheesh and excited to religious frenzy by the attendant dervishes. These packed them closely, face downwards, to the number of some 300, in a long line on the roadway, and over this human pavement the imaum, mounted on a white horse, rode for a quarter of an hour, amid the frantic yelling of verses of the Koran by the attendant priests. There were the usual and natural casualties—arms broken, skulls fractured and ribs caved in, and some fifteen of the worshipers went or will go to paradise.

Recovered, After Losing Part of His Brain.

About a month ago a son of Mr. Geo. Franz, who lives about two miles inland from St. Helens, fell from a wagon, striking his head upon a sharp stump. The points of the stump penetrated the back part of his head to the brain, and part of the brain dropped out. The strangest part of the story is that the boy got up, took his horses to the stable and fed them before feeling more pain than from an ordinary fall. In about an hour after the accident he became faint and seemed to be dying. Dr. Stewart, a well-known physician, was sent for and came immediately. He examined the wound and found that a part of the brain was gone, and he himself removed a portion that protruded. He treated the boy a few days and succeeded in saving his life. At last accounts he was able to walk about, and experiences no trouble, either mentally or physically, from the loss.—Santa Barbara (Cal.) Press.

The Electoral Commission Records.

In drafting the bill for the Electoral Commission no provisions was made for a depositor of the records of the commission. They consequently now remain in the custody of the Secretary of the commission, who is considerably embarrassed with their possession. The law makes him responsible to no one, and the official record of the Presidential title might be destroyed at any hour without responsibility. The Secretary is a very worthy gentleman and would be glad to be relieved of the custody of such important documents.—Washington Correspondence.

Another Astonisher.

Mrs. John Bohler of Jalapa, wife of the borough Supervisor, was breaking eggs into a crock, and when she opened one she found a small, perfect egg, almost as large as a robin's egg, and, with a speckled shell, imbedded in the yelk. This little egg contained a partially developed, perfectly formed snake.—Pottsville (Pa.) Chronicle.

MEASURES.

BY HELEN HUNT.

I have a dainty cup of glass;
It is not graven by a line;
Its beauty is its frailness;
A baby's hand might crush it fine.

I gave a man to drink from it,
One day, a draught of water cold.
He took it like a woman's hand,
In reverent, loving, lingering hold.

He held it up in keen delight,
Gazed on its texture rare and fine;
"Such glass as this," he rapturous said,
"Gives water all the grace of wine."

Another day, another man
Sat eating, drinking at my board
Into the dainty, peerless glass,
A peerless wine for him I poured.

He drank it at a swallow down;
With smothered wrath I [illegible],
Nor wine nor glass was aught to him,
So that he quenched his boorish thirst.

"Ah me!" I said, "to him that hath,
All [illegible] tribute bring;
From him that hath not, each takes back,
And leaves him beggared, though a king."

Russian Generals.

The enumeration of the Russian Generals in the following extract from Southey's humorous poem, "The March to Moscow," may again be read and provoke a smile. Many of the same names that figured in Bonaparte's disastrous campaign of 1812 are once more made familiar to us by the dispatches from the East:

There was Formazow and Jemalow,
And all the others that end in ow;
Milosdarovitch and Jaladovitch,
And Karatschowitch,
And all the others that end in itch;
Schamscheff, Souchosaneff,
And Schepaleff,
And all the others that end in eff;
Wasiltschikoff, Kostomaroff
And Tchoglokoff,
And all the others that end in off;

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Little Brown Seed in the Furrow.

A little brown seed [illegible] furrow
  Lay still in its [illegible] bed,
While violets blue, and lilies white
  Were whispering overhead.
They whispered of [illegible] and awe,
Of glittering dew and floating air,
Of beauty and rapture everywhere—
  And the seed heard all they said.

Poor little brown seed in the furrow!
  So close [illegible],
So far away from the great [illegible],
  Where life seemed [illegible],
In her heart she treasured every word,
And she longed for the blessing of which she heard,
For the light that shone, and the airs that stirred
  In that land, so [illegible].

The little brown seed in the furrow
  Was thrilled with a strange unrest;
A warm new hope beat tremblingly
  In the tiny, heaving breast;
With her two small hands clasped close in [illegible]
She lifted them up in the darkness there;
Up, up through the sod, toward sun and air,
  Her folded hands she pressed.

Oh little brown seed in the furrow,
  At last you have pierced the mold!
And, quivering with a life intense,
  Your beautiful leaves unfold,
Like wings outspread for upward flight;
And slowly, slowly, in dew and light,
A sweet bud opens—till, in God's sight,
  You wear a crown of gold!

—Ida W. Benham, in St. Nicholas for July.

Around the Farm.

Experience teaches us that the locust cannot stand long-continued wet, cold weather in spring.—Kansas Advance.

As early as the middle of June, sometimes before, we have practiced opening the hay harvest, and find when feeding that the earliest cut is preferred to the later by all the stock.—Ohio Farmer.

A horticulturist furnishes the following recipe to preserve all kinds of grain from the ravages of cut-worms, birds, etc.: One pound sulphate of iron, one ounce aloes; dissolve in water heated to 90 or 95 degrees, and pour over one bushel of grain.—Ohio Farmer.

The relative feeding value of mangolds and swedes depends entirely upon the soil and prevailing climate of a district. In the South of England, warm soils, mangolds are superior in feeding qualities; in the northern counties, and on cold soils, especially where a good deal of rain falls during autumn, swedes are decidedly inferior to mangolds.—Prof. Voelcker's Letters.

Tumors on Cows.—The usual cause of swellings on the knees and thighs of cows is lying upon an uneven hard substance. Jersey cows are more subject to it than others, probably from the fact that the skin is finer and more delicate than others. Remove the cause, and in most cases the tumors will disappear; bathing and friction will perhaps hasten the absorption.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

The best time to cut wheat is when it is in the dough state. The straw at this stage is yellow at the ground, and all the remainder is still green, but is followed by a speedy change to yellow throughout the whole length as it approaches maturity. A large proportion of the wheat of the country is permitted to become too ripe before harvesting to secure the best results.—Journal of Agriculture.

A Scare-Crow.—A good way to keep crows from corn-fields is to string ten or fifteen kernels of corn on a long horse hair (from the tail), and a crow will swallow one of them, and the note of alarm will be sounded, and it will be impossible for him to dislodge the grain, and in a short time he will cut his own throat by scratching at the corn and hair; and, in consequence of the noise the crow makes, all of his companions will leave the field and not pull up any more corn that season.

White Holland Turkeys.—This variety of turkeys is becoming more popular as the public becomes better acquainted with their excellent table qualities and beauty; for certainly a large, clean, healthy white turkey is as beautiful a fowl as anyone could wish to see. They are pure white in plumage, with pink legs, and of good size, though not so large as the bronze, and yet large enough for market; and we are told are as hardy, and stand our severe changes of temperature in winter better than any other variety. The feathers are nearly equal to geese feathers for sale, and will bring almost as much if carefully selected, and the large feathers stripped.—Poultry Journal and Record.

Watering Gardens.—When the warm, sunny days come and our gardens look dry and parched, we are so strongly tempted to use the watering pot that we frequently yield, and so injure the plants that we are striving to benefit. If we attempt to water our flower-beds at all, we must do it thoroughly. Wait until after sunset, and then pour on water until it seems ready to run off. Let this soak into the ground and then water again. Finally, spread freshly-cut grass over the beds; this covering will tend to keep the ground soft and moist. The usual method of sprinkling the flower-beds slightly only tends to make the surface of the ground hard and dry, thus excluding air and moisture.—Western Agriculturist.

About the House.

Washing Carpets.—Housekeepers may be glad to know that a table-spoonful of ammonia in one gallon of warm water will restore the color of carpets.

Lamp Smoke.—To prevent the smoking of a lamp, soak the wick in strong vinegar and dry it well before using it. It will then burn clear and pleasant, and give much satisfaction for the trouble of preparing it.

How to Wash Lace.—To wash lace and make it look as good as new, dissolve some salts of tartar in hot water, and allow the lace to lie in it for an hour or so, then take it out, squeeze it dry, and the cleaning is complete.

How to Use Lard.—Lard for pastry may be used as hard as it can be cut with a knife, and will make far better paste than if left stand to warm. It needs only to be cut through the flour—not rubbed.

To Take Wrinkles Out of Silk.—If silk scarfs or handkerchiefs have become wrinkled, moisten, not wet them, evenly with a sponge dipped in a weak solution of glue; then pin the article, smoothly and tightly stretched, upon a screen or a mattress.

Cold Meats.—Cut any sort of cold meat in thin slices, and place in a baking dish, seasoning with salt, pepper and summer savory or thyme; add a little of the meat gravy and tomatoes to more than cover; thickening with bread or cracker crumb; bake in the oven.

To Boil Potatoes.—Let the potatoes be of a size; do not put them in the pot until the water boils; when done, pour off the water and remove the cover until all the steam is gone; then scatter on half a teaspoonful of salt, and cover the pot with a towel. By adopting this plan watery potatoes will be mealy.

Boiling Beets.—With many housewives there is a great deal of bother about beet-root in case it should lose its color, and minute directions are generally given in [illegible] for handling the roots carefully, so as to avoid all abrasion of the skin. That beet-roots should be washed absolutely clean before being put into the pot is, of course, very necessary; but the most simple way to avoid spoiling the color is to drop the roots into boiling water.

Russian Villages.

The houses of the villages are in general dilapidated and without windows, and only a little trap-door to peep through, which is shut in cold weather. The peasants live as they lived for centuries before the time of Peter the Great. The dwellings, fronted by birch trees, stand along the post road. At the entrance of the village is a signboard, on which the number of men and cows in it is painted. The women and children are not thought worth the trouble of enumeration. The men wear loose red or blue shirts, gathered at the waist. A few have boots, but the rest only leggings bound with thongs, the shoes being of a kind of basket-work, made from strips of birch. The women have a coarse chemise, with full sleeves, over which is the national dress, the sarafane of blue or red cotton, without a bodice, and kept on the shoulder by a band. Those who are married have a hankerchief tied round the head. The girls wear their hair in one long plait down the back. The children, in summer, have only a short shirt with open sleeves. In front of every house is a bench upon which the tenants and their visitors sit in the summer to chat or perhaps to sing. The provincial towns are much alike throughout the empire.

Galveston.

The great fire which recently destroyed a portion of the business part of Galveston, Texas, turns attention to a city where enterprise has placed large commercial interests, notwithstanding it seems to have a most dangerous location. Galveston is on the eastern extremity of Galveston island—a low strip of land only a mile wide at the city. It is separated from the main-land by a navigable channel two miles wide. In ordinary weather this channel is safe for shipping; but when large tidal waves roll in, as they often do, almost certain destruction overtakes vessels that have not escaped into the bay. Great damage has been done during equinoctial storms, as was the case in 1867 and 1875. The city is partially built upon piles, as the island at that point is only seven feet above the sea-level. There are no wells, the city depending for its water supply upon cisterns erected on scaffolds. Yet Galveston is an important commercial city, exporting large quantities of cotton, wool, hides, etc. The coast trade is extensive; and the island, notwithstanding its exposed situation, produces excellent tropical fruits.

They Had Met Before.

A Confederate Colonel was introduced to Gen. Grant at a reception in London. This gentleman, having taken Gen. Grant's hand, remarked: "General, it is a long time since we met." "Have I met you before?" asked Grant, scrutinizing the Virginian's face. "Yes," was the reply, "and under very different circumstances from these. It will be fifteen years on the 3d of July next." Grant's eyes ranged round the room, then over the ceiling, then they came back illuminated by memory, and he exclaimed, "Vicksburg!" "That was the place, sir," said the Colonel; "on the heights I met you, and stood by Pemberton when we surrendered."

Barnum and Bob.

Mr. P. T. Barnum is a temperance reformer on a small scale. When he was in Detroit a valet, whom he had discharged years before for drunkenness, solicited a re-engagement. Said Mr. Barnum: "Bob, if you will join the Red Ribbon men, and at the expiration of three months give me proof that you have kept the pledge, I will take you back in my service, give your wife a good situation in my family, and enter into a written contract to employ you both as long as I live." The grateful fellow eagerly promised to sign the pledge, and started homeward to tell his wife the story of his happy turn of fortune.

Military Rewards in Italy.

One of the most serious incumbrances upon the industries of Italy, as it is in all other European countries, is its great standing army, which numbers about four hundred thousand men. The pay of the private soldier is something almost beyond belief in its littleness, that of the infantry being but two cents, while cavalry and artillery receive but three cents each per day for their service. The salaries of officers, both military and civil, are not moderate in their dimensions, that of the King, as heading the list, being 16,500,000 francs, or about $3,500,000 per annum.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A Future Great Wheat Region.

Indian Commissioner Smith reports that he was surprised at the fertility of the country bordering on the Red River of the North and its tributaries, and at the heavy tide of immigration that is setting in on both sides of the boundary line between Minnesota and Manitoba. He thinks this section one of the finest wheat-growing countries in the world, and says that it will soon be occupied by a large and thriving population.—New York Tribune.

A Surprising Genius.

Reynolds, a little 5-year-old son of Dr. Best of Millersburg, has a wonderful gift for mathematics. He can add, subtract, multiply and divide with accuracy, and has never received instruction in either. If you put a question to him he will bow his head as if in deep thought, and then give you the answer. If incorrect, he will do the same thing over again until he gets the answer correct.—Paris (Ky.) Citizen.

Greasing Axles.

On the authority of the Carriage Monthly, more injury is done to carriages and wagons by greasing too much than the reverse. Tallow is the best lubricant for wood axles, and castor oil for iron. Lard and common grease are apt to penetrate the hub, and work their way out around the tenons of the spokes and spoil the wheel. For common wood axles, just enough grease should be applied to the spindle to give it a light coating. To oil an iron axle, first wipe clean with a cloth wet with turpentine, and then apply a few drops of castor oil near the shoulder and end. One teaspoonful is enough for the four wheels. Carriages are sometimes oiled so much that their appearance is spoiled by having the grease spattered upon their varnished surfaces. When they are washed in that condition, the grease is apt to be transferred to the chamois from the wheel, and from thence on to the panels.

Flora Temple in Her Old Age.

A letter writer who attended the recent sale of yearlings at Chestnut Hill farm, near Philadelphia, says there was one box stall in the stable that was passed carelessly by while the yearlings were being exhibited, until a gentleman casually remarked, "what have you got in there?" The groom opened the door and the visitors saw a poor-looking, decrepit old mare with every bone in her body standing out as if the flesh was gradually wearing away, and eyes sunken and bleared, all that was left of the once-famous Flora Temple, the queen of the trotting turf. Flora came to Mr. Welch's in October, 1864, and since that time has had three foals. The old mare is now 32 years of age and will soon pass away.

Texas Cattle.

The Texas cattle-breeders alone own 1,025,000 cattle, besides horses and mules, and have 682,000 acres of inclosed pasturage. In 1870 the statistics showed that the State contained 424,504 horses, 61,322 mules and asses, 428,048 milch cows, 132,409 oxen, 2,933,045 other cattle; or, for all the owners in the State, only 2,469,000 more than are now owned by ten men alone.

"The Sure Witness."

"The nineteenth century is the age of novels," remarks a literary historian—he might have added with equal truth, "and novel impositions." Studied politeness has been passed off on us for native refinement, the forms of devotion for its essence, and speculation for science, until we look askance at every new person or thing, and to an assertion of merit, invariably exclaim, "Prove it!" In brief, Satan has made himself so omnipresent, that we look for his cloven foot everywhere—even in a bottle of medicine. Imagine a lady, having a complexion so sallow that you would deny her claims to the Caucasian type if her features did not conform to it, purchasing her first bottle of the Golden Medical Discovery. The one dollar is paid in the very identical manner in which Mr. Taylor might be expected to purchase a lottery ticket after his experience with "No. 104,163," with this difference, his doubt would be the result of personal experience, while hers would be founded on what a certain practitioner (who has been a whole year trying to correct her refractory liver) has said concerning it. At home, she examines the bottle half suspiciously, tastes of its contents carefully, takes the prescribed dose more carefully, and then proceeds to watch the result with as much anxiety as a practitioner would count the pulse-beats of a dying man. She takes another dose, and another, and shows the bottle to her friends, telling them she "feels better." Her skin loses its bilious tint, her eyes regain their luster, her accustomed energy returns, and the fact that she purchases another bottle is a sure witness that she has found the Golden Medical Discovery to be a reliable remedy for the disease indicated. The lady wisely resolves that in future her estimate of any medicine will be based upon a personal knowledge of its effects, and not upon what some practitioner (who always makes long bills rhyme with pills) may say of it. Dr. Pierce is in receipt of letters from hundreds of the largest wholesale and retail druggists in the United States stating that at the present time there is a greater demand for the Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets than ever before. In affections of the liver and blood they are unsurpassed.

Revive the Drooping Energies.

When the physical energies droop, revive them with that safest and most active of tonics, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. By a timely use of this salutary and agreeable medicine you will save yourself from positive disease; for, be assured that the languor and loss of strength and appetite which troubles you is in fact the precursor of some malady of, perhaps, a serious nature. Appetite, tranquillity of the nervous system, and pristine vigor, will assuredly be restored if the Bitters are used systematically, and the alimentary disturbance, which in nine cases out of ten gives rise to debility and nervousness, be entirely removed. Regularity of the bowels, active biliary secretion, the expulsion of impurities from the blood through the kidneys, are also among the beneficent effects of this admirable restorative.

For a Good Breakfast or Tea,

you have often to make rolls, biscuit and such delicacies, in about ten minutes. It's easy and certain with Dooley's Yeast Powder, the best of them all. Troubled housewife, here is one cause of your annoyances swept away. Full weight and the best material are the watchword of the manufacturers.

THE SUN.

1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.

The price of the Daily Sun is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.

The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.

1,100 NEWSPAPERS.

The attention of Advertisers is called to our List of Weekly Newspapers. Send for a Catalogue.

MARVELOUS CHEAPNESS.

An advertisement occupying the space of One Inch will be inserted one week in 1,100 newspapers for $87.50—or less than eight cents per newspaper.

CUTS AND ELECTROTYPES.

No extra charge for cuts, trade-marks, unusual display, or advertisements inserted across two or more columns; only twenty-six cuts are required for the whole number of newspapers. Cuts should not be over two and one-eighth inches in width.

AN INTERESTING STATEMENT.

To send an advertising order to 1,100 newspapers would require an investment of $34.50 for postage; stationery would cost nearly as much; the labor of addressing 1,100 envelopes is considerable; to write 1,100 orders would be a great task; to print these would cost something. Our price for a five-line advertisement in the whole 1,100 papers, one week, is $43.75, or less than the cost of postage and stationery.

NOTICES IN NEWS COLUMNS.

To have an advertisement set up in the form of reading matter, and inserted in the news columns of newspapers, is a very efficient mode of advertising. These lists of newspapers offer advantages in this respect which no other newspaper or lists of newspapers possess. Manufacturers and merchants desiring to publish a description of their wares or establishments will find this plan very serviceable. By publishing a series of brief notices, they can soon make the merits of their goods familiar to the people of the regions in which these papers are published.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 12, 1877.

[Correspondence of The Auburn Courier.]

JOTTINGS ON THE WING.

TOLEDO, O., July 5, 1877.

Having occasion to visit southern Ohio we left home on the morning of the 25th ult. via Baltimore & Ohio. As we pulled out of Auburn Junction the terrific storm of that day had fairly got under way, but there is no time to wait for the elements when connections are to be made by rail. Nothing of particular interest occurred down the road save visions of decapitated forests, swollen streams and scattered fences—having the appearance as if we had been suddenly transferred upon the coast of India, and one of the old-fashioned cyclones known to that latitude had passed over us. This side of St. Joe a fallen tree across the track caused a slight delay, and we arrived at Hicksville "hard against the stream" only 20 minutes behind time.

For a new road the B. & O. stands without a rival, and the traveling public can rely upon speed, safety and comfort, by taking passage over this line, as no accidents to speak of have occurred since it was completed, and its rolling stock is of the finest order and the time schedule as quick as by any other route. And these results may be attributable to the fact that the road is under good management. H. S. Morse, Esq., Assistant Master of Transportation, and J.D. Flynn, Esq. Superintendent of Telegraph, with head quarters at Garrett, are officers who possess superior executive ability, and they are gentlemen of sterling integrity.

A stop off at Hicksville to "shake" with our mutual friend Hank Little of the Independent, and we proceed on our journey by next train.

Tiffin at 7 a. m. Here we have a few hours to spare before the next south bound train over the C. S. & C. A stroll through the principal thoroughfare of this city would at once convince the stranger that this is a city in fact, and not in name only. Four years ago it had but one railroad, and now it can boast of three first-class roads, with other commercial acquisitions to balance the account. Calling at the office of the Hon. W. P. Noble, we found that gentlemen "at home," and in a brief conversation over the political situation learned that the skies were bright for the Democracy in the coming gubernatorial race in this State. Put Ohio down for 40,000 majority. We cannot take leave of Tiffin without acknowledging the hospitalities of the Whistler House, the leading hotel of the city. Journeying south via the Cincinnati road and returning north the following day, we pull up at Clyde, Ohio, Junction of the C. S. & C. and Lake Shore roads, as the evening of the last day of the rosy month of June are closing in. The travel over this line is immense at this season of the year—of those who leave the cares of the city behind, to dwell at the beautiful Islands of Lake Erie, where the fishing is good and the fun of tickling frogs with a straw, hath a joy unknown to the uninitiated!

Clyde, home of lovely women and free hearted men: where repose the remains of McPherson, and within bugle call of where General Croghan mauled the enemy in the war of '12. Land of song and story! We had the honor of establishing the pioneer journal at this place, then a small village, but now quite a pretentious city. Since we 'folded our tent' and moved to other scenes, now almost ten years agone, the place has more than doubled in population and commercial wealth. Among the noticable features is the splendid Union Passenger Depot, the finest between Toledo and Chicago Mine host Kauffman of the Nichols House is still on deck, and Charley Scholey, formerly with the Lake Shore road, is manager of the St. Vincent Hotel. The last we saw of the rival landlords they were having a test on a wager as to who had the longest hog. Charley won by a flank movement in clipping three inches off from Kauffman's—hog's tail during an adjournment for roast bees.

The crop prospects throughout this State are promising, and like our people at home, Ohioans are only waiting to market the same to relieve them of the existing hard times. The harvest is already over in this part of the State. In small fruits this country is the garden of the State. Strawberry and raspberry fields, and extensive peach and apple orchards line the road all the way from Springfield to Sandusky.

Waiving our hand in farewell to bonnie Clyde northward bound, we reached the city of the vine, (Sandusky) where we saw the light of our last newspaper venture go out in the political storm of '73, at 8 p. m. of the 2d inst. Here we could tarry but briefly, and as our business was especially with the General Ticket Agent of the C. S. & C. railroad, we repaired to the general office, and as usual found that gentleman at his post. In the late railroad war, changes have been made by the "ins" and "outs," ad libitum, in most every department, but it seems that H. M. Bronson, Esq., remains a fixture. We see no reason why it should not be thus, for he has managed his department of the road most successfully during his administration, extending over a period of some ten years.

A trip across the bay over the northern division of the Lake Shore is enjoyable at any time, but more especially in early morning, with Old Sol peeping from out beneath the limpid waters, shedding a halo of golden glory around and over you in a scenic splendor such as no artist of the manor born dare undertake to imitate. Passing from one car to another we found Simon Ochs, of Butler, Traveling Solicitor of this road, whom we talked to sleep in ten minutes over a description of the ponderous cat fish that we had seen caught in the bay to the right of us.

We mail this letter from the "future great city," where we arrived yesterday. No doubt ere this you have been made acquainted with the recent squabble over the Toledo Post Office. Mr. Reed received the appointment against the protest of two thirds of the leading business men of Toledo, and when the news of his appointment had been confirmed, the "by dangs" were as thick as June bugs on a sultry night around a Mississippi river wharf-boat. None of our funeral however; but then the move gives the next Congressman to the Democracy of this district. We happened to be in the Blade news-room when Mr. Reed waltzed up stairs with his commission. An old friend and Republican brother at our elbow remarked that it "would be just as well now for the republican party, as a party, to take a "through ticket to h—ll, as to go by "the round-about route."

The glorious Fourth passed over in this city in about the same manner as the sun generally goes down on such a day—in a blaze of pristine glory.

We shall be late for this issue, but trust that we can "lay over" without reproach, and that we still remain in unfeigned friendship, your—

A nephew of Bill Adams has arrived from the east, and may be found at the Hardward store. He has already laid siege to the hearts of some of the Corunna belles.

JACKSON-TP.

North-East Jackson School, District No. 7. Having never seen any mention made through the columns of your paper, of North-East Jackson, I thought I would accept the invitation that you so frequently extended to all who wished to contribute. Having long been a resident of this neighborhood, I feel that a few words from School District No. 7 will not be out of place. In the first place there are many remarkable features connected with the past history of this neighborhood. It is noted for its morality, peace and harmony, prevailing among neighbors and friends This community can boast that since its earliest settlement there has never been a clasher, backbiter, brawler or a law suit in its borders, and no where can there be found a more industrious, enterprising band of farmers. It is in this part of DeKalb county where the best and choicest fruit is producted. The finest vineyards can be found in this locality which will excel in quantity and quality any in the county. It is from this school district that fine herds of blooded cattle are produced, which make themselves so conspicuous at the county fairs. Although not adapted to stock raising on account of no running waters, however, especial interest is taken by the farmers in breeding and rearing blooded cattle. We feel safe in asserting that a few herds can be produced in school district No. 7, that can not be excelled, if equaled in the State of Indiana. The present prospects for the coming crops have never been as promising as now, and a visit to this locality would convince the most skeptical that some of the finest farms, costliest dwellings, commodious barns in the county can be found in school district No. 7. As for churches we have none in the neighborhood, but bright hopes are entertained that before many years a Union church will be erected, which will add much to this peacable, quiet community. Perhaps more interest is manifested in school matters in this district than any other in the county. None other than experienced and well qualified teachers are employed, and the result is there never has been a poor school taught in this district. Much credit is due the enterprising John S. Boots, who contemplates erecting a fishery on the farm he recently purchased. With the facilities the farm affords and the pluck of Mr. Boots, success is bound to follow his efforts. It is designed for his many friends and neighbors. We would have no hesitancy in making the predictions that this park, at no distant day, will be a pleasure resort for the more wealthy and aristocratic of Northern Indiana.

The late great storm was particularly severe in Noble county. The "New Era" says: "Orchards were demolished stock killed and houses unroofed. We know of a number who would believe that, and had we not it in our power to prove an alibi, it would go hard with us. There is some trouble in Steuben county about lightning rod dealers There seems to be some swindling connected with the business. Our farmer friends will do well to be on their guard when these men make their appearance. Care should be taken about signing any thing presented by a stranger.

Our young ladies complain considerably about the present style of collars worn by the young gents. Should their gallant not have a good, large pair of ears they find it almost impossible to find his head. "There's too much collar and too little young man."

Small boy, on tiptoe, to his companions:—"Stop your noise, all of you." Companions—"Halloo! Tommy, what's the matter?" "We've got a new baby; it's very weak and tired; walked all the way from Heaven last night; mustn't be kicking up a row around here now."

We are glad to notice a healthier tone in the "Press" last week, on that libel suit. In fact there is a decided improvement from the fact that an attempt is made to dictate to the plaintiff as to the nature of his complaint. A little cheek in these matters sometimes carries the day.

We see that our accomplished friend Conover, lately of the Ft. Wayne News, has embarked in the newspaper business at Toledo, with every prospect of success. If there is a thorough, versatile journalist within our entire acquaintance, that one is Conover. We shall always be glad to learn of his prosperity.

The crowd at Pleasant Lake on the Fourth, was the largest ever congregated there. The oration by W. L. Penfield, Esq., was pronounced the best ever given in the county. Everything passed off pleasantly, and no accidents occurred, owing to the careful management of our friend Simmons.

To retain a vigorous nervous system prompt and energetic measures should be taken on feeling the first symptoms of Rheumatism or Neuralgia to cure these diseases (which can be done by "Lawsons curative"), otherwise the nerves become so shattered and weakened that they are beyond recovery.

The Press says: A circular dated the 27th ultimo, and signed by W. H. Vanderbilt, gives notice that, on and after July 1, 1877, all salaries of Lake Shore employes will be reduced 10 per cent; provided that no salary shall be reduced below 10 cents per hour, or one dollar per day. This order quite seriously affects a large number of persons in this county.

The Kendallville Standard says: "Stephen B. Helmer, proprietor of the Helmer House, in this city, died in the insane asylum at Indianapolis, last Friday evening, June 29th, where he had been during the past three months under treatment. His disease was softening of the brain, and but little hope had been entertained of his recovery.

Now who would have thought our unassuming friend, Sam. Weaver, would distance all competitors. Well, he has, and he did it squarely, too. He brought into the Eagle Mills last Monday the first grist of new wheat and had it ground, and is now enjoying splendid light biscuit, as the result of his industry. There is a little of the weasel in Sam.—you never catch him napping.

Look here, if this cylone and hurricane business is going to be carried on as a regular thing every week, somebody will begin to ask what advantage there is in living under a free Government. The simooms of the effete monarchies of the Old World couldn't do much more mischief to the houses and barns, the orchards and "craps." than these Westerd blows are doing here under the broad folds of the Stars and Stripes.

Bill Burlingame, in coming from the Junction with a carriage and team last Saturday, and while an attempt was being made by Britton's team to pass him, had his vehicle overturned as they rounded Sheet's corner, throwing out the occupants, a lady passenger and Frank Griswold with the driver, and doing considerable damage to the buggy. Bill was knocked senseless and the lady was slightly hurt. He is now around with a crippled shoulder.

An old sailor, who was discharged from the treasury a day or two ago because both he and his son were employed in the same department, said: "When we stepped up to be sworn in as soldiers in defence of the Union sixteen years ago, no objections was made to us because we belonged to the same family." No, they didn't. Neither did they say, "No Irish need apply." There is a great deal of nonsense running loose about the capital. Our sympathies are with the poor fellows whose bread and butter are dependent upon the smiles of those in whom a little "brief authority is vested.

The Garrett News says: Engine 201 had a beautiful race out of Chicago last Saturday morning with a Lake Shore train. The train on that road came up and passed the B. & O. without being observed by the 201 engineer. The passengers on the Lake Shore waved their hankerchiefs and cheered rather provokingly to the B. & O. engineer, who threw open the throttle valves of his engine, and then a splendid race occurred for seven miles, which resulted in a victory for our road to the great discomfort of the passengers an train men of the Lake Shore.

A friend has been telling us about a fracas out east a mile or two, in which two farmers were concerned in quarreling over a field of wheat. One put it out on the other's land and then they became enemies, and when the farmer attempted to reap the grain, which averages about two stocks to the square yard and is known all over the county as the poorest field of wheat within its limits, when the reaper began work a club was interposed, and the work stopped. Our friends should remember that there is another reaper whose name is death, and that life is to short tospend a minute's time in quarling. Be good, do good, and good will come, says the old copy book.

One of the most brilliant games of base ball ever played in Auburn, was that between the Doctors and Lawyers last Monday. When a score stands 530 to 800, it may be regarded as good, especially when the celebrated professional clubs of the country, often get but one or two tallies on a side during a whole game. All the players worked with an eye to a big score and the lawyers were particularly successful. It took but a little over four hours to play it, and the supply of amusement which the spectators took in will last them some time. We append the score by endings, as one of our friends innocently expresses it.

Ben Harrison has been in consultation with Hayes. This means mischief to Morton, but the change of advisers will be for the benefit of the Republican brethren in Indiana. Harrison is representative of clean-shirted Republicanism in that State. He is undoubtedly honest, and if Hayes will filter his appointments through Benjamin's small hands it will result in a purer set of appointees. But Ben cannot pick up a yearling bull and shoulder it, and that is one reason why he can not cope with Morton as a leader. Morton can accomplish this feat—if he sits down to do it. Morton is big burly, and thick-skinned. Harrison is slender, slight and sensitive. Morton is loud and obtrusive. Harrison is quiet and modest. Morton is a conglomerate bowlder, hard rough and unyielding, as naturally found in a mud hole or any-where else. Harrison is a Parian vase, clean, chaste and graceful, an ornament of the boudoir or library. If Mr. Hayes wants clean-cut advice in the interest of genuine reform he will consult General Harrison, but if he wants some one who can "grab" the Republican party in Indiana, hold it up by the tail and sling it down at his feet notwithstanding its yelping and howling and its filthy condition, and say, "There Mr. Hays, is your dog," he will call on Oliver P. Morton.

We pinned our faith to Prof. Tice and got left. Kansas City was not destroyed as he predicted on the 5th inst. There was a terrible rain-storm through here on that day and if he had located this catastrophe some where about Butler, hundreds would have thought it had actually come, so unusual was the fall of rain. We give Tice one more chance, before we conclude to call him a guesser. This is his prediction of the weather.

EXCURSION.

An excursion train will run from Ft. Wayne to Pleasant Lake next Sunday, leaving here at 9:30 in the morning.

This excursion is for the benefit of those desiring a relief from the cares and duties of labor. Great pains will be taken to make this the most pleasant and desirable excursion of the season and all can be assured that nothing will occur to mar the pleasures of the day. The grove on the banks of Pleasant Lake has recently been fitted up for the use of pic-nic and excursion parties, and a more pleasant place to spend a day cannot be found. On the Lake is a spendid steamboat and several sail and row boats. Arrangements have been for music on that day. To all who can, we say go. The fare for the round trip from here will be 50 cents. Train on return will leave the Lake at 8:30 p. m.

Ind. Sentinel: When Gen. Sickles shot Philip Barton Key, at Washington, his daughter Laura was but a mere child; and the story of her mother's disgrace was carefully kept from her. Mrs. Sickles died in 1865, in New York city, in the house of her husband; but from the moment of the discovery of her shame she never occupied the relation of wife to General Sickles When he was appointed minister to Madrid, his daghter, who had been carefully educated, went with him and took charge of his house. After her father's marriage with a Spanish lady, Laura came to Paris, and there for the first time learned the fearful story of her mother's fall from honor and virture. The shame of that history, the sorarw over the now blackened memory of the dead mother, poisoned all the pleasure of life and society for the innocent daughter, and she entered a French convent in a few weeks, where she still remains.

An exchange under the head of "what to write to a local paper," says: The kind of crops being cultivated in your vicinity, their condition, and whether in greater or less quantities than usual; whether much or little grain or produce is on hand. Anything about your schools, church or Sunday school, or grange, names of officers, ministers, etc. Marriages, births and deaths. Revivals, number of conversions, festivals or entertainments, what for and amount of proceeds. New arrivals and departures; improvements wanted by the community, and public evil, or any curious circumstance. Accidents, crimes and fires. And then leave it to the editor's discretion to condense, omit, or modify anything that you have written and don't feel that he has not treated you with kind consideration if he should do so. The object of papers must necessarily be to get the greatest amount of information in the least possible space. Short words, short statements, short paragraphs. Brevity is the soul of wit, yet it matters not how long an article is, provided it is sufficiently important.

Terrible Accident.

[Defiance Democrat.]

The pleasures of our Fourth of July were marred, just as other celebrations have been by a terrible accident. Frank Merriman lost his life last evening. He was gunner No. 1 of the battery and was ramming home a charge when a premature explosion occurred. He received a portion of the charge and was knocked about ten feet away from the muzzle of the gun. He was terribly shattered, and it was apparent that nothing could save him. His left eye was blown out and a hole an inch in diameter forced through the socket into the brain. His nose was blown off, an ugly wound was made in the right breast, the whole chest was cut and torn, and the right arm was blown off above the elbow and the flesh was lacerated badly near the shoulder. He lived about thirty minutes after the accident. The cause of the accident was probably the anxiety of Mr. Merriman to shoot rapidly. The gun had been fired but once last evening before the accident. A portion of the cartridge of the first charge undoubtedly remained in the gun and held fire. It was Mr. Merriman's duty to swab and ram. His swabbing was not thorough, and when the second charge was forced down the explosion occurred.

Our street sprinkler we think does his work too well. All that is needed is sufficient moisturey to keep the dust down.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. J. H. Casebear, of Lagrange, was in town last week.

Com. Simmons, of Pleasant Lake, was in town yesterday.

Mr. J. W. Shaffer left for Kansas last Thursday on a tour of inspection.

Mr. Gibbs, of Toledo, architect of our school building, was in town Tuesday.

Rev. W. J. Essick, of Elkhart filled the pulpit at the Presbyterian church last Sabbath.

Rev. Preston McKinney, of Albion will preach at the Presbyterian church next Sabbath.

Mr. Chas. Worth, agent for G. A. Renner, paper merchant at Ft. Wayne, was in town Tuesday.

We are sorry to learn of the illness of Rev. Mr. Ervin, pastor of the M. E. church. The disease is of a malarial character.

Mr. Brooks, of Hicksville, late of the "Independent, gave us a call yesterday. He contemplates putting in a stock of boots and shoes here.

Lyme Jackman left yesterday for Waterloo where he has taken up his residence, having an engagement as clerk in the store of J. W. Beard. Success Lyme.

Mr. Henry McIntyre, elder son of W. H., returned last Tuesday, from a protracted stay in Milwaukee. He is much improved in appearance, and has made rapid progress in an educational course.

Mrs. Philip Fluke met with a serious accident a few days ago. While sitting on the back porch, one side of her chair slipped off the edge, and she fell to the ground breaking her right arm between the hand and elbow.

B. D. Harris, deputy clerk, has been down in Old Rhoady on a short visit. He participated in a clam bake with the President there last month, listened to several fine speeches and read an extract from the Courier, on the situation, which he informs us met with deafening applause.

Messrs Hampton and Littlefield who went south to Richmond a few days ago to be initiated in the granger business, returned last Monday, each with a beautiful brown skin much resembling the wrong side of sole-leather. When you ask them how they like it they say "Oh," and grin a little by way of breaking the monotony. Dave looks penitent, but Danny is as still as ever, and ties his choker so tight one would think he breathed through his ears. He has the nerve.

To retain or recover health, persons should be relieved from anxiety concerning disease. The mind has power over the body—for a person to think he has a disease will often produce that disease. This we see effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. We have seen a person seasick, in anticipation of a voyage, before reaching the vessel. We have known people to die with cancer in the stomach, when they had no cancer in the stomach or any other mortal disease. A blindfolded man slightly pierced in the arm, has fainted and died from believing he was bleeding to death. Therefore persons should have their minds diverted as much as possible from themselves. It is by their faith that men are saved, and it is by their faith that they die. As a man thinketh, so is he. If he wills not to die, he can often live in spite of disease; and, if he has little or no attachment to life, he will slip away as easily as a child will fall asleep. Men live by their minds as well as by their bodies. Their bodies have no life of themselves; they are only receptacles of life—tenements for their minds, and the will has much to do in continuing the physical occupancy or giving it up.

The Indianapolis Journal gives this timely advice to the farmers, and they will be wise to heed it:

A word to the farmers: The wheat crop in Indiana is beginning to be harvested, and promises to be more than an average crop. When marketed it will net a very large sum, and the Journal would urge every farmer in the State to market his crop as soon as possible. The price of wheat is high at present, and more likely to fall than rise. The chances are ten to one that farmers who hold their wheat sixty days will lose money by it. Neither the foreign nor the home demand will be as great three months hence as to-day, and in all human probability the price will be less. Therefore we say to the farmers, market you wheat as soon as possible.

THE EAST.

A committee of the Connecticut Legislature has made a report to the State Insurance Commissioner to the effect that there is an actual deficit in the assets of the Charter Oak Life Insurance Company of over $2,220,000, and also that there are questionable assets amounting to over $1,735,000.... The steamer Lady of the Lake exploded her boiler at Silver Lake, near Plymouth, Mass., the other day. Six persons were seriously, and perhaps fatally, scalded, and twelve less dangerously.... All the compositors in the New York Tribune office, eighty-two in number, struck in a body one night last week. The occasion of the trouble was the posting of a notice in the office demanding a reduction of seven cents in the price of composition, and announcing that no more "time copy" or double-price matter would be allowed, and that work must be done by the piece or time at the foreman's option. The compositors claim that they cannot earn a living under such conditions.

The Jews of New York city propose to build a large hotel on Staten Island.... Eight hundred Mennonites arrived at New York the other day from Russia, immigrating to escape the conscription. They immediately left for various points in Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and Western Pennsylvania.... The boat-race between the eight-oared crews of Yale and Harvard Colleges, rowed on the Connecticut river at Springfield, Mass., resulted in a victory for Harvard by a boat length and a half.

Oakley S. Barker, a grandson of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, has been arrested in New York on a charge of larceny.... Two men were carried over the Falls of Niagara last week. They were boating in the river, when their craft got into the rapids. They jumped out and endeavored to reach the shore by swimming, but the current being too strong they were swept over the falls.

THE WEST.

Two little sons of J. F. Williams, a prominent citizen of Minnesota, were drowned a few days ago in Lake Como, near St. Paul, by the upsetting of a small boat.... Eph Holland, a noted gambler of Cincinnati, who some time since pleaded guilty to procuring illegal Democratic votes at the last October election, has been sentenced to thirteen months in the penitentiary.

Advices from the West report great excitement in the Bitter Root valley, in Western Montana, caused by the attitude of the Nez Perces Indians, who have been creating trouble in Idaho. These gentle red men are threatening the settlers of the valley, and the latter have called on the Governor of the Territory for aid.... Johann Gartner, of Cincinnati, in a fit of jealousy, murdered his wife, was arrested, and hung himself in jail.

Advices from the scene of the Indian troubles in Idaho Territory state that Gen. Howard, with a detachment of troops, had made a reconnoissance to the scene of Col. Perry's late battle with the Indians, and found and buried twenty-seven of the dead soldiers, which leaves six bodies yet to be found. Those buried were in such an advanced stage of decomposition as to be unrecognizable. All arms and equipments were taken by the Indians. Most of the bodies were scalped. The murders thus far ascertained are one woman, two children and fifteen men, in addition to thirty-three soldiers of Col. Perry's command killed and missing in the late fight. The details of the murders are horrible in the extreme.

A terrible tornado passed over Morgan, Johnson, Shelby, Rush, Henry and Wayne counties, Ind., on the night of the 1st inst., which was attended with immense loss of life and property. We glean the following particulars of the calamity from the Indianapolis Journal: "Near Brooklyn, Morgan county, the woods had every tree either torn up by the roots or blown down. Its track was half a mile wide and fifteen miles in length. The wife of J. S. Dressler was fatally injured, and three others, names unknown, killed. Loss, $50,000. The son of James Armstrong was killed by a falling tree. In Johnson county the house of Mr. Boummer, three miles west of Franklin, was blown down, and the whole family, five in number, instantly killed. Ten miles further west the house of George Tresler was blown down, and himself and wife and three children killed, and a remaining child fatally injured. A. M. Armstrong's residence was destroyed, three children killed, and several members of the family severely injured. A new church at Jolly was torn to pieces, twelve killed and fifteen wounded. In this county farmers lose heavily. An immense number of cattle were killed, fences and barns destroyed, and timber uprooted. Immense damage was done to crops and buildings. In Shelby county Michael Meherlich was instantly killed, and Mrs. Recker fatally injured. The storm passed over Rush and Henry counties to Wayne, where it left the State. Charles Brown, of Richmond, was instantly killed by a falling tree, and a companion, W. J. Hyatt, fatally injured." The tornado continued its course through central Ohio, doing great damage to houses, fences and growing crops, and in some instances causing serious loss. The town of O'Fallon, Ill., 17 miles west of St. Louis, was also visited on the 1st inst. by a hurricane, blowing down many houses and seriously damaging the fields of grain. A similar visitation was experienced the same day, and about the same hour, at Ercildown, Pa. Twenty families were made houseless in a few minutes, their dwellings being razed to the ground. The fine new seminary of Richard Darlington was also destroyed. A woman named Hopkins was instantly killed and five persons injured, two fatally. The vicinity of Minneapolis, Minn., was also visited by a tornado of extraordinary violence. Houses were blown down, trees uprooted, fences swept away, and cattle carried through the air like feathers. Several persons were killed.

A tornado passed over a portion of St. Joseph county, Ind., on the afternoon of the 2d inst., prostrating houses, trees and fences, and killing six or seven persons, besides injuring many more.... Chicago's new "City Directory," just issued, shows a total population of 521,941, being 137,616 in excess of the population of St. Louis, as indicated by her last "City Directory."

The Chicago Journal says: "The crop reports of the Illinois Central railroad state that in Iowa corn, now backward from rain and cold, will yield abundantly, should July and August be favorable; that the acreage is nearly half greater than last year, and that wheat will yield sufficiently to compensate for the reduced acreage, while in Illinois the wheat crop will be unparalleled."

A fight between the soldiers and one of the bands of hostile Indians in Idaho is reported by way of Portland, Ore. The savages were worsted in the engagement, losing four killed, while quite a number were wounded.

A murderer named Covington was recently taken from the possession of the Sheriff by a mob at Osceola, Ark., dragged to the outskirts of the town, where ropes were tied around his neck and feet, and a mule hitched to each rope and driven in opposite directions, literary tearing the man to pieces.... A New Orleans dispatch states that "Wells and Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, have been indicted for larceny in having made away with certain returns and documents pertaining to the election of 1876, and belonging to the State, and for the further crime of having published false records with the intent to defraud. The penalty is imprisonment for fourteen years."... A mob recently entered the Mount Vernon (Ky.) jail, took therefrom four men confined on a charge of robbery, and hung them.

In the Superior Criminal Court at New Orleans, the other day, the Attorney General filed an information against J. Madison Wells, T. C. Anderson, Louis M. Kenner, and G. Casanave, members of the late Louisiana Returning Board. The information is very lengthy, and charges them with having, on the 4th of December, 1876, falsely and feloniously uttered and published as true the altered, forged and counterfeited election returns for Presidential Electors from the parish of Vernon at the election of November last by adding 158 votes to each of the Hayes Electors, and deducting 395 from each of the Tilden Electors. The parties were arrested and required to give bail in the sum of $5,000 each.... J. Henri Burch, a State Senator and prominent colored politician in Louisiana, has been arrested at Baton Rouge on a charge of embezzling school funds.

POLITICAL.

Senator Blaine and ex-Gov. Chamberlain delivered orations at Woodstock, Ct., on the 4th of July. The former took occasion to denounce what he considers a project now in course of agitation for the acquirement of the northern section of Mexico, declaring himself opposed to the addition of any territory which is likely to augment the power of the South. Chamberlain bitterly assailed the Southern policy of the President. When he concluded, one of the audience arose and said that he believed that the sentiment expressed in the address did not represent the feeling of New England. He then called for all those who indorsed the policy of President Hayes to signify it, and three hearty cheers were given for the President. Somebody then called for three cheers for Gov. Chamberlain, and they were loudly given.

Pacific coast dispatches announce the beginning of the inquiry, ordered by the Senate, into the methods by which Mr. Grover, of Oregon, secured his election to the United States Senate.... Gov. Ludington notifies the Republicans of Wisconsin that he will not be a candidate for re-election.

GENERAL.

Bankruptcies: The Provincial Insurance Company, of Montreal, Canada, caused by losses in the St. John fire; Henry Dunning, shipbuilder, Quebec, Canada, liabilities $250,000; Ives & Porter, lessees of the Bates House, the leading hotel of Indianapolis; Taylor & Thomas, millinery, Chicago, liabilities $80,000; Heilbron Brothers, millinery, Chicago, liabilities $125,000; W. The investigation by the Agricultural Bureau into the losses of sheep during the past year shows that a total of nearly 3,000,000 sheep and lambs were destroyed by dogs and wolves and various diseases, and of the aggregate money value of nearly $8,000,000. The average percentage of loss was nearly 8. The proportion is the highest respectively in North Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, and ranges from 17 per cent. in the former State to 3 7-10 in Nebraska. The rate is highest in the South, and lowest in States having dog laws.

Gen. Mete is in Washington, seeking recognition as Minister of the Mexican Government. He represents the Diaz faction.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

War notes and rumors: A force of 1,500 Russian cavalry who endeavored to relieve Bayazid were beaten with severe loss. The Turks claim to have defeated the Russians, with a loss of 3,000 men, in a battle near Zewin, in Asia Minor. The losses in the fighting at Nikopolis and Sistova were appalling on both sides. The Russian commissariat has been telegraphed to hurry up supplies for the army, representing that the country on the other side of the river is entirely destitute, and saying there are fears of a famine in Bulgaria. At the bombardment of Giurgevo, the Turks chiefly aimed at the house of the German Consul, believing the Czar was there. The Grand Duke Nicholas has received the grand cross of St. George for the passage of the Danube; his son the military cross, and Gen. Nepokoitchitzky, Chief of Staff, the grand cross of St. George of the third class.

Rumors from the seat of war in Asia claim a decided victory for the Turks over the Russian besieging force at Batoum. From the country around Van there are reports of shocking excesses by the Turkish soldiery gathered for the defense of that region. The American missionaries at Van, fearing the frenzy of the excited Turks, have taken refuge on a boat on Lake Van, landing only at secluded places at night.... Telegrams from various points on the Danube give the particulars of frightful bombardments along that river. At Rustchuk, the German Consulate was destroyed by twenty-four shells, the French by three, and the Austrian Consulate was riddled. The military hospital in the Jews' quarter received seventy-two shells.... Turks are devastating a large portion of Bulgaria, for the purpose of preventing the Russians from provisioning their army. The harvest has been carried off, the fruit trees have been felled, and the torch has been applied to the large grass plains. Everything that could be of any use to an invading army has been removed or destroyed, and the people are left in utter destitution.... The Turks claim to have defeated the Russians in a heavy engagement near Sookgoom-Kaleh, killing 2,000 and wounding 4,000.... Russian accounts of the crossing of the Danube at Sistova place their loss at 200 killed.... Reports from Montenegro continue conflicting, but the best information leads to a belief that the success of Suleiman and Saib Pashas has been completed.

Dispatches from the Danube of the 3d inst. report the Russians steadily advancing into Bulgaria from Sistova. Tirnova, the ancient capital of Bulgaria, has been occupied, from whence the Russians will direct the civil administration of the province. The dispatches state that the fighting has been of a terrible description, and attended with great carnage, both on the Danube and in Asia Minor. The Turkish forces have obtained such important victories in Asia that the Russian journals are accusing their Generals of having managed the campaign badly.... Roumanian troops have begun to cross the Danube, and will at once take an active part in the offensive operations against Turkey.... A cable dispatch says the Russians, at last openly declare that Constantinople is the objective point of the advance on the Danube, under a guarantee to the English Government that the occupation will be only temporary.... It is reported in Constantinople that Austria has warned the Porte that she will occupy Bosnia if the Turks now operating against Montenegro enter Cettinje. Austria is evidently determined that Montenegro shall not be crushed.... The panic and distress in Constantinople are becoming dangerous to the foreign residents.... A steamer filled with Roumanian soldiers was sunk by a Turkish monitor near Rahova.

A large Russian force appeared before Silistria on the 4th of July, and at once began preparations to besiege the works. The city stands at the foot of the hills of Ackbar, is semi-circular in form, and is defended by stoutly-constructed fortifications of solid masonry, strengthened by forts.... The Russians are organizing the Bulgarians into a force for their own protection.... London dispatches of the 5th say of the campaign in Asia: "Advices from Turkish sources state that the Russian left wing is retreating in disorder in the direction of Bayazid. Faik Pasha, from Van, threatens their line of retreat north of Bayazid. Mukhtar and Moussa Pashas are within twelve miles of Kars. Three battalions of the Imperial Guard have reached Erzeroum from Trebizond. A correspondent at Zewin telegraphs that in the battle on the 29th ult. the Russians retired after enormous losses. The Turks buried 1,000 Russians. The Turkish loss was below 500. Since the 16th of June the Russians have been defeated five times. It is believed that they had lost 10,000 men to June 30. Their wounded filled 800 wagons."... Of the eighteen Turkish gun-boats and monitors which were on the Danube at the commencement of the war, six are in a small bay near Sulina, two have been destroyed, three or four are water-bound near Matchin, two at Silistria, one at Turtukai, two at Rustchuk, and one at Nikopolis. All will fall into the hands of the Russians unless destroyed.... The advance of the Russians across the Danube seems to have aroused the official world at Constantinople. All available troops, including the Imperial Guard, have been ordered to the seat of war.

The general tenor of dispatches from the seat of war, notwithstanding they come mainly from Turkish sources, makes it apparent that, if the Russians have not met with a serious disaster in Asia that will compel them to fall back to Russian soil, they have at least been baffled in their onward march to Erzeroum, and their offensive campaign is over for the present. The Russian left and center is now retreating and thrown upon the defensive, the force before Batoum has been defeated and compelled to retire, and the garrison at Bajazid will probably be compelled to surrender. Meanwhile, the insurrections in the Caucasus have broken out again, and it is not improbable that the Russians may have to abandon the siege of Kars. The Russians continue their forward march in Bulgaria. The Dobrudscha is cleared of Turks as far as Trajan's wall. The enthusiasm of the Russian troops is said to be very great.

More than 1,000,000 persons are now employed on the relief works or gratuitously fed by the Anglo-Indian Government.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

The latest advices from the Sydney Exhibition show that the Australian market is overstocked, and goods are sacrificed, not bringing even first cost.

The first shipment of pig-iron to Europe has been made, according to a Baltimore paper. Five tons have been sent from Pittsburgh to Antwerp. Is this the beginning of a new revolution?

The trade of the United States with Russia during the calendar year of 1876 was so small as to be positively absurd. The exports to Russia were only $9,689,000, and $8,266,000 of that was raw cotton, and $650,000 more was petroleum. The imports were only $626,000.

The recent International Exhibition at Sydney, Australia, gave another opportunity, which of course was improved by Fairbanks & Co., who took a first prize as usual. Their exhibit of scales received the highest award possible, and the judges recommend, further, a special medal of merit for the excellence of the American weighing machines.

The shipment of American apples to Europe, which was only begun in 1867, is now developing into a large business. From the middle of October up to this time almost every steamer leaving New York for Liverpool or London has carried shipments varying from 500 to 3,000 barrels. The extent of the business can be judged from the fact that the sales of American apples at Liverpool alone reached over 90,000 barrels in the month of December last.

The total quantity of silk goods produced in the United States during the year 1876 is stated by the report to be 1,284,860 pounds, valued at $26,593,103. These include all kinds and varieties of silk manufacture, whether in dresses, ribbons, undergarments, neckties and scarfs, sewing and embroidery silks, handkerchiefs or trimmings. The industry is rapidly growing, and bids fair, eventually, to make American silks an article for export.

The gradual growth of the business of the country is shown by the rise in imports at the port of New York, which were $28,761,000 for May, against $33,671,000 for the same month last year; the exports, exclusive of specie, were $22,836,000, against $21,576,000 in May, 1876. The imports for eleven months, exclusive of specie, were $262,500,000 against $277,966,000 for the same eleven months, 1875-6; the exports of merchandise of eleven months $261,031,000, against $235,830,000.

Austria is about engaging in the business of exporting meat to England. One contract, covering 50,000 dead sheep and 4,000 dead oxen, has already been made. But there is room enough for a fair business for both countries. Four thousand boxes of American butter, in refrigerators, reached London in the early part of June. This shipment was an experiment by some enterprising American, and its success will be likely to open up a new era in the English market. Other American productions, it is thought, might also be profitably shipped to the mother country.

Three newly-discovered metals, of values not fixed, are not in this list—gallium, neptunium and lavesium—the two latter discovered in Middlesex county, Conn. Gallium is said to be more costly than gold.

Accumulation of Specie.

It is estimated by a competent treasury authority that the total amount of gold and silver in the United States at this time is $225,000,000. The increase during the fiscal year ending June 30 is supposed to have been not less than $45,000,000. The imports of gold and silver coin and bullion have about equaled the exports, and, as the balance of trade is becoming more and more pronounced in favor of the United States, it is believed that the accumulation of specie in this country will continue during the ensuing year at a more rapid rate than heretofore, so that when the time fixed for resumption comes around there will be an abundance of the precious metals available. Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint, expects to spend some time in California and Nevada during the summer investigating the capacity of the principal gold and silver mines, in order to determine upon the supply of the precious metals which the Government can count upon for coinage purposes.—New York Tribune.

Death of a Wealthy Negro.

"Ben" Montgomery, a remarkable colored man, has just died in Mississippi. He was once the personal servant of Col. J. E. Davis, the brother of the Confederate President. Montgomery had extraordinary ability, and while a slave he was accustomed to attend to the greater portion of the large estate owned and managed by his master, and, after the war, purchased from Mr. Davis, at a cost of $350 in gold, the Hurricane Place and Brierfield, the former home of President Davis. He subsequently purchased from Mr. Wood, of Jefferson county, Miss., the Ursine plantation, which made him the monarch of Hurricane Island, excepting the Palmyra place, formerly owned by Gen. Quitman. He was a thorough business man, and had, too, it is said, the presence and address of a cultivated gentleman. He was fairly educated and was well read in current literature. His two sons, known as business men of undisputed integrity, inherit his possessions.

An Insane Mother's Deed.

Mrs. Mary V. Burrill, who shot herself, after killing her little daughter, at Sing Sing, on Saturday evening, was married in September, 1875, to her third husband, John Burrill. He is a wealthy real-estate dealer in Brooklyn. Since last fall, when her baby died, Mrs. Burrill had shown signs of insanity, and in September she was placed in the Flatbush Asylum. In four weeks she returned, but a nurse was employed to watch her. In May her physician recommended change of air, and she was taken to Sing Sing. Her young daughter, Alma Haskins, aged 7 (a child by a former husband), accompanied her to the house of Edward Marsland, about two miles north of that city.

The circumstances of the tragedy as given by those who were present are as follows: Mrs. Burrill was sitting on Saturday evening with the members of Mr. Marsland's family on the porch of the house. About 9 o'clock she called Alma to her and told her to go with her to bed. A few moments after they retired a sharp scream from the child was heard in the bedroom, but no further attention was paid to it than the remark that the child was being punished. In less than fifteen minutes Mrs. Burrill returned and engaged in animated conversation with those present. The party broke up before 11 o'clock. Soon afterward the report of a pistol was heard from Mrs. Burrill's room. Several of Mr. Marsland's family hurried in alarm to the room, and were met by a horrible spectacle. Upon the bed lay the mother and child—the latter dead and cold, the former barely alive. Before the physicians arrived Mrs. Burrill had expired. She had shot herself in the heart and her child through the head. The scream must have been uttered by Alma when she saw the revolver close at her forehead, and, coming at the same time, drowned the report of the pistol.—New York Tribune.

Horse Notes.

The thoroughbreds Nellie McDonald and Belle Chalpant were sold for $5,000 recently at Philadelphia.

The two celebrated racers, Bob Woolley and War Jig, have been sent to Lexington, Ky., to be turned out till fall.

Mr. Dan Walton has bought the splendid bay trotting mare Lady Gilmore, sired by Volunteer, for $8,000. She has trotted in private a mile in 2:20.

The Derby jockey, Fred. Archer, who rode Silvio to victory at the recent Derby meeting, was presented by Lord Falmouth with £1,000 for his success.

Col. McDaniel recently bought the yearling Fawn, by Harry Bassett, out of Sallie Watson, for $2,500. The Colonel last week was offered $10,000 for her. He says she is not for sale at any price.

Mr. Chas. Kerner, of the Clarendon Hotel, New York city, has purchased of Messrs. Sheldon and A. Robinson, of Rochester, for $10,000, the famous trotting horse Albemarle, who has a record of 2:20.

Mr. William Astor, of this city, last week lost by death his valuable and promising colt Lamplighter. The colt was two years old, and a full brother of Fellowcraft and Rutherford. Mr. Astor paid $3,000 for him at the sale of yearlings at Mr. Alexander's last summer.

The famous old trotting mare, Flora Temple, is failing. Visitors to Chestnut Hills, the home of her declining years, say that she is gaunt and decrepit, showing every sign of approaching death. She is now 32 years old, and it is eighteen years since she astonished the trotting world by recording the first heat under 2:20.—New York Sun.

Capital Punishment and Crime.

In a debate in the British House of Commons on the question of abolishing capital punishment, Mr. Pease, of Durham, stated that, during the last sixteen years, there had been sentenced to be hanged in England and Wales at least 388 criminals. Of these 210 were hanged and 178 reprieved. The statistics of capital crime show that the punishment of hanging does not act as a deterrent. The crimes of horse stealing and cattle stealing were not increased by the abolition of capital punishment for those offenses. In Tuscany there had been no hanging for fifty years, and yet Tuscany, with one-twelfth of the population of Italy, was chargeable with only one-twentieth of the crime. In Holland there had been a very decided decrease in homicidal crimes since the abolition of capital punishment. Belgium and Portugal told the same tale, and in Austria human life was as safe as it was before she adopted her present lenient policy; and if they went to America they would find that in the States which had abolished capital punishment murders and homicides had decreased.

Tilden and the Electoral Commission.

Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer, of New York, has addressed the following note to the New York Sun:

> A correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer has published some observations, which he attributes to me, but which are of little moment, except so far as they carry the implication that Mr. Tilden favored the measure by which the Electoral Commission was created.
>
> I will take this opportunity to say that it is within my own knowledge that Mr. Tilden was not in favor of that measure.
>
> Very truly, etc. Wm. Dorsheimer.

A Buckeye Shake.

President Hayes' speech at Providence, R. I.:

> Mr. Mayor and Fellow-Citizens: It is with great pleasure that I meet you here. For the past hour and a quarter I have been shaking hands, but we have found it impossible in this retail way to greet the people of this State. We have accordingly thought it best to undertake an exchange of greetings with you by the wholesale. [Laughter.] I therefore ask every lady and gentleman and boy and girl to consider that here and now I give you a hearty Buckeye shake.

The chimes in St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, the ringing of which the neighbors stopped by means of an injunction, may now be rung for five minutes on every Sunday, under a modification of the injunction.

AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

Gen. Grant's Visit to Great Britain's Queen.

[illegible] New York Herald.]

Upon the arrival of Gen. Grant and party at Windsor Castle, it was announced that her Majesty and Princess Beatrice were out driving in the Green Park. It was intimated that the party had arrived somewhat before the time, as it was understood at the court, and consequently the Queen was not there to receive them. Gen. Grant did not express any disappointment, and seemed desirous of utilizing the time he would have to wait by examining the grand pile of buildings, especially the first fortress of the group, which was built by William the Conqueror.

After waiting a few minutes the party entered the celebrated Lancaster tower and repaired to the apartments where they were to await the return of the Queen. While so awaiting they amused themselves with descriptions of the lovely views from the windows of the tower.

As the Castle bell struck 8 a commotion was observed among the guards below, and in a few seconds the royal equipage was seen to enter the court-yard, and the Queen alighted. Her Majesty looked sunburned and somewhat ill-humored. At half-past 8 o'clock the Queen, surrounded by the members of the household, received the Americans in the magnificent corridor at the door leading to her private apartments in the quadrangle. Dinner was served in the Oak room, according to custom, which reserves St. George's Hall for state banquets. The party was small, because etiquette requires that the Queen shall converse with every guest.

The introductions were made as follows: Minister Pierrepont, advancing, introduced Gen. Grant; then Lord Derby stepped forward with Mrs. Grant. The Queen shook hands with them, while the ladies-in-waiting simply bowed. This formality at an end, the gentlemen led the way to the Oak room. The Queen sat at the head of the table. On her right were, respectively, Prince Leopold, Princess Christian and Gen. Grant. On her left, Prince Christian, Princess Beatrice and Minister Pierrepont. Then came the Duchess of Wellington, Lord Elphinstone and Mrs. Pierrepont, Lord Derby and Mrs. Grant, the Duchess of Roxburgh and Lord Biddulph, the Countess of Derby and Jesse Grant.

The enjoyment of the party was unconstrained, the Queen taking a prominent part in the lively conversation, during which all kinds of topics were discussed—American and English, political and social.

After dinner the Queen's party proceeded to the corridor for the purpose of enabling the visitors to examine it more closely. Here they met another party from the Octagon, and a lively conversation ensued, during which her Majesty talked with every person present. At about 10 o'clock her Majesty shook hands with her lady guests, bowed to the gentlemen, and retired, followed by other members of the social family present. The guests then entered one of the magnificent drawing-rooms along the east front, where they were entertained by the Queen's private band.

Refreshments having been served, Gen. Grant and Minister Pierrepont played whist with the Duchesses of Wellington and Roxbury, during which, of course, the gentlemen were beaten. Mr. Pierrepont played badly; so did the ex-President.

A Cat Charms a Snake.

Mr. J. H. Mann, of Osseo, has a tom cat known by the name of Tim. He was observed by one of the neighbors capering and purring around something in the garden. The neighbor, to her surprise, saw in a coil a large snake of the blue racer variety—the cat seemingly having it under its control, and fascinated. The reptile, on seeing the lady, ran through the fence and out of sight, but was afterward seen by Mrs. Mann, who watched its maneuvers. The cat finally succeeded in bringing its prey to the door. The dog Shep took in the situation and soon dispatched the snake, while the cat capered and purred around the dog, giving unmistakable signs of its satisfaction over the result. The snake measured three feet two inches.—Detroit Tribune.

Coal mining is becoming quite an important interest in Alabama. From a yield of 4,000 tons in 1873, the product of her mines grew to 65,000 tons in 1876.

CROSSING THE DANUBE.

Graphic Account of the Passage of the River by the Russian Center—A Brilliant Exploit—Bravery and Admirable Discipline of the Troops.

[War Cor. of the New York Herald.]

On Wednesday the first move in the descent into Bulgaria was made at Kalarash. The bombardment of Widin, Nikopolis, Sistova, Rustchuk, Turtokai, and Silistria continued in a most furious manner. The scenes of destruction reported from Rustchuk repeated themselves in every Turkish town assailed. The crossing at Nikopolis from Tunu-Magurelli was witnessed by the Czar, who sat on horseback on the summit of Mount Gropovi. The Turks made a desperate resistance with every available man they could muster. Opposing the landing were ten Turkish battalions and eighteen field cannon. Savage fighting took place on the banks, and, in a little time, the corpses were thickly strewn there. Still the Russians came on. For every man killed ten were ready to take his place.

The Eighth Russian Corps, under command of Gen. Radetsky, embarked behind the island of Vardin, opposite the mouth of the Jantra, some distance below the town of Simnitza. The Fourteenth Division covered the embarkation with field artillery and sharpshooters. The Turkish forces opposing this movement was soon reinforced from the neighboring towns of Bjela, Batin, Nowgrad, and other points, but they did not arrive in time to crush the first parties of Russians that landed, and were met on the shore by an overwhelming force, which drove them back by a tremendous musketry fire. The attempts at crossing made by the Russians at Rustchuk and Turtokai were unsuccessful. These movements were evidently feints to occupy the attention of the Rustchuk, Turtokai and Silistria garrisons. The Russian Eighth Corps crossed at Sistova. Preparations for the crossing at that point began in the swampy meadows below Simnitza, where the troops were assembled on Tuesday evening at dusk. Silently and steadily battalion after battalion and battery after battery moved into its assigned position, the greatest possible care being taken to avoid attracting attention. The most perfect order and discipline prevailed, and every man acted as if the issue of the war depended on the manner in which he executed his individual duty. The point selected for the landing on the Bulgarian side was about two miles below Sistova, where it had been previously ascertained by efficient Russian spies that the circumstances were favorable. The men slept little that night, the ground being damp, and the morning was awaited with feverish anxiety. Not a sound was heard but the tramp of men as they moved into their places, or the dull noise made by wagon or artillery wheels.

The orders were given in subdued tones, and as few lights as possible were used. It was a night of deep suspense, and of eager hope for the soldiers who on the morrow were to be face to face with the hated Moslem. At dawn on Wednesday morning the order to move was given. Every man fell into his place, and the work of crossing the river in the face of the enemy was begun. A number of boats had been collected, and into these the first detachment stepped after a few encouraging words from their officers. The boats were pulled briskly out into the stream, and made straight for the Bulgarian shore, followed by the eager eyes of their comrades. The troops composing this advance were all picked men, and a finer or more soldierly set of fellows could not be seen. Their movement was observed from the Bulgarian side, and a heavy fire was opened on the boats from the Turkish artillery. The boats pushed gallantly on, however, and, as they neared the other shore, the Turkish infantry commenced a vigorous fusilade. Detachment after detachment followed from the Russian side in boats, and, as they ran in towards the enemy's position, they returned the musketry fire with good effect. The Russian batteries, meanwhile, kept up a terrific cannonade to cover the landing. As the boats dashed into the bank the men leaped ashore with a ringing cheer, and immediately formed a strong skirmish line to protect the landing. Boat after boat pushed in, and company after company disembarked, and soon a sufficient force was assembled to justify an attack on the nearest Turkish position. The Turkish infantry were vigorously charged, and, after a brief but desperate struggle, were driven from the landing-place at the point of the bayonet. By 7 o'clock a whole brigade was across, and the movement was kept up without a moment's interruption or delay. Everything had been provided for with wonderful foresight, and the orders of the commanders were executed with the greatest promptness and precision. At noon a whole division was over, and another division ready to start at a moment's notice on the Roumanian shore.

A body of Turkish infantry, 3,000 strong, was pushed forward and commenced an attack on the troops that had been landed. A short fight ensued, but the Turks were in a short time driven back. The Russians, following up their first victory, soon after took possession of the heights near Sistova and established themselves firmly there, so as to protect the landing of the troops which followed them.

So successful has the movement across the river been at this point that the Turkish resistance has been completely overcome, and the Russians occupied Sistova on Thursday. As soon as that operation was completed, a bridge was thrown across the Danube, and the whole Eighth Corps moved over to the Bulgarian side.

The Russians fought splendidly, and no one who had an opportunity of witnessing their magnificent work that day, when face to face with the Turks, could for a moment doubt their superiority. The loss was comparatively light.

A Very Sound Opinion.

Language from Mr. Sherman S. Jewett, President of the American Stove Makers' Association: "The newspaper is universally the best medium open to our trade. The most liberal and expert advertisers testify to its value, and in the employment of its columns we would find means of escape from wasteful, undignified, and ineffective methods to which so many now resort in their eager desire to secure attention and patronage."—Cincinnati Times.

A Remarkable Case.

One of the most singular cases in the annals of criminal law has just been decided by Judge Bingham, of the Common Pleas Court of Columbus, Ohio. Some years ago Mrs. Sarah M. Victor was convicted in the Court of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, of murder in the first degree, having poisoned her brother, and was sentenced to be hanged. The sentence was commuted by the Governor to imprisonment for life. Since that time Mrs. Victor has been confined in the Ohio penitentiary. The prisoner grew tired of life under such circumstances, and spent the hours, many of them in solitary confinement, in constant weeping. In January, 1876, she made an application to the courts to have the original sentence carried out, on the ground that she had not consented to the commutation. The case was without parallel in history, and presented itself to the court in the shape of a very knotty problem. Judge Bingham, after having the matter under advisement for eighteen months, rendered an opinion, holding that Mrs. Victor is, in law, an escaped prisoner after conviction, and issued an order to the Sheriff for her delivery to the authorities of Cuyahoga county to await action by the court of said county.

Attorney General Little, a legal adviser of the Warden of the penitentiary, subsequently made an application to the Supreme Court for leave to file a petition in error, which was granted, and a stay of vacation of Judge Bingham's decision was ordered until the case can be finally heard. Mrs. Victor will accordingly remain in the penitentiary for the present. The opinion of high legal talent is to the effect that Judge Bingham's order will not be sustained by the Supreme Court. The case excites great interest in Ohio.

Treatment of a Horse.

Three weeks ago a gentleman of this city purchased a fine high-bred mare in Boston, and, as she was being led to the depot in that city, she became frightened and started at full speed, coming in contact first with a horse car and next with a doctor's chaise, and fell with great violence upon the pavement, receiving a severe bruise upon the top of the head, which would not heal. A Prussian physician, well known for his love of the equine race, was consulted. Upon making a careful examination of the wound he was satisfied that some foreign substance was keeping the wound open, and, in order to remove it, it was necessary to make a large incision. The foreign substance was found to be a part of the skull fractured and driven in upon the brain, the piece being about as large as the first joint of a man's thumb. This was removed by a strong pair of dental forceps, and it was found necessary to chip off with a small chisel and mallet other small points of injured bone, and also to remove, with a large file, the rough edges of the wound in order that it might readily heal. When the larger piece of the bone was removed a small part of the brain came out also. What appears the most remarkable in this case, the animal made not the slightest resistance, but kept perfectly quiet, except a slight nod of the head when the chisel was struck. It appeared as if she thoroughly comprehended what was being done for her relief. The animal is now recovering.—Providence Journal,

Obituary—Robert Dale Owen.

Robert Dale Owen, of New Harmony, Ind., whose death occurred a few days ago, has been known for many years as an American author, but was, in fact, born in Glasgow, Scotland, being the son of Robert Owen, an English Social Reformer, whose place of nativity was North Wales. Robert Dale came to America in 1823, accompanied by his father, and first became known as a writer while editing a weekly newspaper, the Free Enquirer, started in New York by him, in 1828, and which lived three years. Since that time his home has been in New Harmony, from which place he was sent to the Indiana Legislature as a Representative three terms, and twice to Congress, as a Democrat, serving from 1843 until 1847. After this he devoted himself to writing, and issued numerous works, mostly upon subjects of reform, national and social. Becoming a believer in the phenomena of Spiritualism, Mr. Owen devoted the closing years of his life to that subject up to two or three years since, when he became insane, and was sent to a private asylum. Recovering after several months of confinement, he again returned home, but abstained as much as possible from dwelling upon the subject which is supposed to have caused his mental malady. His health broken, death soon followed.

Terrible Hatred.

A horrible story of man's inhuman hatred for a fellow-creature comes from Maysville, Ky. Levi Ball had furnished the family of James C. Owens with supplies to the amount of $200, and, finding it impossible to collect, brought a suit. Recovering a verdict, he levied on Owens' property, which was released on a claimant's bond, and on that Ball also secured a judgment. These various proceedings aroused Owens to a pitch of madness, and he swore to kill Ball. Every insult he could devise he cast upon his prospective victim to win some provocation, and finally he solemnly asserted his intention of pouring the contents of his shotgun, which he had charged with forty slugs, into Ball's system. A few days ago he met Ball and commenced his abuse again, whereupon Ball fired four shots, mortally wounding his vindictive enemy. On his death-bed Owens went into convulsions at the suggestion that he must die before killing the object of his hatred, and when he recovered he exacted with his dying breath a solemn oath from his 17-year-old son that he would never rest until he had sent Ball to his grave. Upon the trial of Ball for the shooting, he was promptly acquitted.

A YOUNG lady had coquetted until the victim was completely exhausted. He rose to go away. She whispered, as she accompanied him to the door, "I shall be at home next Sunday evening." "So shall I," he replied.

TREASURE OF ISLAM.

A Chest Which Has Not Been Opened for Four Hundred and Fifty Years.

Mr. Delaplaine, [illegible] Chargé [illegible] of the United [illegible] at Vienna [illegible] to the Department of State the following interesting information concerning a remarkable war resource of Turkey—the so-called "Treasure of Islam."

"The Sheik-ul-Islam has recently sent a delegation of doctors of the law to the Sherif of Mecca, a direct descendant of the Prophet, for the purpose of demanding funds to be applied in defense of the Islam [illegible] solemn occasion [illegible] ble [illegible] College of the [illegible] charged with the guard of the Prophet's tomb, which will decide upon the appropriate sum to be furnished to the Sultan from the treasure of Islam in order to aid him in the war against Russia. This treasure is formed from those annual offerings of the pilgrims which are accumulated in the Kasbah of Mecca. These sepulchers, which serve as offertory chests, are placed within the court of the mosque. Each pilgrim daily casts into one of these a coin as an offering, which constitutes the alms prescribed by the Koran as one of the essential elements of the merit of the pilgrimage, which every Musselman should make, at least once in his lifetime, to the tomb of the Prophet. Accordingly every year about 100,000 pilgrims come to Mecca, who sojourn there a month; consequently a sum of at least 3,000,000 francs are annually received in the offertory chests. Every pilgrim deposits in fact an offering varying in amount according to his means, but which in the average may be estimated as equivalent to 5 francs at least for every day, considering that there are rich Musselmans whose offerings attain the amount of 100,000 francs during their pilgrimage. It results hereby that the chief of Mecca receives on the average the value of 15,000,000 francs in annual offerings. One of the offertory chests was opened during the period of the Russo-Turkish war in 1828. Several large sums were withdrawn, but it was afterward again closed. A second chest was again opened in 1854 during the Crimean war, but the third has not been opened since 1415, during a period of now 462 years. Inasmuch as the annual concourse of pilgrims has rarely fallen below 100,000, it is conjectured that with most liberal allowances the accumulation of money in the last-named offertory chest cannot be less than 250,000,000 francs, and it is fully believed that the total amount of the treasure of Islam will exceed 600,000,000 francs, and even attain a much higher sum."

An Extraordinary Death.

William Ogden Jones, a wealthy gentleman residing with his wife and two children at the corner of Broadway and Fifty-second street, died on Wednesday morning under extraordinary circumstances. Mr. Jones was 30 years of age, and was the nephew of William B. Ogden. He was engaged in no business, but had an income of $10,000 a year. Mr. Jones has for two years been addicted to an excessive use of liquors. Last Tuesday morning, while intoxicated, he went into the bath-room, locked the door, and turned on the hot water after lying down in the bath-tub. He had been in the room about ten minutes when his family heard cries for assistance. They broke open the door and found him submerged in the water, having been unable to get out of the tub or turn off the stream of boiling water. He was rescued from his perilous situation, and lingered in great agony until the next day, when he expired. His family were very anxious to be spared the annoyance which would ensue if the manner of his taking-off were made public. They, therefore, gave out that he died of congestion of the lungs. Some rumors of the real fact, however, reached the Coroner, and he insisted upon an investigation and elicited these facts. It has been rumored that the deceased, in a drunken freak, resolved to commit suicide in this manner, but the fact undoubtedly is that he was too overcome with the stupor of drink to help himself, and so boiled to death.—New York World.

One Man's Life.

Mr. Morgan, an Englishman of 107 years of age, celebrated his last birthday at the Star and Garter, Richmond, surrounded by sixty-seven of his posterity, which numbers 102 in all. Mr. Morgan was 5 years old when Burke delivered his speech on "Conciliation with America." He was 17 when Gibbon was penning the last page of "The Decline and Fall" at Lausanne. Four generations of statesmen have, during his life, successively come and disappeared. He was 8 years old when Chatham fell fainting at his post. He was a boy when "The Rivals" was hissed off the stage, and was 18 when Sheridan dashed off from a tavern to deliver his speech on the "Oude charge." He can remember the time when Napoleon was serving under Dugommier, and he was 24 when the bloody head of Danton rolled on the sawdust. During a mere episode in this long life Byron blazed out his brief career—Shelley, Keats, Coleridge, Southey, Wordsworth, Canning, Pitt, Fox, and others whose names will "fire men's ears like music till the round world's race be run," passed away.

Internal-Revenue Receipts.

The receipts of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, reach $119,000,000. Last year they were $117,000,000. The increase of $2,000,000 is largely owing to the breaking up of illicit distilling and to the more vigorous collection of the whisky tax. The estimate of receipts for the present year was $120,000,000. This sum, the Commissioner thinks, would have been exceeded by about $2,000,000 if it had not been for the uncertainty occasioned by the proposition in Congress to reduce the tax on spirits. The manufacturers curtailed their production and withdrew from bond only such quantities as were actually required by the demand. This policy, pursued for two or three months, resulted in serious loss to the revenue.—Washington Cor. New York Tribune.

Hard Times.

"Why, my dear Mrs. Smith, how can you afford to dress so extravagantly in these hard times?"

"Hard times! Why, your husband must have remained in business, didn't he?"

"Certainly; he has kept going as usual, and worked hard, as he says, to keep his head above tide; but, I am sorry to say, he has not made much money lately."

"I thought so. There is where he made a great mistake. Now, my husband, as soon as he saw the financial breakers ahead, went into bankruptcy and retired from business to wait for better times."

"Ah!" said Mrs. Jones.

Description of Christ.

This was found in an ancient manuscript, sent by Publius Lentulus, President of Judea, to the Senate of Rome:

"There lives at this time in Judea a man of [illegible] virtue whose name is Jesus Christ. The barbarians esteem him as a prophet, but his followers adore him as the immediate offspring of the living God. He is endowed with such unparalleled virtue as to call back the dead from their graves, and to heal every sort of disease with a word or touch. His person is tall and elegantly shaped, his aspect amiable and reverend. His hair flows in those beautiful shades which no united colors can match, falling in graceful curls below the ears, agreeably couching on his shoulders, and parting on the crown of his head, like the head-dress of the sect of the Nazarites. His forehead is smooth, and his cheeks without a spot, save that of a lovely red. His nose and mouth are formed with an exquisite symmetry, his beard is thick and suitable to the hair of his head, reaching a little below his chin, and parted in the middle like a fork. His eyes are bright, clear and serene. He rebukes with majesty, counsels with persuasive language; his whole address, whether in word or deed, being elegant, grave, and strictly characteristic of so exalted a being. No man has ever seen him laugh, but the whole world has frequently beheld him weep, and, so persuasive are his tears, that the multitude cannot withhold theirs from joining with him. He is very modest, temperate and wise. In short, whatever this phenomenon may be in the end, he seems to present a man of excellent beauty and divine perfection, every way surpassing the children of men."

The Anti-Turkish Beach.

This is the image in Mr. Gladstone's speech at Birmingham which the London Spectator says is finer than any known in modern history. He is speaking of the Armenians, the Bulgarians the Servians, and the Greeks who resisted and broke the force of the Turkish inundation which centuries ago threatened to overflow Europe, and says: "They were like a shelving beach which restrained the ocean. That beach, it is true, is beaten by the waves; it is laid desolate; it produces nothing; it becomes, perhaps, nothing but a mass of shingle, of rock, of almost useless seaweed; but it is a fence behind which the cultivated earth can spread and escape the incoming tide; and such was, against the Turk, the resistance of Bulgarians, of Servians, of Greeks—a resistance in which one by one they succumbed, with the single exception of the ever-glorious mountaineers of Montenegro, who have never succumbed. It was that resistance which left Europe able to claim the enjoyment of her own liberty, and to develop her institutions and her laws."

An Aged Journalist.

"Old men live in the past. My past was connected with the press. My life from 1811 to 1868 was passed as an apprentice, journeyman, publisher, and editor in printing offices. These occupations were eminently congenial. Sixty-six years of constant labor were cheered by aspirations which were gradually but ultimately realized. Industry and fidelity were, under the guidance of a kind Providence, abundantly rewarded. And now in the evening of life, my chief employment consists in remembrances of the stirring events with which I have been connected, and of the army of patriots and devoted friends of whom I cherish agreeable recollections—recollections saddened only by the reflection that most of them have passed away. When I published my first newspaper at Norwich, Chenango county, there were about sixty journals in the State. Of their proprietors my friend Lewis H. Redfield, of Syracuse, is the only survivor."

So wrote Thurlow Weed to the New York Press Association Convention.

Nice Pets.

Two black eagles were recently caught in the mountains north of Santa Barbara, Cal. The sportsman waited until he saw the parent birds sailing down the valley, and then robbed the nest, which was thirty feet above ground, and was built of sticks as thick as a man's wrist. With some difficulty he secured the young birds, then about three weeks old, and of the size of large chickens. He got down before the old birds returned. When the captives were six weeks old they could dispose of a jack-rabbit at a meal without indigestion. A coyote visited the house and destroyed all the chickens. The eagles were then placed in the chicken-pen, and on the next morning the coyote returned to get some more chicken. One of the eagles engaged him in combat, and held him with its talons until the sportsman heard the outcries and shot the thief. The full-grown birds of this rare species measure eight feet from wing to wing, and are four feet high.

St. Petersburg and Moscow.

Between St. Petersburg and Moscow there exists an antagonism of long standing. Ever since its foundation St. Petersburg has striven to be a European city, and to adopt all the products of West European civilization. Moscow, on the contrary, strives to be distinctively Russian, and affects to look down on her younger rival as a half-caste parvenu.

Abandoned by the imperial family and the administration, she glories in her ancient monuments and her ancient spirit and boasts that she still holds the first place in the veneration and love of the Russian people. All Muscovites are more or less imbued with this Platonic hostility to the capital on the Neva, and love to reproach its inhabitants—the Ministers and other official dignitaries not excepted—with gross ignorance of Russia and the true Russian character; but when they come to discuss the present and future of their country, they are by no means unanimous.—London Examiner.

GRASSHOPPERS.

Billions of Them in the Yellowstone Country—An Old Vet's Story of What He Saw.

[From the Chicago Times.]

Arthur Templeton, an emaciated, debilitated, worn-out soldier, who has been tramping around after Indians for several years past, arrived in Chicago Saturday evening from Tongue river, with his discharge papers in his pocket. Templeton says he was reluctant to give up soldiering, which possessed a peculiar fascination for him; but he was so broken down in health that his services were no longer of any account to Uncle Sam, and his discharge followed as a matter of course. He was in the field all through the campaign of last year, but participated in no fighting of any account, though he was at the scene of the Custer massacre after its occurrence, and saw the fresh trenches in which the victims were laid by Reno's command.

Mr. Templeton tells a grasshopper story which smacks, at first blush, of the incredible, but which must nevertheless be true, since a man who had served his country well, and been honorably discharged, could hardly have acquired the habit of lying so soon after quitting the army. According to his account, the country south of the Yellowstone river is literally black with young 'hoppers. Off on the eastern slope of the Big Horn mountains is where they swarm the thickest. A detachment of cavalry belonging to Gen. Miles' command recently traveled for three days through the serried ranks of the infesting army of insects. The whole surface of the country looked like one huge grasshopper, so innumerable were the pests. They covered all the rocks; every tree, from the roots to the topmost branches, was black with them, clinging and hanging together in solid masses; rivulets were choked and dammed by the writhing, struggling, half-drowned millions, while the air as high up as the eye could discern was swarming with them. Once in a while a brisk gust of wind would set them in motion, and, rising from the ground en masse, they would dash into the faces of horses and riders, completely blinding them for the time being. These sudden uprisings frightened the animals, and frequently set them dashing and cavorting about in the wildest manner. Once the grasshoppers arose in such blinding and oppressive swarms that the horses plunged, kicked, laid down and rolled over, and several riders were unseated from their saddles and went groping about in the animated darkness, but fortunately escaped contact with the flying hoofs of the scared and bewildered Dobbins. At night the soldiers slept on soft, crawling, downy-like beds of grasshoppers, with a thick, warm covering of the same, in place of the vermin-infested army blankets. Strange to say, these grasshoppers had not devoured everything in the shape of vegetation, but had spared much of the grass and foliage. They seemed to be fasting, or waiting for the crops to mature in the States east of the Missouri. They were heading for the Missouri river, though their progress was slow, and they seemed rather to be maintaining a masterly inactivity, moving only when obliged to. It is the opinion of the officers in command of the detachment that, later in the season, this throng of insects will take to wing and devastate the maturing crops in the Northwestern States. They must have something to subsist on, and there is not enough vegetation in the Yellowstone region to afford them one good meal, if they should all get hungry at once.

How the Chinese and Philippine Islanders Exterminate the Pests—Stretching Nets, Burning Rubbish, Etc.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

In March last a letter was dispatched from the Tribune office to a gentleman in Hong Kong asking him for information concerning the Chinese methods of destroying locusts. His answer, published below, gives an outline of the means employed, which may be operated efficaciously in the destruction of the grasshoppers with which the Western country has been for years afflicted. So far the only remedy devised has involved time and tedious labor, and it is doubtful if hauling a tarred iron drag over a field of 'hoppers will ever become general so as to rid the country of the pest. Mr. Souza has kindly forwarded some chilly seeds, which the Tribune holds in trust for farmers, who will be supplied on demand, as far as they will go:

HONG KONG, China, May 23, 1877.

I am in receipt of your letter of the 28th of March ultimo, requesting me to supply you with information regarding the method adopted by the Chinese for the extermination of locusts. I am glad to be able to inform you that the Chinese, from time immemorial, have always successfully destroyed these cursed vermin by means of nets thrown across their rice-fields. They also make large pyramids, at a distance of one li (a quarter of a mile) between each other, composed of all sorts of inflammable rubbish, with a quantity of dry chillies sulphur, and some tar. On the approach of a cloud of locusts the pyramids are all at once set on fire, and the dense smoke issuing therefrom soon makes the locusts alter their course, and very often, after a short pause in the air, turn backward and disappear, even against the current of the wind, if not too strong.

In the Philippines, where the plague is very prevalent, the natives have constantly a regular deposit of rubbish, dry leaves, etc., round their plantations, ready for the first alarm of the approaching danger. They also fire rockets at the cloud of locusts with good effect, and discharge fire-arms loaded with paddy. All locusts found in the fields are eagerly collected, cured and devoured by the natives, who consider them as one of the best delicacies. Under the name of langosta they are sold in all market towns in the Philippines.

The law forbidding the destruction of birds, and the periodical importation of large quantities of Chinese martins, which subsist entirely on young locusts, have contributed a great deal to the destruction of the insect in the Philippines.

Dry chilies may be obtained in any quantity from India at about 20 rupees a picul of 133⅓ pounds. I send you herewith some seeds, which, if planted in the beginning of summer, will bear fruit in three months. The smoke of the chilly will kill any insect.

As you will see in the accompanying number of the China Mail, I have ventilated the subject, and any further information obtained will be at once imparted to you. Thanking you for the opportunity granted to me to be useful to you, and with kind regards to our mutual friend, Mr. Lassen, I am, yours faithfully,

J. SOUZA.

An Honorable Senator.

The late ex-Senator Pratt was, while in Congress, the most punctilious of politicians. Two ladies whom he charitably assisted to posts in one of the departments combined to make and present to him a dressing-gown as an expression of their gratitude. When they came to him, bringing the completed garment, he took down from its shelf a volume containing a law forbidding a Congressman to receive gifts under such circumstances. The donors of the dressing-gown were abashed, but the Senator took the gown [illegible] and delicately intimated that, if they would allow him to pay for it, the matter could be adjusted, and he would be all the same very much obliged.

MR. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL's acceptance of the Spanish mission will not be permitted to sever his connection with Harvard University. The Trustees have refused to accept his resignation, preferring to fill the vacancy during his absence. It is understood that the mission was offered to Prof. Lowell in an autograph letter by President Hayes.

DURING the dividend periods of six months each, ending March 1 and Sept. 1, 1876, 806 national banks located in the States and principal cities of the Union charged off as losses the sum of $19,719,026.42, of which $6,879,759 occurred in New York city banks, $395,302 in Chicago banks, $1,398,873 in Boston banks, $876,207 in Baltimore banks, and $619,701 in New Orleans banks,

THE first submarine cable was that laid across the Strait of Dover, twenty-seven years ago. It parted next day, and the first working cable was laid, in 1851, on the same route. The network of cable has now extended so far that, when Asia is united to America by cabling the Pacific, the electric girdle around the world will be complete from east to west, as it now is between the north and south.

WHEN Frederick Douglass went to see his former master, Capt. Auld, the other day, Auld's son-in-law addressed the visitor as "Marshal Douglass." "No, no," expostulated the Marshal, "I am Marshal Douglass in Washington; here let me be Fred Douglass again." He said that he left Mr. Auld forty-one years ago, not because he loved Cæsar less, but because he loved Rome more.

THE value of bones imported annually into England to be used for fertilizing the land is computed to be $10,000,000. They are obtained from Russia, Germany, South America, and the United States. Throughout Great Britain bones are collected from every possible source of supply. So valuable are bones considered in Germany that a proverb there reads: "One ton of bone dust saves the importation of ten tons of German corn."

DEAD dogs are really an odd kind of merchandise; yet there is a firm in San Francisco which purchases at 50 cents each the dogs slaughtered at the city pound. The skins are removed and sold to the tanners, the hair is disposed of to the plasterers, and then the carcasses are thrown into a great boiler, and there kept until the bones are separated from the flesh, and these are sold to the sugar refiners. The grease that rises to the surface is made into cod-liver oil—at least so it is stated.

FISHERMEN in China are called fish catchers, and they make a living by drawing fish with their hands from the richly stocked lakes and rivers in the north of the kingdom. The fish catcher wades or swims in water only deep enough to enable him to touch his feet at will. He strikes the surface violently with his hands, scaring the fish to the bottom, then by keeping his feet moving he feels them in the mud, and dives and brings up his prey.

IRREVOCABLE.

Because it did not yield me shade enough,
  Because the time seemed long till fruit should be,
    I smote at root my flowering apple-tree;
It was the fairest tree in my scant grove,
And fell with little sound. I watched above
  And viewed it where it lay, content to see
    My fearful handiwork, and angrily
I shook its boughs, and plucked the leaves thereof;—
Poor leaves that never a deep shadow made,
  Yet were so fair! I dropped them, one by one;
    And then I wept, for what I cannot say,
  Unless my heart conjectured of some day
When I should stand alone, and no such shade
  Should interpose between me and the sun.
—Philip Bourke Marston in Scribner for July.

ENGLISH shippers and underwriters are becoming nervous over the frequent loss of vessels by spontaneous combustion of coal. Every year large numbers of coal-laden vessels are posted at Lloyds as missing, with all hands, and it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that they have been burned in mid-ocean, and not a human being preserved to relate the causes. The figures show that 1,155 lives have been lost, and a tonnage of 80,000, representing 37,000 tons of coal, has been destroyed, through the spontaneous combustion of coal at sea.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent. ; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers. Take tea for instance : The advance on that article from the time it arraves in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced. our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

A Few Words of Wisdom.

For all who are seeking new homes in the West. If you are going to change your location, by all means you should keep on about the same latitude as where you formerly lived for in this way you will escape the severe climatic changes in the weather incident to the extreme North or South, having none of these things to contend with, your self and family are healthy and you become a producer at once, consequently soon independent; on the other hand should you listen to the many glowing accounts of the sunny South, or the mild climate of the North, and thus be induced to try your fortunes there, you will find the reality is not all your fancy painted it. If you go South it usually takes about two years to get accli nated to the climate, during which time, not being able to work, yourself and family are consumers, besides being constantly exposed to the malarial fevers which abound there, and the experience of many is that they return discouraged, leaving not a few loved ones beneath the sod in the sunny South. Therefore, in going West keep on about the same latitude which will insure health and happiness. There are most excellent lands in Northern Missouri on the line of the Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. and in Kansass, Nebraska and Colorado, "just as cheap and good as the sun ever shown upon," why not accept a certainty rather than run the risk of losing all? Through day and sleeping cars are run from Toledo, Ohio, via the Wabash R'y and Quincy to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas city, and from Chicago via Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., whereby all arre furnished firstclass accomodations.

How a Chinaman Would Open Court.

There is a Joss House on the alley in the rear of the building on Kerney street, between Pine and California, in which is the room of the Nineteenth District Court. In order to prevent annoyance to the Court by noises in the Joss temple, an arrangement exists by which, on a certain sign with Chinese characters being hung out of a window at the alley, all gong business in the temple is suspended until the sign is hauled in. A chinaman, who speaks a modicum of English, and had heard the pompous declaration by which the Sheriff opens court to wit: "Hear ye, hear ye, hear ye! The Honorable, the District Court of the Nineteenth Judicial District is now to be open persuant to adjournment"—tried his talent at interpreting the sign above mentioned with the following result: "Hi-yah, hi-yah, hi-yah! Hm Dissick Court, nine, ten times, allee same open pretty soon in a jug."—Alta California.

The Late D D. Pratt's Temptation

At the time of his death, ex-Senator D. D. Pratt was dictating an article for the Logansport Star, under the caption of "Personal Recollections." He had just described how, in 1833, he had carried on horsback, in a pair of saddle bags, $20,000 in gold from the old State Bank at Indianapolis to Lawrenceburg. He related how the voice of the tempter whispered in his ear just as he neared his destination. He said:

"There was a moment, a supreme and critical one, when the voice of the tempter penetrated my ear. It was the old tempter that sung in the ear of Eve.

"It was when I reached the crown of those imperial hill that overlook the Ohio River when approaching from the interior. This noble stream was the great artery of commerce at that day, before a railroad west of Massachusetts had been built. What a gay spectacle it presented, flashing in the bright sun light, covered with flatboats, rafts, and gaily painted steamers ascending and decending, and transporting their passengers in breif time to the Gulf of Mexico, the gate-way to all parts of the world. I had but to sell my horse and go aboard of these with my treasure, and I was absolutely beyond the reach of pursuit.

"There were no telegraphs then flashing intelligence by an agency more subtle than steam, and far out running it; no extradition treaties requiring foreign governments to return the felon.

"The world was before me, and at the age of twenty one, with feeble ties connecting me with those left behind, I was in possession of a fortune for those early days.

"I recall the fact that this thought was a tenant of my mind for a moment only. Bless God, it found no hospitable lodgment any longer. And what think you, gentle reader, were the associate thoughts that came to my rescue? Away over rivers and mountains, a thousand miles distant, in an humble farm-house, on a beach, an aged mother reading to her boy from the oracles of God."

"At this point,' says the Pharos, "his voice choked and his emotions overcame him. He said: 'We will finish this another time, Julia; read over what you have written.'

He put his head back on his chair and in a moment afterwards died without a struggle or a groan. The action of the heart, excited no doubt by the emotion, ceased, and instantaneous death followed.

Just as the church bells rang out their morning chimes that perfect June Sabbath his spirit went out to meet the spirit of his aged mother who, twenty-six years ago, went to dwell with the Savior she loved. The throb that caused his death was the swelling of his heart at the memory of her reading the Bible to him half a century before, and the recollection of which has for so many years, during youth and manhood, kept him from yielding to temptation.

What a blessed reward that mother has had in the life and death of her noble son, and what an incentive to all faithful mothers. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for after many days it shall return again to thee."

CABOOSE NUMBER FOUR.

Larry Hallan closed the windows of his caboose when the first drops of rain fell, and entered the depot for the purpose of getting a bite before going up. He was a young man of six and twenty, a thorough railroader, and a favorite with his superiors. It was rumored that he would soon leave the road to take unto himself a wife, and one who was high over had said when he heard the report:

"That's the way it has been going with us. When a man can't be spared, he gets married, and bids us farewell for a humdrum life. Wish we could break up Hallan's foolish match; we can't spare the boy!"

But Larry kept his own counsels concerning his future actions, and smiled when the words of the bachelor road master reached his ears.

"It's going to rain,' said the restaurateur to Larry, as he cracked the shells of two hard boiled eggs on the counter.

"Big drops are coming down now,' repled the caboose conductor. "We will have a lonely run of it. Mansfield is not going up to-night I guess.

Mansfield was a commercial drummer whom Larry often carried up the road to Pemberton.

"Haven't seen him about yet. Don't think he is in the place.'

Larry ate a moment in silence and then spoke again.

"Any news?'

"Nothing in particular, only that Dirck Waterman has been put in jail here. They talked so strongly about lynching him over in Xenia, that the authorities, fearing for his life, were obliged to remove him. They lodged him in jail here one day last week, and he is as docile as a kitten. I guess he'll get a long term, but, as for hanging—that's out of the question; a bad man seldom gets his just dues nowadays. No reflection on judge meeker, Larry.'

"Of course not, Charles,' replied Larry. "Justice seems to sleep. But she will awake before long; then look out. But our jail is not over strong, I understand.'

"That's so, but it will hold Dirck Waterman. He is afraid to trust himself at large in a country where his face and crimes are so well known, and I assure you, Larry, that he is content to remain in jail.'

Larry Hallan finished his late lunch, and took the cigar that the restaurateur handed over the counter with his compliments.

Then, with an enterchange of good nights, the men separated.

On the track just without the station stood the train destined for Pemberton, a town of importance thirty-six miles up the road. The "make up" comprised six freight cars, not heavily loaded, and was the lightest train that Larry had ever been called to run.

"We've got a feather train to-night,' the engineer said to him, with a smile. "We could run into Pemberton before the passenger run out, but I suppose we'll have to switch as usual at Peterson's.'

"Certainly,' returned Larry. "We have waited on that old switch in the rain before to-night. Mebbe it will clear off.'

"Not in twenty minutes,' grumbled Kyle, the engineer, and a moment later the great iron wheels began to revolve.

Larry sat down in the caboose and freshened the fire; then he folded his arms and leaned back against the side of the car.

The speed of the train was gradually increasing, and he could see the lights in many windows, when the door opened, and a man, dripping wet, and with a ferocious look walked in.

The young freight conductor started and a pallor crept over his face when he looked into the blood-shot eyes of the man who might prove one of the wickedest passengers a conductor ever carried. The wet garments worn by the man hightened his ill appearance, and his cleanly shaven face could not conceal the shadow of a once black beard.

Larry thought he might recognize his passenger if the beard had remained, and he began to conjecture whom he might be.

"Bad night,' the man said, throwing himself upon a cushion opposite Larry.

That voice startled the conductor and betrayed his visitor.

The former now knew that he sat face to face with Dirck Waterman, the man whose diabolical crime had shocked the State. Waterman, a short time prior to his arrest, had been discharged from the service of a well-known line of railway. Exasperated with his deserved treatment, he deliberately obstructed the track one mad October night, and hurled a train down a steep embankment into a rocky gorge. Many persons were killed outright by the catastrophe, other maimed for life, and the revenge of one man satiated.

He was apprehended by the sheriff and sent to jail, there to await his trial. The people of Xenia determined to take the law into their own hands. They attacked the jail, but the sheriff and his deputies baffled them by conveying the prisoner by a secret post to Piqua, a town in an adjoining county.

The voice of Larry Hallan's unexpected passenger told him that he was Dirck Waterman, who had without doubt lately escaped from the county jail.

"It is, indeed, a bad night,' Larry answered. "Where are you going?'

"To Pemberton. You run very slowly.'

"We are in no hurry; we switch at Peterson's for the down passenger.'

"Couldn't you get to Pemberton before she moved out?'

'Don't know; never tried it.'

"Well, we'll try it to-night,' said Waterman quickly, and the next instant Larry was in his grasp.

The young conductor struggled manfully, but without avail. The murderer's strength was to great for him, and he soon found himself helpless on the floor of the caboose, and bound with ropes which he had purchased for use in the car the day before.

"I'm going to take you through like lightning,' said Dirck Waterman, looking down upon his victim with triumph. "I've got friends in Pemberton, you see, and they'll be uncommon glad to look into my phiz again. I'm sure you can't move, and if I didn't know that you're going to marry Anne Clark some day, may I be accursed if I wouldn't treat you to a bullet. They gave me this in Piqua—my friends did,' and he thrust his shining revolver into Larry's face as he spoke. "Oh! you see a fellow must be uncommon bad to lose all his friends.'

The young conductor said nothing but looked up into the devilish face of the man who stood over him.

"I'm going forward to hurry Tom up, said Waterman, and with a mock bow of departure the villian left the caboose, closing the door after him.

The silence that seemed to fall about Larry was dreadful. He did not hear the rumble of the cars, nor the patter of the rain on the roof and against the windows. The silence of death seemed to hang over him, and he waited for the pistol shot that should slay Tom Kryle at his post. He knew that the villain was a thorough engineer, and believed that he would not hesitate to slay Tom and take his place on the engine.

Of course he could not see the cunning man creeping over the sticks of wood on the tender, nor catch the gleam of the revolver in his hand.

Tom Kyle was at his post, and his fireman dozed on his accostomed seat. The rain had slacked up a little, and the engineer of the train had opened the door.

Suddenly he heard a voice that seemed to come from the tender.

"Faster! don't switch at Peterson's!'

Tom Kyle turned in an instant, and saw the face that glanced at him from above the wood. And at the same time he saw the revolver that covered his heart.

"I want you to obey me,' said Dirck Waterman, "I am a dangerous man, and will do dangerous things. We must get to Pemberton before the passenger train starts out. You can do it, Tom Kyle. Now to work at once. I can see the gauge from here. If you don't obey me, I'll drop you in your tracks, and feed the boiler with your carcass. Now let us go faster.'

Tom Kyle was pale when he turned from the desperate man. He doubted his ability to run into Pemberton before the ten o'clock passenger departed. Already they had traversed a good part of the run, and the switch was not far off. But the engineer knew the man who was dealing with him, and he thought of his young wife far down the road. He thought, too, of Larry, and wondered if waterman hadn't slain him in caboose number four.

The speed of the train visibly increased until it seemed to fly like an arrow over the dark road.

"Faster!' yelled Dirck Waterman, and Tom Kyle clenched his teeth, and threw more power into the limbs of the iron monster. His fireman, appalled at the speed of the train, crouched in one corner of the little engine-room, powerless to feed the furnace, and weak as a child.

On, on, at the rate of a mile a minute, till the lights of Pemberton became visible! As the engine rounded a curve which had hidden the city from sight, a dark form dropped from a car lightly upon the tender.

Dirck Waterman did not see it, so intiently was he watching the engineer, still covered by his revolver. The man—for man the object was—crept forward, and the light of the stars fell upon an iron rod that glistened in his hands.

He stopped a few feet behind the rascal and raised his nevel weapon—the poker belonging to the caboose stove. The next instant it decended with crashing force upon Waterman's unprotected head, and he fell forward with a smothered groan and lay at Tom Kyle's feet.

"Slack! slack!' cried the victor, springing from the tender. Slack, for Heaven's sake. The passenger is moving out! Don't you hear her?'

The engineer did not need the command, for his hands were already on the lever, and when the train stood still, quivering like a leaf, twenty feet did not lie between her and the down train loaded with passengers.

Dirck waterman was found to be quite dead, and the people said he had met the fate he so richly merited. I am sure that none who knew his crimes mourned his loss.

Larry Hallan had managed to free his hands by serving the cords by means of a nail in the floor of the caboose, and his knife had completed his liberty. I am sure that the speed of the train at the moment of Waterman's death is the fastest on record, and Larry was wont to declare that the wheels did not seem to touch the rails.

Shortly after the adventure he left Caboose No. 4, wedded his sweetheart, and returned to the road promoted the conductorship of a magnificent passenger train. To this day he often tells his wife how near she came losing him on the wild night of Dirck Waterman's escape from jail.

A Game at Dreaming.

When Sir William Johnson was Superintendent of Indian Affairs in the Mohawk Valley, in 1755, one of his staunchest friends was the old Mohawk Sachem, Hendrick. Sir William had great confidence in the old chief's judgement, and seldom made a move against the hostile Indians and French without consulting him. 'If they are to fight they are too few; if they are to be killed they are too many, was his laconic response to Johnson's question touching the propriety of sending out a small body of men which he had organized against an expected invasion.

On a certain occasion Sir William was unpacking a large box of clothing which he had just received from England. Henderick chanced to be present and was particularly attracted by a richly embroidered old coat which he saw brought forth and shaken out in its glittering splendor of gold lace and gilded buttons and bright silk facing. The old Indian's eyes sparkled, and he could scarcely keep his hands off the coveted prize. But he held back and held his peace for a time.

On the following morning, however, the chief waited upon the governor for a purpose, as was evident from the intensity of his look.

'Sir William,' said he with wide open eyes and a general expression of wonder, 'me had a great dream last night. Me dream that you say to me 'Good Henderick, you have been my friend, and now I will reward you.'—And you gave me the new coat with the bright gold on it, that came in the box.'

The baronet reflected for a few moments, and then finally said:

'It is true, Hedrick, you have been my friend. The coat is yours.'

The chief went away fairly beside himself with delight.

A few days after that, said Sir William to his dusky friend:

'Hendrick, I had a dream last night.'

'Ah! And what did my white brother dream?'

'I dreamed that you took me by the hand and said to me 'Sir William Johnson, you have been my true friend, and I will give you proof of my great love for you,' and you gave me the tract of land on the Great River and Canada Creek,' describing a square territory embracing nearly one hundree thousand acres of choice land.

The old chieftain was for a little while utterly confounded. This was the fairest portion of his domain. But he was not to be out done in generosity.

'My pale face brother,' he at length said, 'the land is yours.'

And after a pause he added, with a significant nod:

'Sir William, we don't dream any more. You dream to big for me.'

The title of the land was confirmed to Sir William by the British Government and called 'Royal Grant.' The land was north of the Mohawk, and lay mostly in what is Herkimer county N. Y.

A Man who Says he Doesn,t Sleep.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

The man who does not sleep, Saunders, now resides near this place. Some time in 1861 or 1863 enlisted in the Fourth West Virginia Volunteers. For several years he had not slept at all, so he says. but it becoming known directly in camp that he made such pretensions, it aroused the curiosity of many of the men and officers and they set a watch upon him. I am told by a Colonel that he and many others lost a great many nights' sleep in endeavoring to entrap Saunders, but during th e whole time that he remained a member of the Fourth he was never caught asleep. He stood guard night after night, and week after week, paid by sleepy-headed soldiers to take their turns but never was caught napping. He hauled coal several weeks in succession, only stoppeng long enough to eat and change hourses, and ploughed in the fields with five or six stalwart men until he wore them out completely, but never seemed to tire. During the year 1863, I think it was, he went to Philadelphia and was examined by the leading physicians of the country. They sat up with him in relays of five, night and day, and kept up an almost constant stream of conversation with him and at the termination of twenty-nine days discharged him with a certificate, but could give no explanation of this freak of nature. Many stories of the untiring energy and activity of this man are told, and all agree who know him that this antipode of Rip Van Winkle is the most sleepless man they ever met. Mr. Saunders is now about fifty-six years of age, and says that he has not known what sleep is for eighteen years. He himself cannot account for it, as he says the change in his physical organization occured within three days, and that he never was sick in his life, and took medicine but once, and that was when he had a catarrh, about three years ago. He is a hale, hearty man, and bids fair to live many years yet. He is conscientiously opposed to making a display of himself, or no doubt would long ago have been before the public as one of the human curiosites of the world.

The Silver Dollar.

Louisville Journal.

The truth of history will bear us out in the declaration that this Government has been run since the close of the war in the special interests of the bondholders. We need go back no further than the act of 1869, which pledged the public faith that 6-20 bonds shall be paid in coin. These bonds, by the law creating them, were to be paid in greenbacks. So said Thaddeus Stevens, the great Mongul of the Radical party in the House of Representatives, who reported the bill. So said John Sherman, the present Secretary of the Treasury. So said Oliver P. Morton, and so said a Republican committee in the Senate of the United States. But within thirty days after the inauguration of General Grant a Radical Congress, composed of two thirds majority, violated the contract between the bondholders and the people. How much money was paid to secure this iniquitous legislation is not likely to become an open secret. Certain it is that the people were swindled and the rich bondholders made much richer.

The act of 1873 demonetizing silver was crowded into some financial bill and passed through Congress without attracting the attention of those who were not parties to the fraud upon the great public. It must be evident to the mind of the reader that the authors of this rascally legislation were either bondholders themselves or their paid instruments. This act destroys the legal tender character of specie for debts exceeding the sum of five dollars, and it makes all the bonds of the United States payable exclusively in gold.

The Democratic House of Representatives passed a bill at their last session, restoring the specie dollar to the place it occupied for eighty years and making it a legal tender for all debts public and private, except the interest on our funded debt. The bill went to the Committee on Finance, of which John Sherman was chairman. This gentleman, said Judge Thurman the other day at Columbus, smothered in committee, and thereby prevented its passage by that body. It is now said in letters and dispatches from Washington that Sherman is in favor of restoring the silver dollar to the people, but is against paying anything to the bondholders but gold. Here we are half inclined to inquire how many bonds does the Hon. Secretary himself possess in his own right?

The act of 1875, fixing the first day of January, 1879, for the resumption of specie payments, was a political and not a financial bill. It was passed by the party leaders to prevent a rupture in their ranks and bridge over the Presidential canvass.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The Keesville (N. Y.) National Bank was robbed a few night ago by eight masked burglars, who bound and gagged the watchman, and blew the vault and safe open. The bank loses $15,000 and depositors about $60,000.

The steamer J. H. Camden recently exploded one of her boilers between Parkersburg and Pittsburgh, on the Ohio river. The pilot and three deck-hands were killed, and four others of the crew slightly injured.

An enormous copper lode has been discovered at Milan, N. H.... The office of T. B. Frothingham, of Boston, was recently robbed of a trunk containing $18,000 worth of bonds.

THE WEST.

Reports from the scene of the Indian war in Idaho state that Capt. Perry's command had been surprised by a party of savages. One officer, ten soldiers and two citizens were killed, and the entire command narrowly escaped total annihilation. Troops are being rapidly hurried forward, and it is believed the hostiles will be whipped into submission before many days.... The Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce has passed resolutions instructing the delegates of that body to the National Board of Trade to memorialize Congress in favor of postponing the date of resumption of specie payment.

A destructive fire recently visited the town of Del Norte, Col. Two blocks of business houses were burned, involving a loss of $200,000.

The town of Pensaukee, Wis., situated on Green Bay, was recently visited by a frightful tornado, which carried death and destruction in its track. Though lasting but a few moments, its effects were terrible in the extreme, leaving the village, which was but a moment before a flourishing lumbering town, a stricken and wrecked place. Six persons were killed outright, and some twenty wounded—some, it is thought, fatally.... The band of highwaymen who have infested the road between Cheyenne and Deadwood, robbing stage coaches, bids fair to be broken up. Three of them have been arrested, and soldiers are in pursuit of the others.

Chicago elevators contain 427,264 bushels of wheat; 1,877,839 bushels of corn; 303,059 bushels of oats; 58,203 bushels of rye and 97,951 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 2,764,315 bushels, against 3,368,018 bushels at this period last year.... The Directors of the German National Bank of St. Louis, finding that the business of the institution does not pay expenses, have concluded to close the bank and place its accounts in the hands of an assignee.

The Milwaukee Sentinel prints telegrams from thirty points in Minnesota, Iowa and Dakota, which report grasshoppers in large numbers flying with the wind. In Minnesota the 'hoppers are flying north, only a few alighting at the points heard from. In the main the 'hoppers are doing no damage. Farmers are encouraged with the crop prospects.

THE SOUTH.

There has been a smart bit of war and some bloodshed down in Carter county, Ky. A band of outlaws and horse-thieves had been lording it over the people of that section for a long time, until one day the law-abiding citizens got mad and concluded to put a stop to their depredations. They got out warrants for the arrest of the ring leaders, four brothers named Underwood. The latter took refuge in a cabin, barricaded themselves and bid defiance to their would-be captors. After a siege of seventeen days, during which time an almost constant fusilade was kept up between besieged and besiegers, the outlaws were starved into submission. One of the Underwoods was killed and two others wounded during the siege. The militia are now up in arms, and propose to arrest or clean out the whole band of outlaws, numbering upward of 150.

A desperate fight recently occurred fifty-two miles from San Antonio, Texas, between a band of thirty-five highwaymen and twenty men who were escorting a specie train from Chihuahua to San Antonio. Several of the robbers were killed and wounded and the others put to flight. Two of the escort were killed and several others wounded.

WASHINGTON.

It is stated in a Washington dispatch that the President is so well satisfied that there is no further need of troops in the South that he will shortly direct the issuing of orders to withdraw all troops from that section, except such as may be necessary for garrison duty. The troops so withdrawn will be either transferred to service in the West or sent to the Rio Grande.

Lieut. Bullis, of the Twenty-fourth Infantry, lately struck the trail of a band of thieving Indians near the Rio Grande, in Texas, pursued them across the river into Mexico, attacked and drove them into the mountains. A large number of horses which the savages had stolen were recaptured and restored to the rightful owners. A full report of the affair has been made to the authorities at Washington, and the President and others in high official station express themselves gratified at the success of the affair.... The receipts from distilled spirits from all sources the last fiscal year were $57,700,000, against $56,462,000 for the year 1876.

It is announced at the Treasury Department that gold that has lost in value from natural abrasion in circulation will be received at the treasury by weight. This would involve a loss to depositors of not exceeding ten cents on eagles or double eagles.

A meeting of white and black citizens of the region in South Carolina known as the scene of the Ellenton riot last fall has been held with a view to restore peace and harmony. Resolutions were unanimously adopted looking to a cessation of race trouble and to a dropping of pending prosecutions in the State and Federal courts.

POLITICAL.

The Wisconsin State Greenback Convention met at Portage on the 4th of July. Gen. Sam. Cary and several other prominent greenbackers from abroad were present. E. P. Allis, of Milwaukee, was nominated for Governor. The remaining offices were filled as follows: Lieutenant Governor, E. H. Benton, of Fond du Lac; Secretary of State, Joseph H. Osborn, of Winnebago county; State Treasurer, William Schwartz, of Sheboygan; Superintendent of Public Instruction, President Steele, of Appleton University; Attorney General, Emory Hayden, of Wood county.... The Cabinet at Washington has been devoting its attention to the question whether the Federal officeholders of Wisconsin can call the State Convention without violating the President's civil-service order. It having been shown to their satisfaction that four-fifths of the State Committee are Federal officeholders, and that there is no provision for their resignation except to the convention when assembled, it was decided that under the circumstances the call could be made, but the expectation was expressed that the officeholders would resign their political positions on the meeting of the convention.... A Washington dispatch says: "The indictment of the members of the Louisiana Returning Board is looked upon as an affair of a good deal of political importance. The friends of the administration are very indignant, and are evidently somewhat disturbed at the possible effect of this proceeding upon public sentiment in the North."

A New York reporter has interviewed ex-Gov. Tilden, and extracted from him the information that he (Tilden) is going to Europe with a view to raising enough to build the East Side elevated railroad; that he will not contest the Presidency, and that he has withdrawn from politics.

The Iowa State Greenback Convention met at Des Moines on the 11th inst. and nominated the following ticket by acclamation: For Governor, Daniel P. Stubbs, of Jefferson county; for Lieutenant Governor, J. H. McCreary, of Woodbury; for Supreme Judge, John Porter, of Hardin; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, S. T. Ballard, of Davis county. Resolutions were adopted demanding the repeal of the specie resumption act and the abandonment of the policy of contraction; the abolition of national banks and the issue of legal-tender paper money by the Government, receivable for all dues; the remonetization of the silver dollar, making it a legal tender for the payment of all coin bonds of the Government, and for all other debts, public and private; the equitable taxation of all property without favor or privilege; the repeal of all class legislation; that all legal means be exhausted to eradicate the traffic in alcoholic beverages, and the abatement of the evil of intemperance; the reduction of officers and salaries to the end that there may be less taxes; opposing all subsidies by the State or general Government; indorsing the principle of railroad legislative control; and commending every honest effort for the furtherance of civil-service reform.

The convention called in Georgia to revise the State Convention met at Atlanta last week.... Ex-President Grant and Ben Wade are put down "by authority" as indorsing the President's policy.

The Mississippi Republican State Committee announce that, in their belief, it is inexpedient to hold a State convention and nominate a Republican State ticket this year.

GENERAL.

The danger of a collision between the American and Mexican troops on the Rio Grande, which at one time seemed threatening, has disappeared, at least for the present. Gen. Ord and Gen. Travino, the Mexican commander, after consulting together, have arrived at a full understanding. Travino asks only that Texas filibusters be restrained from crossing into Mexico, and Ord promises such restraint, at the same time notifying Travino that the United States forces will follow the Indians anywhere.

One Col. Boulden has brought suit against the United States to obtain possession of Mare Island, in San Francisco harbor, now used by the Government as a navy yard. The plaintiff alleges the title of the United States to the island, which was originally a Mexican grant, is unsound, and that he holds the only valid title.

Fatal accidents: Mrs. Eliza O'Connell, wife of Charles O'Connell, with her child, and Mrs. Mary M. O'Connor, wife of Thomas B. O'Connor, and her two children, were drowned at Baton Rouge, La., while attempting to cross the river in a skiff.... A 16-year-old daughter of J. G. Brierly, of Osborne county, Kan., was missed by her parents. After several hours' hunt the girl was found wandering about in a crazy condition, and, on examination, it was discovered that she had been badly bitten in several places by a rattlesnake. She died in a short time in great agony.... Five persons—Ira Davis, Mrs. Jonah Davis, Mrs. Ira Wakefield, Mrs. Eugene Brown and Miss Nellie Lacy—were killed near Greenfield, Mass., by a locomotive, while attempting to drive across the track in a carriage.... Miss Kate Kelley, an estimable young lady of Decatur, Ill., was stung in the mouth by a bee, and so rapidly did the poison take effect that she was dead in eight minutes.... A heartrending catastrophe occurred in a coal mine near Wheatland, Pa., last week. The miners had been hauling the coal out by a locomotive using soft coal. On the day of the accident anthracite coal was ordered to be burned in the engine. The result was most disastrous. The mine was soon filled with the gas escaping from the hard coal, and six or eight men were smothered to death. Many others were rescued in a half-dead condition.

It is reported that the insurance money will rebuild the burned town of St. John, N. B., and that the sufferers have been amply provided for by the donations of other cities.

The city of Montreal, Canada, was the scene of a most disgraceful riot on the 12th inst., the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne. A ruffian assaulted a woman wearing an orange lily, and a young man interfered to protect her. The latter was set upon by a crowd and roughly handled. He fled from his assailants, and while attempting to escape into a building was shot down, pierced by three or four bullets. During the melee upward of twenty shots were fired, and, in addition to the killing of the man noted, four other men and one woman were wounded. The wildest excitement prevailed in the city, and the wonder is that the riot did not assume more formidable proportions, for the police were utterly impotent, and did nothing toward suppressing the emeute. In the other cities and towns of Canada and throughout the United States the day was celebrated by the Orangemen without serious disturbance; there were also extensive celebrations throughout Ireland, unattended by violence or disorder.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

Russian accounts confirm the reports of disasters to the Russian arms in Asia.... A correspondent at Rustchuk telegraphs that no important action is expected on the Danube until the Russians have established depots of supplies on the southern side of the river and prepared everything for an advance.... It is officially announced that the Russian losses in the crossing of the Danube at Sistova were 300 killed and 400 wounded.... Thirty thousand Turkish troops have been sent to reinforce the army in Armenia.... The 120,000 Russians who have crossed the Danube at Sistova embrace 20,000 cavalry and 250 cannon. These forces have been divided into three bodies, the principal of which is marching on Rustchuk, and the other two toward the Balkans and Nikopolis respectively.

The military situation on the Danube is thus sketched by a correspondent: The Turks have changed front and faced to the westward since the Russians' entrance into Bulgaria. The Russians are deploying, with their left flank resting on the Danube, to face the Turkish line from Rustchuk to Shumla. When this movement is completed a general battle may be expected, unless the Turks fall back to the Balkans, or the Russians mask the whole quadrilateral and turn it by passing the Balkans. The Russian forces coming through the Dobrudscha are approaching the rear of the Turkish Rustchuk and Shumla line.

The Sultan recently, at a private audience, declared to Mr. Layard, the British representative, that he would not guarantee protection to the Christians if the Russians continue to excite rebellion in Bulgaria and perpetrate atrocities in Asia Minor.... The Roumanians are preparing to bridge the Danube for the purpose of crossing their army into Bulgaria.... The Turks are reputed to be committing atrocities in Bosnia which surpass in horror the butcheries in Bulgaria which occurred a year ago this spring. Unarmed and inoffensive peasants, men and women, have been slaughtered in their fields, in their huts, in the streets of villages, their bodies mutilated by the Turkish soldiery, and their heads cut off and carried away as trophies.... Advices from Asia report that a Russian column has been defeated in an attempt to enter Ardanutsch, and driven back on Ardahan, where a great concentration of Russian troops is proceeding.

The reported collapse of the Russian campaign in Asia is fully confirmed.... The Russians have retired from the neighborhood of Kars, and are marching toward Alexandropol, without fighting. Moukhtar Pasha has entered Kars. The Russian left wing has been driven across the Russian frontier, pursued by Ismail Pasha.... Austrian papers publish shocking accounts of atrocities committed by the Circassians and Bashi-Bazouks after the regulars had evacuated the Dobrudscha. A Constantinople dispatch confirms these reports, and states that "complete anarchy prevails beyond the lines of the contending armies. Bulgarian and Circassian Tartars are murdering each other indiscriminately.".... A Berlin dispatch says that at their last interview Lord Russell, the British Envoy, informed Prince Bismarck that England would under no condition whatever suffer the Russian occupation of Constantinople. Prince Bismarck replied that he considered the occupation of Constantinople the best way to obtain the purposes for which the war was commenced.

The abandonment of the line of the Jantra by the Turks causes some surprise in European military circles. The war correspondent of the London Times says "it shows either utter helplessness or else a very deep-laid plan, that they should have neglected the brilliant opportunities afforded them of meeting the Russians to advantage.".... The Russian Twelfth and Thirteenth army corps have been constituted the army of Rustchuk, and are destined for the siege of that fortress, with the Czarowitch as Commander-in-Chief.

Ships filled with stones have been sunk by the Russians at the mouth of the Danube, to prevent the Turkish iron-clads from forcing a passage up the river.... An attempt was made by the Russians the other day to take Rustchuk by storm, under cover of a heavy bombardment, but, after two hours of hard fighting, the assaulting party was repulsed.... The Turkish commanders of Sistova, Tirnova and Osman-Bazar, who were successively surprised by the Russians, have been summoned to Constantinople, where they will be tried by court-martial and probably shot.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

The Mexican capital is greatly disturbed about the instructions given to Gen. Ord for the suppression of brigandage on the Rio Grande. It seems to be considered a direct blow at the dignity and independence of the country. The official newspapers assail the American Government, charging it viciously with violating treaties and of international law, and seeking pretexts for territorial aggrandizement.... In the House of Commons, the other day, Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply to a question, said the object of sending the Mediterranean fleet to Besika bay was that it is, and would be, a convenient station. The position was central, enabling the commander to communicate easily with the Ambassador at Constantinople and the Government.

The Khedive of Egypt has placed his fleet at the disposal of Turkey.... Gen. Grant arrived in Brussels on the 7th inst., and on Sunday the 8th dined with the King of Belgium.

Constantinople is reported to be under a reign of terror. A cable dispatch says that "great crowds of desperate and lawless soldiery fill the public places. Bands of Circassians and Zebeks range at will about the city, robbing and murdering with impunity. The streets are given up to these outlaws after nightfall, and all the public resorts and respectable cafes are closed at sundown. The Italian Vice Consul has been forcibly robbed of a horse, and severely injured by Circassians. Two attempts have been made to force an entrance to the English Club."

The British Government has informed the Porte that the blockade of the Black sea is not binding, being ineffective.

The endeavors of Servia to obtain a loan in Paris have been unsuccessful, and the agent has gone to London. If he fails to procure a loan there, he will proceed to Amsterdam and Berlin.... The British fleet which is concentrating at Besika bay consists of 24 vessels, mostly heavy ironclads, with 150 of the enormous guns now largely used on British war ships, and 7,000 or 8,000 men.... The Emperors of Germany, Russia and Austria will have a consultation on the 8th of August.... Much commotion has been produced in English aristocratic circles by the elopement of Lady Ernest Tempest with Mr. Hungerford.

The new United States 4-per-cents are selling in London at a price equivalent to par in gold in this country.

The Silver Report.

A Washington correspondent says that Senator Jones, Chairman of the Silver Commission, has practically compiled his report, and will be ready to submit it to Congress immediately upon its assembling in October. The report is an extremely long document. It attempts to cover the whole question of silver as a circulating medium from the earliest times. It is very forcibly in favor of the remonetization of silver. The report argues that silver has always been an important factor in the monetary transactions of all nations, and has always borne the same relative value as gold, and that the passage of the act of 1873 demonetizing silver was characterized by extraordinary lack of information as to the effect that such an act would produce. In connection with the consideration of the silver question the report discusses the obligations of the Government in the payment of United States bonds. The position assumed by the commission in their report is that the act of 1870 is a contract under which all subsequent loans have been issued. In order, however, that there should be no doubt as to the specific coin in which these bonds were to be paid, the act stipulates that they must be paid in coin of the United States of the standard value at that time; so that whatever legislation might subsequently be had which would depreciate the value of gold or silver, it would be the duty of the Government to pay in gold or silver coin at the standard value of 1870, even if obliged to strike coin of the standard value of that date in order to meet its obligations for the redemption of these bonds.

England's Attitude.

The Chicago Times, in announcing the fact that the English Mediterranean squadron had been dispatched to Besika bay, at the mouth of the Dardanelles, says: "There can be no misunderstanding the hostile feeling which dictates this movement, and it is not difficult to imagine the Premier's object in seizing the moment of the passage of the Danube for placing an English fleet within a few hours' voyage of Constantinople. Disgusted and disappointed at the sudden subsidence of the war feeling in England, and fearing that his opportunity for forcing the country into the struggle is rapidly passing away, he has sent the fleet to the Dardanelles for the purpose of extracting from Russia an indignant protest. This remonstrance, he reasons, may come in terms that will be offensive to English pride; and out of the irritation consequent upon it he hopes to re-establish some show of popularity for his policy, and perhaps to work the sluggish English blood into a passionate heat that will bring him the support he desires for an immediate declaration of war. He is likely to be disappointed. Until the Balkans are passed, the presence of the fleet at Besika bay will involve no practical consequences. The ships may as well lie there as at Corfu. But if they should pass the Dardanelles when the Russians force their way through the mountains, the act would be almost equivalent to a declaration of war. It is not likely that the prudent majority of the Cabinet will permit the Russia-hating Premier to go to that extreme."

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

It is interesting to note that the first contract for railroad iron to be delivered at Rio Janeiro, since the revival in Brazil, has been received by an American house.

An establishment in St. Louis cans from 2,000 to 7,000 beeves daily. Part of this is exported to Europe, and an agent has now gone to Russia to obtain an army contract.

Among the queer things of commerce is the fact that beef, copper and so many other commodities which are sent from the United States to England sell for lower prices in England than they do here. The facts in regard to copper are peculiar. The exportation now amounts to 16,000,000 pounds annually, and the product sells in London from 2½ to 5 cents a pound cheaper than here.

The war furore in Europe sent large quantities of wheat to England, and the accumulation has resulted in unsettling prices there. The Mark Lane Express, however, says that the demands of the country will absorb all the available wheat in sight before the next harvest. Considering that the grain crop this year will not be excessive, and that the war is certain to last until harvest time at least, the outlook is a promising one for the sale of the surplus of the United States this year by the farmers at better prices than they got in 1876-7.

The Bureau of Statistics has prepared a statement showing the exports of cotton manufactures from the United States during the month of May, 1877, and for the six months ended the same compared with the corresponding period of 1876. The exports of cotton goods during the eleven months ended May 31, 1877, were 57,818,647 yards, valued at $4,989,618, as against 44,279,405 yards, valued at $3,729,316, in 1876. Other cotton goods, to the value of $647,952, were also exported during the six months ended May 31, 1877, as compared with $435,383 in 1876.

From the annual statistics of the trade and production of iron and steel some remarkable facts are apparent. The price of the metals has never before been so low in this country. The decline of value since January, 1873, has been 59 per cent. on the price of pig iron, 53 per cent. as to refined bars, 60 per cent. as to Bessemer steel rails, and 56 per cent. on best iron rails. The consumption of these metals by the industries of the country has not, however, declined in any similar proportion. The lowest point of depression in the business of building railroads was reached in the latter half of 1875.

From forty-nine of the larger cotton-manufacturing corporations of New England the Boston Advertiser has obtained some interesting figures. These corporations make nearly one-third (30 per cent.) of all the cotton goods made in the Northern States, their annual consumption averaging about 385,000 bales. In the first six months of 1876 they worked up 86,739,805 pounds of cotton. In the first six months of the present year they worked up 89,238,942 pounds. As the quality of the crop of 1876-7 was much better than that of the season before, the Advertiser thinks it safe to assume that these figures represent an increase (in pounds) of 5 per cent. in the quantity of goods turned out. These goods have found a market; there is no large accumulation on hand, and the demand is perceptibly improving. If prices can be kept down this summer, the Advertiser thinks autumn will find the New England mills unable to keep up with their orders.

The President's Mexican Policy.

The President was asked what he thought of Blaine's Woodstock speech, attacking the Mexican policy of the administration. He replied that he had not found time yet to read it. When told that the ex-Speaker intimated that the disavowal of annexation plans by the administration might be an evidence that such plans were secretly cherished, he replied that he had never been accustomed to that way of dealing with individuals or with public questions, and did not think he should begin now. There was nothing secret or underhanded in his Mexican policy. The administration found that Mexico was not able to keep back her thieves and bandits from crossing the Rio Grande and killing and robbing our citizens. At all events, Mexico had failed to do so. It was the duty of this Government to protect its citizens against these raids. He was confident that the conservative element of the country would justify the course determined upon. Nothing hostile to Mexico or detrimental to her interests was intended. As to annexing any part of the Mexican territory, there was no thought of it. We did not want any more territory in that direction if offered as a gift. His idea was that we had all the territory we could manage already. If he were disposed, however, to disregard the Scriptural injunction against coveting his neighbor's possessions, he should look northward rather than southward. Should the day come when the Canadians manifested a wish for annexation to the Union, then a desire of territorial extension in that direction might be a proper addition on the part of the American people. As to Mexico, he was disposed to agree with leading Mexicans who talked with him lately, that to annex any of her territory would not only be of no benefit to us, but would be a positive calamity. The Texan people, he seemed to think, ought to have a better comprehension of the question than others from their proximity to Mexico.—Washington Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Joseph Seligman's Rise.

Mr. Joseph Seligman, the banker, is the lion of the hour, even that of the tribe of Judah. He is a man of great wealth, great liberality; entertains with marked hospitality; is a man of distinguished business talent, and of great probity. He is one of the Syndicate, director in many banks, Vice-President of the Union League, and in religion is a radical, being a leading member of Prof. Adler's congregation. His history, as told by those who know him well, is an interesting one. He came from Germany, and landed on our docks all unknown and penniless. His first job was to carry a valise up the wharf. He invested the coin earned in some papers; out of the profits of his papers he purchased a small stock of goods, which he carried around in a tray. He established a route, sold articles at a fair price, and those who traded with him once traded with him again. The spirit of thrift, industry and integrity, which marked his earlier tradings, has followed him through life. He has acquired a great fortune, and is one of the most honored men in New York.—New York Correspondent.

A Lover of Little Children.

The London correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial gives an interesting account of a noble woman's work among the poor of the English metropolis. She has chosen a special field for her labor, directed in her choice by a mother's grief and guided by motherly sympathy. Some years ago the Countess Ebersburg—the lady in question—lost her two children, and her morbid grief manifested itself in a longing to study the statistics of infant mortality throughout the kingdom. She found that 200,000 children under 5 years of age die annually in England, and that a per cent. of the victims might be saved with ordinary care. As her own home was desolate she determined to do something to save other homes threatened by ignorance and poverty. She established meetings at which mothers of the poorer classes might assemble and be taught how to preserve their own health and that of their infants, and she issued sanitary tracts giving directions in regard to household management. This machinery for desseminating good advice was supplemented by a plan for distributing material aid; and the Countess, partly out of her own means and partly through contributions from her friends, procured and gave away prepared food for ailing children, finally arranging the poorest parts of London into districts and distributing 9,000 pounds of baby food annually. In due time, too, she secured a sanitarium in the country, where those to whom pure air offered the only chance for life might find a temporary home, and a day nursery, where mothers who had to work for their living might leave their babies when going out in the morning.

A Youthful Murderer.

Aimee Lacaton, a girl of 18, in Angouleme, France, was found running frantically through the streets besmeared with blood, and soon after dropped dead. Felix Fraiche, a youth of 15, with whose parents she was a servant, was found to be the murderer. He said that he was alone in the house with the girl, and that he seated himself in the dining-room to write a Latin exercise. The girl came to light the fire, when he became seized with an irresistible desire to murder her. He ascended to his father's room, took a dagger from the closet, and, on his return, plunged it into the girl's back, as she was on her knees at the fireplace. She rose with a scream and ran out, while he rushed to the window to throw himself out, but did not dare to jump. He then struck himself several times with a knife, and drank ether, but without succeeding in killing himself. The boy was of a forbidding aspect, and deformed, and had a heavy upper lip, which, being paralyzed, hung over the other. His eyes were sunken, and he squinted. He was condemned to imprisonment until his 20th year.

College Notes.

Girard College has educated 1,300 boys, and expended $2,500,000 on them.

Cornell University sold $70,000 worth of its Western lands during the past year.

"Etiquette a specialty of this college," say the managers of Dean College, Binghamton.

The average age of the Dartmouth Seniors is 22¼.

The most spent by any man in the course is $2,600, the smallest $975, and the average $1,730.

Madison University, Hamilton, has no debt, and has $408,000 invested.

The late Donald Ross of Montreal bequeathed to the Trafalgar Institute of that city nearly $500,000.

Dr. E. H. Squibb, of Brooklyn, has given to the University of Virginia a full equipment for a gymnasium.

A large bowlder has been placed on the campus of Asbury University, Greencastle, Ind., on which will be inscribed the motto of the class of '77.

The will of the late William Palm bequeaths $100,000 to Washington University, St. Louis.

Hand-Shaking.

The late Mr. David Urquhart, among other oddities, had a decided hostility towards the ancient and approved custom of shaking hands. He once formed an association which aimed at abolishing the "odious" custom. Between persons of unequal stations in life shaking hands was, according to Mr. Urquhart, a base condescension on one side and an impertinence on the other. The Turks did not shake hands, neither would he; for shaking hands led to familiarity, familiarity to false notions of equality, and false notions of equality to Communism. Mr. Urquhart gave expression to his views on this subject in a pamphlet entitled "On the Desolation of Christendom, through the Substitution of Familiarity for Politeness."

GOOD ADVICE.

Where to Find Work—"Go West, Young Man."

[From the New York Tribune.]

In all the cities and towns in these hard times there is much suffering. The number of the weary unemployed is very large. Strong and brave men wear out their hearts as they see wives and children in want, and after months of vain searching for employment too often are tempted to crime or maddened to suicide. Yet the land is broad enough for all, and millions of acres which will yield a sure subsistence to patient workers lie waiting for any man to till them. Our cities are overcrowded. The growth of rural population has been slow, while the towns have advanced with a rapidity far exceeding the demand for such services as can be rendered at the centers of population. In 1850, the rural population of the Northern free States—the newer States, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and the Pacific States not being included, of course—was 10,208,727, or 76½ per cent. of the entire population of those States. But the changes since that time, as shown by successive census reports, have been remarkable, and indeed alarming. The following shows the population living in cities and towns, and in the country, with the proportion of each class to the total population:

	Cities and Towns.	Per Cent.	Rural.	Per Cent.
1850......	3,131,675	23.5	10,208,727	76.5
1860......	5,061,086	28.0	13,287,002	72.0
1870......	7,841,960	34.0	15,215,024	66.0

The same services, in commerce, manufactures, and other tasks performed in cities and towns, which less than one-fourth of the whole population sufficed to perform in 1850, more than one-third of the entire population was struggling and crowding for opportunity to perform in 1870. At the ratio of 1850 the population sufficing for the cities and towns of these States should have been only 5,614,248 in 1870, and, though many changes in our industrial condition have justified some change in the proportion, it is indisputable that we have gathered by far too large a part of the population into towns and cities. There they crowd and crush each other, fighting desperately for the work which is not enough for all, and wasting no small share of the industrial force and productive power, which, rightly distributed, would add to the nation's prosperity. Beyond all doubt this overcrowding of civic employments, this disproportionate massing of the population in places where hundreds of thousands must struggle in vain for work, has been an important cause of recent prolonged disasters.

The remedy? Mr. Greeley taught it: "Go West, young man!" Look at the advertisements offering free of first cost millions of acres to actual settlers. A single company, the Union Pacific, is now offering in other columns 3,000,000 acres of rich land in Eastern Nebraska, in the great Platte valley—"free homesteads to actual settlers;" while the Central Pacific has been similarly advertising the varied attractions of California, the laborer's paradise; and yet the crowding and crushing millions in Eastern towns still struggle, suffer and die. Happily for them, thousands have found homes, permanent labor, and sure subsistence on these Western lands. There, too, they have found a degree of independence which few can find where all the paths are overcrowded, and "every door is barred with gold," or opened only as a favor. Why is it that a much greater number, warned by prolonged prostration in business, have not migrated from Eastern towns to the safety, independence and prosperity of the Western farms, who can tell?

Hoist by His Own Petard.

Albert Day, of Belleville, Mo., quarreled with his wife and his son, and became so incensed against them that he devised a novel method of revenge, which was to blow them up with gunpowder. One night Mrs. Day and her son sat in a second-story room, afraid to go to bed, because Day had made vague threats of killing them. A terrific explosion below shattered the house, and set it on fire, but they were not harmed. The explosion injured only the man who had caused it, for he used a short fuse, and the powder was ignited before he could get away. He was very seriusly burned.

The aggregate amount of the mortgages on church property in Chicago is about $1,411,000.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

A New and Stirring Review of the Work of the Commission, by Jere S. Black—The Horrible Condition of the South Under the Carpet-Baggers Graphically Depicted.

Judge Jere S. Black, in The North American Review for July-August, prints a lengthy history of the Electoral Tribunal which declared Mr. Hayes entitled to the Presidency. After noting in general terms the popular indignation which followed the declaration of the Electoral Commission's vote, Judge Black gives a graphic sketch of the condition of the South prior to the Presidential election of 1876, and draws in bold lines the portrait of the carpet-bagger. The extent of the spoliations of these adventurers from the North can hardly be calculated, but the testimony of the carpet-baggers themselves against one another, the reports of the committees sent by Congress to investigate the subject, and other information from sources entirely authentic, make it safe to say that a general conflagration, sweeping over all the State of Louisiana from one end to the other, and destroying every building and every article of personal property, would have been a visitation of mercy in comparison to the curse of such a government. This may seem at first blush like great exaggeration, because it is worse than anything this misrule ever did before. The greediest of Roman proconsuls left something to the provinces he wasted; the Norman did not strip the Saxon quite to the skin; the Puritans under Cromwell did not utterly desolate Ireland. Their rapacity was confined to the visible things which they could presently handle and use. They could not take what did not exist. But the American carpet-bagger has an invention unknown to those old-fashioned robbers, which increases his stealing power as much as the steam-engine adds to the mechanical force of mere natural muscles. He makes negotiable bonds of the State, signs and seals them "according to the forms of law," sells them, converts the proceeds to his own use, and then defies justice to "go behind the returns." By this device his felonious fingers are made long enough to reach into the pockets of posterity; he lays his lien on property yet uncreated; he anticipates the labor of coming ages and appropriates the fruits of it in advance; he coins the industry of future generations into cash, and snatches the inheritance from children whose fathers are unborn. Projecting his cheat forward by this contrivance and operating laterally at the same time, he gathers an amount of plunder which no country in the world would have yielded to the Goth or the Vandal.

THE REIGN OF ANARCHY.

Security of life can never be counted on where property is not protected, and bloody reprisals followed. The carpet-baggers themselves testify to numerous other murders, wanton, unprovoked and atrocious, committed with impunity under the very eyes of the Government. Gen. Sheridan says he collected a list of 4,000 assassinations perpetrated within three years. Senator Sherman and his associates of the visiting committee swell this number greatly and add that "half the State was overrun with violence." No effort was made to repress these disorders or punish the criminals. Nobody was hung, nobody tried, nobody arrested. The murderers ran at large; the victims fell at the awful average of about four every day, and the public officers quietly assented to let "the rifle, the knife, the pistol and the rope do their horrid work" without interruption. Are such men fit to govern a free State? "Fit to govern! No, not fit to live."

GENESIS OF THE RETURNING BOARD.

But this system could not live, and as early as 1870 it became evident that the carpet-baggers must prepare for flight or punishment, unless they could contrive a way of defeating the popular will whenever and however it should be expressed. Then the Returning Board was invented.

This was a machine entirely new, with powers never before given to any tribunal in any State. Its object was not to return, but to suppress, the votes of the qualified electors, or change them to suit the occasion. By the terms of the law it can exclude, suppress, annihilate all the votes of a parish for violence, intimidation, or fraud, which it finds to have been committed, and adjudges to have materially influenced the result of the poll. This is judicial authority so broad that no court would consent to exercise it—inflicting the fearful penalty of disfranchisement upon thousands at once, without a hearing and without legal evidence, not for any offense of their own, but for the supposed sin of others over whom they confessedly had no control. Of course it is in direct conflict with the State constitution, which declares that all judicial power shall be vested in certain ordained and established courts, and forbids it to be used even by them, except upon trial before a jury, and conviction on the testimony of credible witnesses confronted by the accused and cross-examined by counsel. It is, besides, a most insolent affront to the fundamental principles of all elective government, for it makes the poll of the people a mere mockery, which decides nothing except what the Returning Board is pleased to approve, and elects nobody whom the Returning Board does not graciously favor. Its power to veto a popular vote extends to all elections, for every class of officers, judicial, legislative, ministerial, and executive, including electors of President and Vice President.

HOW IT DID ITS WORK.

This suppressing board did its work thoroughly from the start. It was never known to falter. Since its first organization in 1870 the majority of the whole people has been decidedly against the carpet-baggers at every election. But the board always intercepted the returns, and so altered them as to make a majority the other way. Kellogg was a candidate for Governor; he was largely defeated, but the board certified him elected. The certificate was so glaringly false that carpet-baggers themselves would not help to install him, and Democrats determined to assert their rights. It was then that Gen. Grant, to the unspeakable shame of the nation, lifted him into office on the bayonets of the army. Afterward the outraged people rose in revolutionary wrath, drove him to shelter in the Custom House, and inaugurated the man they had lawfully elected. Again the President made war on the State and restored the usurper to the place which did not belong to him. The Democrats regularly elected a majority of the Legislature; as regularly the Returning Board certified a majority of their seats to carpet-baggers or scalawags or negroes not chosen, and when the true members met to organize for business the army was punctually on hand to tumble them out of their hall.

APPLIED TO THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The election came off on the proper day, supervised and controlled at every polling-place by officers of the carpet-bag interest. According to their own count, the result was a majority of 7,639 for the Tilden electors. But the opponents of Tilden and Hendricks determined that the record of the appointment made by the people should be mutilated and changed so as to make it appear as if electors for Hayes and Wheeler had been chosen. They pretended to believe that violence and intimidation had frightened the Hayes men from the polls, and that their cowardice ought to be visited, in the form of disfranchisement, on the heads of others who had intrepidity enough to perform their political duty. The allegation was utterly false. It was made, not only without evidence to sustain it, but in the face of overwhelming proof to the contrary.

EVIDENCE ALIUNDE.

The unvarying preference of the eight commissioners for the false over the true is very striking. When they got behind the Governor's papers, they found lying aliunde two other sets of documents, one of which was a record of the actual appointment made by the people; the other was a mere fabrication of the Returning Board without any semblance of truth; they embraced the latter with all the ardor of sincere affection, and rejected the former with all possible marks of their dislike.

To give the decrees of the Returning Boards the conclusive effect claimed for them, it was necessary to hold that they were legally invested with judicial powers, and that their jurisdiction, whether rightly or erroneously exercised, was absolute over the whole subject matter. In Florida the statute which created the board gave it nothing except ministerial powers, and the Supreme Court of the State solemnly pronounced its claim of judicial authority to be altogether unfounded. But the Electoral Commission would not be influenced by either the written or the unwritten law. The commission conceded to the Louisiana board all the judicial power it needed to sanctify its disfranchisement of the people in the face of the constitution, which expressly forbade it. This general jurisdiction was not all they bestowed on those boards; they declared in substance that it might be well exercised in particular cases where it was not invoked according to the law which gave them being, as, for instance, where a Louisiana parish sent up its return without a protest, statement or affidavit.

[illegible]

The eight commissioners did not stop there. They went much further. They practically justified and sustained all the infinite rascality of the Returning Boards. They not only refused to take voluntary notice of the atrocious frauds perpetrated by them, but they excluded the proofs of their corruption which the Democratic counsel held in their hands and offered to exhibit. These commissioners choked off the evidence, and smothered it as remorselessly as Wells and his associates suppressed Democratic returns. And this they put on the express ground that to them it was all one whether the action of those boards was fraudulent or not. They would suffer no proof of corruption to invalidate the right claimed by a Hayes man to put in the vote of a State for his candidate.

This monstrous and unendurable outrage was resisted to the utmost. All of the seven implored and protested against it. Judge Clifford, the President of the commission, laid it down as a maxim of the common law that fraud vitiates whatever it touches, and proved it undeniably. He might have proved more. It is not merely a maxim of the common law; it belongs to all countries and all ages; no code can claim it exclusively; it pervades all systems of jurisprudence; it has its home in every honest heart; it is the universal sentiment of all just men; it applies to all human dealings. Judge Field looked in the face of the majority and told them plainly that their disregard of this great principle was "as shocking in morals as it was unsound in law," and added: "It is elementary knowledge that fraud vitiates all proceedings, even the most solemn; that no form of words, no amount of ceremony, no solemnity of proceeding can shield it from exposure or protect its structure from assault and destruction." But the eight were as deaf as adders to the voice of reason and justice. They would not permit the fraud to be assaulted, much less to be destroyed. They stood over it to shield it, and save it, interposing the broad ægis of their authority to cover it against every attack.

The eight persistently denied their power, or that of Congress, to do what they were commanded by the law to do—that is, decide who were duly appointed. They would only decide that certain persons were named as electors by a Returning Board. They would not understand that the appointment by the people might be one thing, and the action of the Returning Board another, or that the latter, even as evidence of the former, was worthless if it was fraudulent.

THIMBLE-RIGGING FLORIDA OUT.

They insisted that the Returning-Board certificate must be received with all the honors; to question its verity would be usurpation upon State rights, which they (the eight) were most careful to preserve intact and unimpaired. "But," said they, "if a Returning Board behaves unfaithfully, the State herself, by her own authorities, must see to it and correct the wrong." Thereupon came Florida, and showed that she had, in fact, made the correction. All the departments of her Government—her Legislature, her courts, and her Executive—had at different times examined and revised the action of her Returning Board; pronounced it false, fraudulent and void; declared that the Tilden electors were duly appointed, and left the Hayes candidates without a shred of authority to vote for the State. There stood the State herself upright before the august commission, with all the evidence in her hand, protesting against the fraud and demanding that no vote should be received except the vote of her own electors duly appointed by her people. But the commission answered that under the circumstances of this she had no right to defend herself against the fraud of a Returning Board any more than she had to be defended by the Federal authorities. Whatever she might do, or decide, or resolve upon, the great fraud was her master, and she must submit. So it appeared, after all the fine speeches about State rights, that Florida had but one right—the right to be cheated out of her vote by the same knaves who had already robbed her of her property. The right was sacred and intangible, and the commission promptly put her in full possession of it.

A JUDICIAL DECISION DISREGARDED.

In the case of Florida there was one piece of evidence offered which not only commended itself strongly to the consideration of just men, but, being supported by certain artificial rules of pleading and practice, it was expected to find acceptance in the narrowest mind on the bench. This was the record of a judicial proceeding commenced in a Florida court by writ of quo warranto at the suit of the State upon the relation of the Tilden electors against the Hayes electors. The parties came into court and pleaded, and the issue made between them was whether one set or the other (the relators or the defendants) were duly appointed electors of President and Vice President of and for the State of Florida. Evidence was taken, the cause was debated by counsel on both sides, and the relators were duly appointed and the defendants not. This fact, thus determined by the court, was precisely the same fact afterward controverted by the same parties before the commission. When submitted to the latter tribunal, it was res judicata; not only true, but fixed and settled beyond the reach of contradiction. The judgment was not impeached for fraud, or reversed for error. It was in full force and virtue. It was not denied that the court which made the adjudication had complete jurisdiction both of the subject matter and of the parties. By all reason and all authority the commission was bound to respect this judgment as conclusive evidence. But to have done this would have made Tilden President and defeated the purpose of all the frauds in Louisiana and Florida both. They did not do it; they allowed the judgment to have no effect at all. They but looked to see what it was, and immediately swept it out of sight. They put it far from them, and then proceeded to pronounce a different judgment which suited the Hayes men better. How could they break all the bars of legal authority which fenced them about? What starting hole did they find to escape from the corner into which they were driven and penned up by the law of the land? We shall see.

STATE ACTION NULLIFIED.

They said the judgment of the court was too late; it was pronounced after the Hayes electors had met and made out their votes, and sent them to the President of the Senate. Here were two sets of electors, each claiming the exclusive right to vote for the State, and both of them actually sent up their ballots. One of them was duly appointed, and had the authority claimed; the other set was necessarily composed of mere pretenders, who were not duly appointed, and, having no authority, their vote was a mere nullity. Which party was right, and which was wrong? The conflict must be settled somehow. Where was the jurisdiction to determine it? Undoubtedly, and by universal admission, the power was in the courts of the State from which both claimants professed to derive their authority. The proper State court did determine it; but the commissioners said that, however competent the jurisdiction of the court, it was too late in making its decision, and then they proceeded, in the exercise of a jurisdiction exactly similar, to decide the same question of fact and law the other way. Now comes the query: If the court's decision was worthless because it was late, what was the value of the commission's judgment, which was later? The eight did actually, not in words, but in substance and effect, give vent to the bald absurdity that it was too late in January to decide the dispute in favor of Tilden, but not too late in February to decide it in favor of Hayes.

IN FAVOR OF FRAUD EVERY TIME.

Another thing they said: This judgment though it proved the fact that the Hayes claimants were not duly appointed, and had no title to the office of electors, did not invalidate the acts previously done by them while they were de facto in the exercise of the powers they usurped. There is a just and necessary rule of law which declares that the validity of acts regularly done by an officer shall not depend on the title by which he holds the office. You may remove a Sheriff by a quo warranto without destroying the titles of all who purchased land at his sales, or a Judge without vacating his decrees, or a Treasurer without saying that his payment of a public debt is not satisfaction; but where a person assumes a special authority to do a particular thing, the validity of the act does depend on the authority to do it. This latter rule applies here. These electors claimed a right to vote for the State under a special appointment given them to do that one act. When a competent court adjudicated as matter of fact that the Hayes electors had no appointment, it was a logical and legal necessity which declared the unauthorized votes to be null and void. If this were not the principle, then any impostor, or any number of impostors, might send up their ballots, and one would be as good as another.

But again, let it not be forgotten that the Tilden electors had also voted at the same time and in the same way. Why did not this fact make as much weight for them as for the others? It will excite the wonder of the world to learn that, in the opinion of the eight, a person who voted under an appointment given him by the people, according to law, could not be even a de facto elector, but another person who had nothing to claim by except the false, fraudulent and void declaration of a Returning Board was good de facto, if he was good for nothing else. This doctrine of the de facto sanctification, saving acts which have no other "relish of salvation in them," and making the votes of unauthorized men as good as if they came from persons duly appointed, cuts a great figure throughout the whole case. It is not applicable, but the eight apply it everywhere, and, strange to say, they never use it when it does not make in favor of some fraud or other. One who votes according to the public will of the State, legally expressed through the ballot-boxes, is de facto nothing. But if he was defeated or ineligible, he is de facto all he wants to be. One of the Hayes electors in Louisiana was a Federal officer; his election was forbidden by the constitution of the United States, and he was not elected but beaten at the polls; de facto strained its utmost power on him, and pulled him through in spite of constitution and people both. But his Democratic competitor, who had acted as an elector in the same way and to the same extent, was legally chosen by an overwhelming majority, and constitutionally eligible; therefore, de facto could do nothing for him.

FRAUD UNDER THE FORMS OF LAW.

In all the discussions of the subject the men disposed to favor the conspiracy professed a most profound veneration for the "forms of law." This was the keynote struck at New Orleans by the visiting committee, and it is heard in every subsequent argument of counsel and commissioner on that side. It seemed to be understood among them that a formal cheat was perfectly safe from exposure. If the sepulchre was whited on the outside, it made no difference that it was filled with "corruption, dead men's bones, and all uncleanness." No refuge of lies could be swept away, no hiding place of falsehood could ever be uncovered, if it was built in the prescribed form. Only give it the legal shape, and the overflowing scourge would be turned aside. But legal form, however valuable as a covering for fraud, was, in their judgment, no protection for truth or justice or public right. The will of Louisiana was pronounced at the election with all the solemnities required by the law of the State and of the United States. The appointment of the Tilden electors on the 7th of November was a perfectly legal piece of work; there was not a flaw in the record of it as it came from the hands of the appointing power. But it was looked on with perfect contempt. Neither the visiting committee, nor the Hayes counsel, nor the eight commissioners bestowed on it any of their love. Their affections were otherwise engaged; they gave the homage and devotion of their hearts to the beautiful regularity, the exquisite precision, with which the Returning Board compounded its false certificate.

Another paradox of the eight is curious enough to be noted. They declared repeatedly that they had no power to try a contested election case, and for that reason they would not look at the evidence which showed what persons were duly appointed electors by the people. Now mark! The case was this: Each of those votes came accompanied by what was asserted to be proof that it was cast by electors duly appointed. The conflict was to be determined by the verifying power which Congress unquestionably has, and which the commissioners expressly assumed when they swore that they would decide who were duly appointed. To decide it one way or the other required precisely the same jurisdiction, and called into exercise exactly the same faculties. Yet they held that if they decided according to the truth in favor of the electors actually appointed they would be trying a contested election; but if they decided in favor of the pretenders, who had nothing but a fraudulent certificate, they would not be trying a contested election; in other words, their jurisdiction was full and ample to decide it falsely, but wholly unequal to the duty of deciding it truly.

INELIGIBLE ELECTORS RECOGNIZED.

Perhaps nothing shows more plainly the animus of the eight commissioners than the determination they made upon the case of Brewster, the ineligible elector in Louisiana. Keep in mind that their defined duty was to decide who were duly appointed, and what votes were provided for by the constitution, and think how they performed it in this part of the case. Brewster was not only defeated at the polls like the rest; he was, beside, a Federal officeholder, and the constitution expressly declares that no such person shall be appointed an elector. But for

THEIR VIOLATIONS OF THE STATUTE!

The action of the returning officers in the whole business was unsupported by legal authority. The Legislature of the State did not, because it could not, give them power to disfranchise qualified electors. They lacked, therefore, the general jurisdiction which they assumed. But that is not all. They proceeded in the very teeth even of the void statute which they professed to follow. That statute pretends to give them no such authority as they exercised over any return to which a protest or statement or charge of intimidation is not attached when it is sent in by the Supervisor of Registration or Commissioner of Election, and the charge so attached to the return must be supported by the affidavits of three citizens of the proper parish.

Wanting this, the board was absolutely without the pretense of power to touch the return from any parish or polling-place, except for the purpose of compiling it and adding it as true to the others. By the election law of Louisiana the board has no more authority to examine or decide a question of intimidation which is not raised by the election officers than a private individual would have to steal it from the records and burn it. So stands the law. The fact is established by conclusive evidence that from every one of the Democratic parishes the returns came up without any charge, statement or protest. In all those cases they were therefore without color of jurisdiction.

When nothing else would serve the purpose, they did not scruple a resort to plain forgery. Of the return from Vernon parish every figure on the whole broad sheet was altered with elaborate pains under the special direction of Wells. Perjury and subornation of perjury entered largely into the business. There is hardly any species of the crimen falsi for which the law has a punishment that did not become an elementary part of the great fraud which was committed when the defeated electors and State officers of Louisiana were falsely certified as chosen by the people.

THE CREATION OF THE COMMISSION.

But how was the object of the conspiracy to be accomplished? The House of Representatives was Democratic, and without its consent, expressed or implied in some form or another, the Senate could not give effect to a false count. The first intention was to claim that the President of the Senate had power to determine absolutely and arbitrarily what electoral votes should be counted and what not. This was the great rallying point until Mr. Conkling took it up, and, in a speech of surpassing ability, utterly demolished and reduced it to invisible atoms. It became settled, therefore, that the two houses must count the votes, and this clearly implied the power to inquire and determine what were votes. It could not be denied that the voice of the House of Representatives was at least as potential as that of the Senators; and it was not supposed that the House would suffer a fraud so glaring as this to be thrust down the throat of the country "against the stomach of its sense." But if the two bodies would declare inconsistent results of the count, and proclaim the election of different Presidents, a state of things might come which would subject our institutions to a strain severe enough to endanger them greatly. It was in these difficult circumstances that a mixed commission of fifteen was proposed, consisting of five Senators, five Representatives, and five Judges of the Supreme Court. The mode of appointing them made it certain that fourteen would be equally divided between the parties; and, as the fifth Judge would be named by the consent of his brethren on both sides, he might be expected to stand between them, like a daysman, with a hand as heavy on one hand as the other. The Democrats consented to this in the belief that seven Republicans could be taken from the court or from Congress who would scorn to decide the truth and then uphold a known fraud; if mistaken in that opinion of their adversaries' honesty, they felt sure, at all events, that the umpire would be a fair-minded man. They were bitterly disappointed; the commission went eight to seven for the great fraud and all its branches; for fraud in the detail and in the aggregate; for every item of fraud that was necessary to make the sum total big enough—eight to seven all the time.

IT REFUSES TO DO ITS DUTY.

We must look at the state of the case as it went before the commission. Tilden and Hendricks had 184 electoral votes clear and free of all dispute, one less than a majority of the whole number. They also had in Louisiana eight, and in Florida four, appointed by the people, but falsely certified to Hayes and Wheeler by the Governors. In Oregon they had one certified by the Governor, but against whom a popular majority had been cast for an ineligible candidate. To elect Hayes it was necessary that each and every one of these thirteen votes should be taken from Tilden and given to Hayes. As this required many distinct rulings based upon contradictory grounds, the path of the commission was not only steep but crooked.

HEDGING FOR OREGON.

The commission, following the lead of counsel for Mr. Hayes, insisted that the certificate of the proper State officer ought to be regarded as conclusive evidence of the appointment made by the people. It is undoubtedly true that the State has a right to speak on this subject through her own organs, and when she does speak her voice should be regarded as true. But what officer is her proper organ? The Governor being her political chief, and his certificate required by act of Congress, it would not have been unreasonable to hold that it was conclusive unless tainted with fraud. The Hayes electors had the Executive certificate in Louisiana and Florida, and this, in regard to those States, gave the eight a great legal advantage. But they threw it away, abandoned the attestation of the Governor as worthless, claimed no faith or credit for it, and pronounced it open to contradiction, no matter how honestly it may have been given. What was the meaning of this phenomenal ruling which apparently opened the door of investigation even wider than the Democrats asked? It was understood by everybody. The commission was hedging for Oregon. The eight were reaching across to the Pacific for the vote there, which was just as important as the twelve on the Gulf of Mexico. For the purpose of electing Mr. Hayes this vote was worth as much as all the others. To get that vote for their candidate they were required to go further than they went for any of the rest, and so they held: 1. That the certificate of the Returning Board was proprio vigore an appointment. 2. That it was a due appointment, though corrupt and dishonest. 3. That this was a vote provided for by the constitution, though the constitution in plain words provided against it.

THE FULL EXTENT OF THE OUTRAGE.

After all, there was but one question before the commission. Had the American people a right to elect their own Chief Magistrate? They had the right. Their ancestors struggled for it long, fought for it often, and won it fairly. Being imbedded in their constitution, it cannot be destroyed except by a force strong enough to overthrow the organic structure of the Government itself. Legislative enactments or judicial decisions are powerless either to strengthen or impair it. The legerdemain of lawcraft, the catches of special pleadings, the snapperadoes of practice, do not help us to decide a matter like this. A great nation must not be impaled upon a pin's point. Precedents which might bind a court of quarter sessions determining the settlement of a pauper cannot tie up the hands of the supreme Legislature defending a fundamental right of the whole people. When Grenville, in 1766, cited the authority of divers cases to show that America might be taxed without representation, Pitt answered: "I come not here armed at all points, with the statute book doubled down in dog's ears, to defend the cause of liberty. I can acknowledge no veneration for any procedure, law, or ordinance that is repugnant to reason and the first principles of our constitution. I rejoice that America has resisted." So spoke the defiant friend of our race in the presence of a hostile Parliament ten years before the Declaration of Independence. And now, after this long interval of time, we behold our greatest right—the right on which all other rights depend—successfully assailed in our own Congress with the same small weapons that Grenville used. If brute force had crushed it out, we might have borne the calamity with fortitude; but to see it circumvented by knavery and pettifogged to death, is too much to be endured with any show of patience.

If the majority of that commission could but have realized their responsibility to God and man, if they could only have understood that in a free country liberty and law are inseparable, they would have been enrolled among our greatest benefactors, for they would have added strength and grandeur to our institutions. But they could not come up to the height of the great subject. Party passion so benumbed their faculties that a fundamental right seemed nothing to them when it came in conflict with some argument supported by artificial reasoning, and drawn from the supposed analogies of technical procedure. The constitution was, in their judgment, outweighed by a void statute and the action of a corrupt Returning Board.

Let these things be remembered by our children's children; and, if the friends of free government shall ever again have such a contest, let them take care how they leave the decision of it to a tribunal like that which betrayed the nation by enthroning the great fraud of 1876.

The Greek Revolution.

The revolutionary feeling in Greece since the Russians crossed the Danube has grown so intense that the Sultan, on Monday last, called an Extraordinary Council to consider measures necessary to meet possible hostilities, and, as the result of the Council, Mehemet Ali Pasha was appointed to the command of the army on the Thessalian frontier. The rising of the Greeks does not grow out of any sympathy for the Sclaves, but from a disposition to profit by the misfortunes that have overtaken Turkey. The Greek Revolutionary Committee, who incited this uprising, was founded at Athens in 1867 for the purpose of aiding the Cretan insurgents. After the suppression of that rebellion, a society was established for the purpose of emancipating all the Greeks under Turkish rule from the Adriatic to Armenia. When the rebellion in Herzegovina broke out, the Committee promised Servia that as soon as she gained a victory over the Turks there should be a general Greek uprising all over the empire, but the victory never came. Servia was defeated, and the Greeks remained quiet until Russia was in the field, and, now that she is over the Danube, there is every prospect the signal will be given for a Greek uprising in Epirus, Thessaly, Southern Macedonia, and the islands in the Archipelago.—Chicago Tribune.

Russian Strategy—Past and Present.

The Russian operations on the Danube are being conducted in accordance with the traditional policy of the Russian commanders. The experience of a century and a half has taught the Russians that they must make themselves masters of the Dobrudscha before they attack the lines of the Bulgarian quadrilateral, or attempt to scale the Balkans. In 1711 the Turks defeated Peter the Great by crossing the Danube near its mouth, advancing along the Pruth and cutting the Russian line of communication. In the campaigns of 1770 and 1806-12 the Turks fared well so long as they remained in the Dobrudscha, but were defeated when they were enticed into Wallachia. In the brilliant campaign of 1828-9 the Russians occupied the Dobrudscha before operating against the fortresses and crossing the mountains. The engagements at Turns, Giurgevo, Kalafat, Oltenitza and Kalarasch, in the campaign of 1853-4 were forced by the advance of the Turks. When the Russians assumed the offensive they crossed the Danube at Braila, Galatz and Tultscha and overran the Dobrudscha before concentrating in front of Silistria. In crossing the Danube, at Sistova, the Russians chose the southernmost point, and the most direct road to the Balkans. Owing to the northern sweep of the Danube, the Turks, so long as they occupied the Dobrudscha, outflanked the Russian center and endangered its base of supplies and communications. The Russian left wing is driving them out of this vantage-ground.

Gen. Diebitsch's maneuvers in 1828 have always been regarded in Russian military circles as masterly. After occupying the Dobrudscha and leaving before Shumla and other fortresses a sufficient force to mask them, he pressed on over the Balkan with a force so small as not to be incumbered with supplies. It was a hazardous movement, but his audacity triumphed. The Russians crossed the mountains at that time by one of the two roads leading from the village of Pravadi between Shumla and the Black sea. The road from Sistova, where the Russians now are, strikes the Balkan at Gabrova.—New York Tribune.

Curiosities of Dreams.

An article in the Galaxy on dreams, by Mr. Lewis, presents some novel theories. The results of a great number of experiments are held to sustain the following facts: Speaking in a low, monotonous tone close to the ears of a sleeper will almost invariably cause him to dream of horrible adventures on water, such as shipwreck and drowning. Singing or playing on musical instruments induces dreams of dead friends, funerals, and the like. Worrisome dreams are often caused by sleeping with the arms over the head. Mr. Lewis does not believe that somnambulism is caused by weight of trouble on the mind, and he combats the idea that any great proportion of dreams are the result of making trouble. He thus describes experiments showing that they are but flashes across the brain: "While one watched a sleeper and another the clock, a third loudly slammed the blind of a window about ten feet away. The effect was almost instantaneous. The man sprung up at the sound, looked around in alarm, and then exclaimed: 'Thank God that it was only a dream.' He had dreamed of being on a crowded street in front of a building which the crowd declared unsafe, but still lingered near it. The dreamer tried to elbow his way along, but the people jeered and laughed at him and held him there. He begged and entreated, coaxed and threatened, but they held him there, and the building toppled over on him, the shock breaking his dream. It seemed certain to us that he had dreamed the entire dream in a second, while the time seemed a long half hour to him; but to place the question beyond dispute we indulged in seven or eight different experiments. Sometimes we let a weight fall to the floor, or struck a chair with a stick, and again we slammed the blind. In every instance the sleeper dreamed of some startling adventure, and awoke with a start; and no dream lasted over a minute."

The Grasshopper Prospect.

In their report on the grasshoppers in Nebraska, to the Governor of the State, Profs. Thomas and Aughey say:

"We consider the danger from the young which have hatched out this season in Nebraska over; and that this part of the problem is solved. We also believe that the long series of visitations have come to a close. There may be, and doubtless will be a irregular periods, visitations by migrating swarms, but it is not at all likely that the present generation will witness another such a series as that which has just passed."

A correspondent at Atchison, Mo., writes to the Prairie Farmer:

"The battle with grasshoppers has been fought and, to all intents and purposes, won. At intervals they have swept down on this country like a besom of destruction, and many have anticipated that they might, in time, render the new West uninhabitable, or extend their ravages to the Atlantic. But necessity is the mother of invention. Saying nothing about their extirpation by parasites and natural causes, enough has been done already this season to demonstrate that in a cultivated and thickly-settled region this pest can be destroyed. They have multiplied indefinitely in the deserted West, and in this age are brought for the first time face to face with civilized man. As usual in such circumstances man comes off victorious."

A Tramp's Wonderful Vitality.

An accident, attended with the most extraordinary circumstances, occurred on the Northern Central railway, near Troy, Pa., a few nights ago. A tramp named James M. Bowers was walking on the track toward that place. Being tired and hungry, he sat down by the railroad and fell asleep. When he awoke he attempted to get up, but, as he said when discovered, found that he could not use his legs. He had thrown them across the rail in his sleep, and a train had run over them. One was nearly severed below the knee and the other was broken. No train was in sight, nor had he heard the noise of any train passing. He took his knife from his pocket, and cut the skin and flesh that still held his one leg, severing it entirely. He says he lay there unable to move, wholly conscious and suffering the most intense agony, for at least an hour. Finally he heard a train approaching. He had a match in his pocket and a newspaper. He lighted the paper when the train came in sight, and signaled by waving it. The engineer saw the light, and stopped the train. Bowers was taken on board and carried to Troy. He never lost consciousness, and, when a doctor was summoned, who pronounced another amputation of the severed leg necessary, Bowers refused to take any anesthetic, and coolly subjected himself to that operation and to the setting of the bones in his broken leg. He was removed to the County House, and it is thought he will recover.

The magistrate, expressing surprise, adjourned the hearing a fortnight, and gave instructions for the child to be taken to a school and instructed as to the Bible and the nature of an oath.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 19, 1877.

It is a singular, as it is a peculiar, state of things, that the party which made Hayes President, even resorting to fraud to do so, now oppose him; while the party that opposed him in the election, and which has been cheated by his being made President, favors his policies.

Col. Bob Ingersoll and family are in the far west. They were exploring the famous Ophir mine in one portion of which the temperature is 1?? degrees, which is about the "gauge" of a Russian steam bath. When Bob came out puffing and blowing, he was heard to remark, "If there is any place hotter than this, I'm dammed if I don't join some church."

Secretary John Sherman is taking a summer sail, under the pretense of official inspection, up the coast, in the revenue cutter Grant, the most sumptuous of our Government pleasure boats, and at the Government's expense. If Sherman had waited until midwinter, when an inspection of this kind would have possibly resulted in some good, there would have been no objecting. But it looks very much like a junketing trip, and the sneaking way way in which it is done stamps Mr. Sherman with what he has often been charged, dishonesty.

The Indianian, in speaking of the election of Mr. Hayes, says "that the 'people are of the opinion that he was 'legally elected by the electorial col'lege." It is well to state it in that way. But was he elected by the legally elected electoral college? That am de question. If Packard was not elected in Louisiana, were the Hayes electors. Every body knows he was legally elected by the electoral college, notwithstanding all the fillibustering, but was the electoral college legally elected as reported to the two Houses. We think it entirely proper to address Mr. Hayes as "His Fraudulency."

Senator James G. Blane followed Mr. Chamberlain in a speech at Woodstock, Conn., on the 4th, and confined himself to the Mexican policy of the Hayes Administration as recently developed, 1st. In the pursuit of border outlaws beyond the Rio Grande, and their capture; 2d. Under a thin veil to extend a moral support to good government in Mexico, and 3d. In a certain contingency to support that party or administration in Mexico which best promises to insure law and order.

His speech is a most artful assault upon the Administration, and at the same time aiming to revive old animosities between North and South by flaunting the bloody flag. He says: "I be'lieve that the men who in battle and in 'council saved the Union should gov'ern it. I believe that the men who for 'four years sought the life of the na'tion should not be entrusted with its 'supreme control." He then denounces State allegiance, and condemns the annexation of Mexican territory; preferring rather Canada. He was loudly applauded at the close.

We are glad that there is something in our navy after all. Some days ago that department demonstrated that we are a nation of no small importance, and that other nations must so recognize us. It seems that Mr. Sutter, United States consul at Acapulco, was standing in the street before his office one day when he was insolently accosted by a notorious ruffian, who had been driven from Mazatean for being too ferocious and lawless for even the rough population of that port to endure. The fellow was insolent beyond measure, and Sutter, who is an old man, quietly requested him to move on. The desperado replied with blasphemous oaths, and significantly exposed the hilt of a long and keen knife. Upon this menace the consul withdrew into his office and took a revolver from his desk. The bully outside, seeing the preparations for defense, hurled a brick at Sutter, who, perceiving that hostilities had really commenced, fired. He had intended merely to fire over the desperado's head, but he aimed low and the ball furrowed his scalp. The Mexican fell, not dead, but stunned. Sutter was immediately arrested. He was tried before a judge who was hostile to him, but who, with commendable justice, acquitted him. On the day following, the lower class in Acapulco, probably instigated by the Mexican or his associates, made a raid upon the extensive plantation of a German-American citizen named Kastan, one of the richest rancherors in the region. The mob sacked Kastan's dwelling, defoilated his orchards, ravaged his fields and dispersed his flocks. This indignant American reported the outrage and demanded consular interference. Sutter immediately laid the matter before President Diaz, claiming damages of $100,000 to $150,000. Diaz forthwith wrote an official account of the outrage to General Jiminez, his commandant at Acapulco, desiring him to make as speedy restitution as possible. Jiminez was at that time military governor of Acapulco. He received Diaz's instructions with jeers, and refused point blank to move in the matter. Sutter, perceiving the state of affairs, wrote a formal protest to Diaz and one to Foster, the American minister at the city of Mexico. He had hardly performed this necessary act when he was again arrested, at whose instigation he was unable to discover, and thrown into the town jail. This was in fact a noisome dungeon, and after the lapse of eight or ten days the unfortunate consul was seized with a malarial attack, and his situation became so dangerous that the military surgeon recommended his release from prison. Accordingly he was liberated on a kind of parole, in which he signed an instrument which bound him to appear for trial upon notification. Foster, hearing of this additional outrage, sent to Diaz a mandatory request for satisfaction. Diaz forthwith apprised Jiminez that the seizure was illegal and that Sutter's procedure was justified. The president also dispatched a senator as a commissioner to adjudicate the Kastan claim, in conjunction with another commissioner to be appointed by Sutter or Kastan. Jiminez positively refused to recognize the order. Affairs were in this critical condition when the Pensacola, which had been ordered to the spot from Panama by the navy department, arrived and dropped anchor in the harbor. Sutter reported the outange to Admiral Murray, of the flagship. The Admiral immediately turned his big guns on the town, ordered marines under arms, and landing had an audience with Jiminez. He stated in a few terse sentences what he desired, and wasted no time in unnecessary ceremonies. Sutter should receive instant unconditional liberation; Kastan's claims should be speedily adjudicated and reimbursement made; the American flag was to be raised and with the consul, was to be saluted by the Mexican guns; otherwise—and Jiminiz needed no extraordinary acuteness to perceive that the stern old admiral meant what he said—the Pensacola would immediately batter the town down about Jiminez's ears. Cannon instantly effected what protest had failed to achieve. Jiminez became very affable and tractable. He guaranteed the consul's immediate and unconditional release and the settlement of Kastan's claims. The stars and stripes were flung to the breeze and the Mexican guns roared a salute and another to the consul. The Pensacola courteously responded with a salute. It was agreed by the admiral's stipulation that Kastan should appoint a commissioner to act with the senator, and the affair was settled.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The blackberry crop will be immense this season.

Lafe Miller and family left home last week on a visit to friends in the Buckeye State.

As an item of interest to the nimrod, we notice that the woodcock are getting "mighty bold" in this latitude.

Ben Hamilton's barber pole walked off the other night in a mysterious manner. Ben is mad and vows vengeance on the vandal—if he can catch him.

Rev. N. T. Peddycord lost a valuable cow the other day. Strayed or stolen. The finder will confer a favor by notifying Mr. P. at Corunna.

The late hurricanes seem to have given Corunna the "go-by,"—passing further north and south of us. No damage has yet been done to crops or property in this neighborhood.

The present week will wind up the wheat harvest in this part of the county. Thus far the weather has been favorable, and a few more such fine days will see the grain and hay gathered in good condition.

The tidal wave has reached Corunna, and we're surrounded. On last Friday the Red Ribbon Reform movement was inaugurated at this place, by a large and interesting meeting at the M. E. church, in which friends of the cause from Kendallville and Butler participated. The meeting was addressed by Messrs. Capt. Franks and H. Planson of Butler, and Messrs. White and Williams of Kendallville. The R. R. Glee Club of the latter place was present and furnished excellent vocal music for the occasion. This meeting was followed by meetings on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. Altogether 150 have signed the pledge and donned the ribbon. On Sunday last the Corunna Red Ribbon Club was organized, with the following officers: President, J. C. Loveland; Vice Presidents, Geo Buchanan, David Nye, Carey McMillen; Secretary, Chas. Knapp; Marshals, Theo. Adams, Austin Imus; Sergeant-at-Arms, Warren McKnabb. It is the desire of the club, as soon as practicable, to fit up a reading room for the entertainment and culture of members of the club. In the meantime every body, irrespective of race, party or religions affiliations are most earnestly solicited to join the ribbon band.

GARRETT.

The farmers are reporting their wheat crops all cut, and are highly pleased over their good crop, which is the result of their hard labor. The business men of Garrett, are looking forward for a good fall and winter trade, for, as the farmers prosper, so must all classes.

Mr. Coville, is erecting quite a large mansion on Franklin St., which will add materialy to the property in that locality.

Quite an interesting hog case came off here last week, in which Messrs Moody & Hoffman, were attorny's for defendant.

Our gentlemanly attorney, Frank Van Norman Esq. late of Chicago, has been appointed depty prosecutor in and for DeCalb county.

We think the above a good appointment, as Van is a gentleman of intelligence and has had several years practice, and will do honor to the position he occupies.

Garrett is soon to have another paper, the first issue will be published July 26th, 1877. It will go under the name of the Grrrett Herald. Its columns will be devoted to the interest of the Republican party, in a town like this they had better call it an Independent, for there is lots of Democrats here.

In a railroad accident last week on the Muncie road, Jack Strain, the engineer was scalded to death, Supt. Worthington badly injured and the fireman severely hurt. We remember Jack as a genial, clever, big-hearted fellow, always at his post, and something unusual with an engineer, always pleasant. We sat at his elbow as he took the first train over the Muncie from Wayne to Bluffton, and though the engine was literally covered with humanity even to the roof of the cab, Jack had only a word of warning for them to be careful, when curses and mutterings would follow from others. The last act of his life was characteristic of the man. On one occasion, a large party came up in the night from a convention at Indianapolis and stopped for a few minutes at the depot in Blomingdale. Some of them got to quarreling and abouth half a dozen got a poor fellow cornered near the freight house, and being regular roughs, were about to knock him into smithereens when the lusty voice of Jack fell upon their ear. There was a cessation of hostilites soon after. As his engine went down the embankment he could have saved himself, but he held to his post, and amid the hissing of the white steam as it bured the flesh from his body, he died as he had lived a brave gallant officer.

Married.—Monday evening July 16th, by Rev. Mr. Johnson, at the residence of the bride's mother; Mr. I. N. Cool and Miss Alice Fair, all of Auburn.

This warm weather, none but the Cool deserve the Fair. The happy pair left for Kansas the same evening to spend the honeymoon. They take with them the congratulations of many friends.

What, then, is this problem of human destiny with which Science has impotently wrestled for so many centuries? But she told him all the same, that there was no base ball for him that afternoon; and if he didn't get the kindling split before his father came home, there'd be some wrestling that would make Science open her eyes when she struck that woodshed.

"Esther the beautiful Queen" by a class of 35 of Garrett's best singers under the supervision of W. E. Peterson, assisted by some of Auburn's singers will render this grand musical and dramatic enteinment some night next week. Every singer will appear in a custom of the Medes and Persains, also a gallows, will be built upon which the one singing the character of Haman, will be hanged, which will undoubtedly be witnessed by a large crowd of Garrettites.

The aged mother of John and Jacob Somers was struck with paralysis last Saturday about noon, and at this writing lies in an unconscious state. She had just sat down to dinner when she was stricken, and fell to the floor while the young girl went for assistance no one else being present. Her right side was paralyzed, and she has scarcely moved since. She is about eighty years of age.

The Ligonier Banner says: It affords us great pleasure to announce that, the new School Board has appointed Prof. D. D. Luke, of Goshen, superintendent of the public schools of this place. No better selection could possibly have been made, although many of our citizens would have been delighted with the re-appointment of Prof. Burrier.

Wonder if that will interfere with his editorials in the Butler Record. We hope not, as we have become so used to their length and perspicuity that life would be a blank without them.

The Press last week rather slured our citizens for visiting that place during the game of base ball there. It's only Charley, however, as the mass of the citizens there take little stock in his utterances. Our citizens have always largely patronized the fair, at that place, and the feeling between the two places has died out, except as it exists in the imagination of the lively Baxter. If every body knew him it would make no differance, but some how he puts on a smile that is so childlike and bland, that the uninitiated are misled, hence the tears.

We are sure our farmer friends do not know the value of the Nickel Steel Plow now made at Butler, by Leonard & Co. Those who have tried them pronounce them superior to anything yet introduced. We mention this more from the fact that it is an article made at home, and if as good even as those of foreign make, our farmers should give it the preference. Call at Ensley's Agricultural Depot and examine them. You have a chance to try them before you buy, and the prices are as low as on other plows. 6t

Whitney's Musical Guest for June is at hand replete with choice music and literature. We have received many excellent numbers of this "welcome Guest" in the past, but this number surpasses them all in merit. The vocal music consists of a sprightly song and chorus, new and decidedly pretty, also choice selections from "Silver Carols" and "Crown of Life," etc. The instrumental music is "Gen. Custar's Funeral March," and the "Hunter's Departure." Monthly, $1.10 a year. Specimen copy 10 cents. W. W. Whitney, publisher, Toledo, Ohio.

Monday seems of late to be a favorite day for storms. Last Monday, another hurricane came along, tearing down trees, and demolishing things generally. It took a swoop upon the corner of the building of N. & G. Ensley, east of the Court House, and tearing away the cornish, literally stripped the tin roof from a major part of the building, doing several hundred dollars' worth of damage thereto. We regret to see this handsome block despoiled in this manner. It was the pride of the town, the best finished and most elegant edifice in Auburn. Shade and fruit trees that stood the racket of the former storm careened to the gale this week.

Quite a number of impecunious cusses left Auburn last week in the night; among them we notice the names of Brown and Williams, two former business men of that place. Auburn, it seems, is a hard place for business men. —[Garrett News.

Just why Parker desires to misrepresent this place we don't know. There has been less failures in Auburn for its size than any other place in this part of the State, and none for large amounts. Williams broke down because he moved away from his trade point, and attempted to put up a building without capital; while as to Brown, there has been no such person in business here. A statement of facts will not disparage the business interests of Auburn.

ED. COURIER:—I noticed in the columns of the COURIER a statement with regard to the cutting of a field of wheat, wherein you have failed to set forth all the facts in the case.

The land is mine and I plowed more than one-third of the field, found the seed, drilled about one-half of the field with my team. Heusinger's boy and team helped to drill the rest of the field, the drill being my own property. I went last winter to his house peaceably to settle with him, but failed for the reason that he was determined to have pay for hauling the manure and half the wheat. I told him I did not wish to have any trouble with him and made him a proposition as follows: Offering to pay him for hauling the manure and all the work they had done in the field, and take my chances on the crop, which was covered with snow. But he refused, declaring he would have half the wheat and pay for hauling the manure. We failed to settle. I then sent him a written notice not to enter my farm with intent to plow, sow or reap, and gave the reason in the notice. I consider he has already received pay for all the work he caused to have been done in the field or elsewhere. If he makes a showing that I owe him anything, I am ready and willing to pay him at any time. WM. LESSIG.

Several of our young men went into the harvest field this year. They thought they would try a day's harvesting for a change, but were very careful not to start out into the country until late in the day, so that they could strike their destination about dinner time. They got away with provender enough to run a boarding house a week and then started for the field. One of them claimed to be an expert at running a reaper and mounted the machine; but in a short time he met an obstacle and flew some 30 feet upwards performing somersaults and other aerial evolutions, that would have done credit to a circus performer before he struck ground. Fortunately the machine was not injured. Another put in a good afternoon's binding, but bound himself closer to a good supper, [illegible] in the evening. They think of trying it again—some time.

We learn that a printer, of large pretentions and capital, visited Avilla, not long since, and proposed to start a newspaper at that place, if he could receive the proper "encouragement" on the part of the citizens. Satisfactory arrangements were at lenth concluded, and the publisher started after his material to print his paper. He got as far as the depot, where he was overhauled by the proprietor of the hotel, and requested to deposit for his bill. Being a little short, just at that time, Saltzgaber took his hat, and the would-be-editor and publisher of the Avilla paper was compelled to pursue his journey, after his office bare headed. He has not yet returned.—[Kendallville Standard.

We don't see how Avilla has managed to exist so long without a local paper. There are not enough papers in Noble or DeKalb counties, as there are two or three townships in each not yet supplied. Garrett is to have another paper, and what will Parker do then, poor thing. Oh, do you not know, he will have to go, to a place much warmer than ours, poor thing.

We don't know Elder Starks but, we find the following description of that worthy gentleman: Elder Starks and his worthy wife, were the happy parents of nine children—girls and boys—and a ripruarous set they were. Day and night they made things lively around the old hearthstone, for even the darkness failed entirely to quell their turbulent spirits, for by the time the elder ones had quieted down to sleep the younger scions would begin to stir. But at the table, when the blesing was being asked, absolute quiet and attention was strenuously insisted upon.

Happening to dinner one day (for the elder's hospitality was as large as his family was numerous), I watched with interest the marshaling of these fractious elements about the table. One after another was cuffed, chided, or rebuked by the worthy dame, while the elder sat with hands meekly folded, watching eagerly for the first sign of a calm. At length, when a momentary lull settled down upon the expectant circle, the mother gave the table a smart rap with her knuckles, and shouted, "Quick, quick, pa! now is your time;" and grace was said.

The man who runs the Auburn COURIER sent out a challenge some time ago in regard to base ball, which was copied by the papers of the county, and Garret in complience formed a club and went down to Auburn and beat them, but no report of it is made in this man's paper Tommy, you want to put such things in your paper for we think it would have been mighty interesting reading to many of your subscribers.—Garrette News.

When Auburn went over to Garrett, and played that club, winning the game we did not come home and make a great hurrah in the COURIER, as Parker did. But then we forgave him as an item of this kind must be a God-send to him. Whenever we want any suggestion as to how we shall run a paper, we will call on one of experience and good common sense. We will say this to the Garrett club, we unintentionally overlooked noticing that they beat our club, and it would not have given us the least pain to have made the statement, as these games are social affairs, should be full of fun and amusement, and if Garrett has the best club no point in the county will accord her that honor more readily than Auburn. The boys all around get along pleasantly together, with the exception of that game here when a member of the Garrett club abused the Umpire, which was considered not quite professional. There are some very excellent gentlemen concerned with the Garrett club, whom we know personally, and as long as they are concerned with the organization it will give it tone and character whoever else may be members thereof.

Justice B. F. Dawson hit upon a happy plan, one day last week, to "beat" a crowd of curious individuals who were "bent on" witnessing the nuptial ceremony of an Angola couple. About the time the office was crowded, his honor carefully glanced over that indispensable document, the marriage license, when he suddenly discovered that instrument was not gotten up within the meaning of the law. So, giving the groom a sly wink, he said to him that they would be obliged to step out and "have that little matter adjusted." The bride and groom accordingly stepped out, and accompanied him to his residence, where quietly, and away from the gaze of the curious crowd who were in the Justice's office, the happy couple were made man and wife, and went on their way rejoicing. The shrewd Justice returned shortly to his office and [illegible] blandly [illegible] audience. They took the hint and left with a smile on the wrong corner of their mouths.—[Steu[illegible] Republican.

We had a little episode in that line here a few weeks ago. A young man from the country came to town with his intended to get spliced, and as luck would have it, he was referred to the editor of this paper as the proper one to perform the marriage ceremony. He wanted a quiet affair, as he did not want the folks at home to know that they were married. He met us on the street and very innocently asked if we would perform the ceremony. With our usual desire to accommodate, we replied in the affirmative, looking upon it as a joke being perpetrated by some of the boys. In order to insure secrecy, we invited the pair to the sanctum of the COURIER office, where, surrounded by a pure and chaste atmosphere, they could consumate their happiness with great "e'clat," if you know what that is. They came and assuming the position which those "whose hearts beat as one" love to assume, we stood before them in the glory of our manhood, when we happened to catch a full view of the devil in bas relief through the open door of the adjoining room. We at once closed and barricaded said door, and peace was with us once again. Just as we were about to go through the beautiful service, we concluded to look at our license, and found it had expired a few days before. How vexing, but Esquire Walborn being present, and having full power, made the twain one, and the last word the groom said was, "keep mum." And we've kept our promise.

THAT HEBREW JEW.

A Subtle Distinction Known Only to Few.

BY BRET HARTE.

There once was a tradesman renowned as a screw,
Who sold pins and needles and calicoes too,
Till he built up a fortune—the which as it grew
Just ruined small traders the whole city through—
Yet one thing he knew,
Between me and you,
There was a distinction
'Twixt Christian and Jew.

Till he died in his mansion—a great millionaire—
The owner of thousands—but nothing to spare
For the needy and poor who from hunger might drop,
And only a pittance to clerks in his shop,
But left it all to
A lawyer, who knew
A subtle distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew.

This man was no trader, but simply a friend
Of this Jew who kept shop and who, nearing his end,
Handed over a million—'twas only his due,
Who discovered this contrast 'twixt Ebrew and Jew,
For he said, "If you view
This case as I do,
There is a distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew.

"For the Jew is a man who will make money through
His skill, his finesse, and his capital too,
And an Ebrew's a man that we Gentiles can 'do,'
So you see there's a contrast 'twixt Ebrew and Jew.
Ebrew and Jew,
Jew and Ebrew,
There's a subtle distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew."

So he kept up his business of needles and pins,
But always one day he atoned for his sins,
But never the same day (for that wouldn't do)
That the Jew faced his God with the awful Ebrew.
For this man he knew,
Between me and you,
There was a distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew.

So he sold soda water, and shut up the fount
Of a druggist whose creed was the Speech on the Mount,
And he trafficked in gaiters and ruined the trade
Of a German whose creed was by great Luther made,
But always he knew,
Between me and you,
A subtle distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew.

Then he kept a hotel—here his trouble began—
In a fashion unknown to his primitive plan;
For the rule of this house to his manager ran,
"Don't give entertainment to Israelite man."
Yet the manager knew,
Between me and you,
No other distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew.

"You may give to John Morrissey supper and wine,
And Madame N. N. to your care I'll resign;
You'll see that those Jenkins from Missouri Flat
Are properly cared for; but recollect that Never a Jew
Who's not an Ebrew
Shall take up his lodgings
Here at the Grand U.

"You'll allow Miss McFlimsey her diamonds to wear;
You'll permit the Van Dams at the waiters to swear;
You'll allow Miss Decollete to flirt on the stair;
But as to an Israelite—pray have a care,
For, between me and you,
Though the doctrine is new,
There's a business distinction
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew."

Now, how shall we know? Prophet, tell us, pray do,
Where the line of the Hebrew fades into the Jew.
Shall we keep out Disraeli and take Rothschild in?
Or snub Meyerbeer and think Verdi a sin?
What shall we do?
O, give us a few
Points to distinguish
'Twixt Ebrew and Jew.

There was One—Heaven help us!—who died in man's place,
With thorns on his forehead, but Love in his face,
And when "foxes had holes" and the birds of the air
Had their nests in the trees, there was no spot to spare
For this "King of the Jews."
Did the Romans refuse
This right to the Ebrews,
Or only to Jews?

THE MAID OF CULTA-MORE.

On the northern coast of Ireland the traveler's attention may be attracted by numerous islands lying adjacent to the mainland. On one of those lovely spots, named Culta-More, there lived a widow about 50 years old, her husband having met his untimely death during a violent storm off the coast.

The widow, Mrs. MacDermot, was blessed with one child, a daughter of sweet 16, who, for beauty, could not be excelled by any of the coleens on the three adjoining islands. As might be expected her home was the favorite resort of all the youngsters about the place, each one of them in hopes of gaining Miss MacDermot's affections.

Mary, such was her name, received them all cordially, but paid no more attention to one than another. On an adjoining island there lived a farmer named Jim O'Donnell, who had three sons, Thomas, Martin and James. Thomas being the eldest, he thought he should be thinking of getting married. He was a stout young man, about 25 years of age, of dark complexion, but well-built and tall. Thomas, thinking the widow's daughter a good chance, as she was the heiress of a large farm, paid numerous visits to her house, while his younger brother, James, a boy of eighteen, handsome and intelligent, visited there often, and, as it proved, with more success than his brother. Thomas, finding this out, grew jealous of his brother; he consulted his father and advised him to send James to college, to prepare him for teaching school in the parish they lived in. The old man consented to send James to a college in Glasgow, where he had some acquaintances. When James became aware of this arrangement, he did not care to leave without making a visit to Miss MacDermot. About three in the afternoon he rowed his boat across the channel to the opposite shore and went immediately to the widow's. He was received with caide-mealie-failthe. He told Miss Mary that the principal object of his visit was that he was going to Glasgow to study, and, as that was to be his last visit for some time, he informed her how deeply he was in love with her, and if she only loved him in return he would be the happiest man on earth.

She gave him her hand silently, the tears rolling down her bright cheeks, until she broke the silence by telling him to go and inform her mother of his departure. Both went immediately to the old woman, and James informed her that he was going away for three years, and he had come to bid her and Mary good-by. Giving him a hearty shake of the hand, and a 'tharahassa (God preserve you), the lovers parted, leaving the tears standing in Mary's eyes. Two days afterwards he started for Glasgow, and arriving safe he sent two letters, one to his father and the other to the widow's daughter, to inform them of his safe arrival.

For a year after the letter-carrier might be seen twice a month crossing the wild moor toward the Widow MacDermot's, and dropping a letter for her daughter.

After James O'Donnell's departure, his brother Thomas made frequent visits to the island. One evening in the month of October, 18—, he started from home, determined to know his fate before his return. When he got to Mrs. MacDermot's, there was no one in but that lady.

"Good evening, Mrs. Mac."

"Good evening to you kindly; take a seat and sit down," was the widow's reply.

"I came on particular business this evening. I came to know if you would be wishful to receive me as your son-in-law. You want a good, strong man to work your farm, and to make you as comfortable as I possibly can."

The widow said: "Thomas, I have no objection to your being my son-in-law, but I did not think Mary had her thoughts on marriage at present. However, Mary is coming in; ask her, and if she is willing I am content."

The words were scarcely spoken when Mary entered with a pail of milk in her hand.

"Good evening, Mr. O'Donnell," she said; "you are quite welcome."

"Thank you, Mary," he answered, reaching her his hand; "I hope you will not be angry with me for what I am going to say. I love you dearly. If you will consent to be my wife, I will do all in my power to make you and your mother as comfortable as I possibly can."

Mary stepped back from him and answered:

"Mr. O'Donnell, I have not made up my mind to marry for a couple of years; besides, I would not marry you anyway."

A dark cloud of anger overspread his features, and, muttering to himself, "I knew it; but she will rue the day she will ever marry any other," he departed from the widow's as angry as he could be, and returned home.

Time rolled on, and James O'Donnell's three years were drawing to a close. Mary was expecting a letter from him every day, to inform her of his arrival home. One pleasant evening, as she was sitting on the door-step, pondering over the last visit he had made her, "Perhaps he had seen some Scotch girl in Glasgow to admire more than me," she thought. At that moment she heard the echoes of a horn, and, raising her head, she saw the letter-carrier crossing the wild moor, with his leather bag on his back. She ran to meet him, for he never took that road except he had a letter for her or her mother. He gave her a package; on opening it she found a nice book and a note from the object of her thoughts. The note informed her that he would go home after another month. A smile of joy spread over her countenance as she read the note. "Perhaps he may love me yet," she inwardly said. She hastened to tell her mother the news. Her fond parent was overjoyed to hear of his return home. Four weeks afterward Mary received another visit from the mail-carrier, with a note to inform her that James was about to start for home on the next day. He had made all preparations to leave on the day appointed. The ship was to sail at 8 a. m.

After four-and-twenty hours of tedious sailing she cast anchor in view of the city of Londonderry, and James O'Donnell arrived safe at home. After a hearty welcome from all his friends, he thought it was time he was on his road towards the widow's. He started, therefore, for her home, and as he got to the channel, who did he see on the opposite shore, sitting in the boat, but Mary McDermot, waiting for him. As soon as she espied him she rowed the boat to meet him. But what a different man from the boy of eighteen that left her three years ago; a full-grown man, handsome-featured, broad shoulders, elegantly-built and well dressed. He grasped her in his arms and pressed her to his heart.

"Oh, Mary," he exclaimed, "is it you?"

"Yes, James, it is me; I was waiting for you; come over to the house; how glad my mother will be to see you."

They got into the boat and pulled across to the opposite shore, and started for the widow's house. Mary's mother was waiting on the threshold to meet them. The new arrival chatted with the mother and daughter for a few hours, when the old woman retired and left the young people to have a quiet talk. James then drew his seat towards Mary, and, taking her hand, asked her if she remembered the promise he made her three years before, and if she was willing to renew it then and to become his wife.

"Oh, how good of you, James, to ask me. I could never marry any one but you," she answered. Taking her hand in his, he imprinted a kiss on her blushing cheeks.

"This is the happiest moment of my life," he said. "Appoint the wedding day."

The wedding day was appointed and arrived at last, and all the neighbors in the adjoining islands were invited to the wedding. The marriage service was performed by the parish priest in the village church, and on their return home old Micky Brennan, the piper, took the lead with his bagpipes, playing "Haste to the Wedding," "All the way to Galway," "The White Cockade," the "Humors of Glinn," and "Patrick's Day," and other Irish airs, on the way home. When they arrived at Mr. O'Donnell's, there was a good dinner ready for them. The weddingers ate heartily, and, as there was plenty of potcen, everyone helped himself plentifully. Everything was going on well, when it was proposed for the bride to give a toast. She took a bumper in her hand and gave them a few brief words, most worthy of the occasion. Old Paddy Gallagher, who was sitting in the corner, next to Micky Brennan, the piper, jumped from his seat and asked why she did not speak in the Gaelic (for the old man could not understand any English, and he considered it an insult to speak English in his presence), and a violent altercation ensued, but it was soon quieted. Micky Brennan squeezed the bagpipes, and played the "Irish Washwoman," and set them all a-dancing. The groom and the bride were as happy as could be. The bride says to her husband, "James, I have something to say to you."

"What is it?" he said.

"You remember when I told you of Thomas' proposing to marry me. I am afraid to meet him or speak to him; I see anger in his eyes. Everyone seems to be happy but him."

"I will tell you what I intend doing, Mary," he added.

"James, what is it?" she said.

"We will go over to your mother's to-night, and a few others, and we will have a pleasant time. You will go over with Thomas and try to make friends, as you are my wife now. He will not be angry with you. I will speak to him myself."

He went to Thomas and told him that a few of the company were going over to my mother-in-law's, and I want you for to take Mary over along with you, and I will take over the rest of the company." Thomas and the bride started first, and as they reached the shore they went into the boat.

"Mary," he said, "I hope you are contented with your choice. I suppose you remember the evening I offered to marry you and you refused."

"Yes," she answered, "I do. But could you blame me, as I was already engaged to your brother?"

By this time they were midway in the channel. Instantly he dropped the oars in the sea and exclaimed, "The plug is out of the boat and the water is gushing in. Save yourself the best you can." Jumping out into the sea, leaving her to her fate, he swam to shore and returned home to his father's. When he got within a quarter of a mile of his father's, he met James and his friends going to Mrs. MacDermot's.

"What is the matter, Thomas?" said James, "and where is my wife?"

Thomas hung down his head and spoke slowly. "As we were crossing the channel the plug (a wooden stopper used in a hole to let the water out) must be taken out by someone. The boat commenced leaking rapidly, and I had enough to do to save myself."

"Is my wife drowned?" James asked, running to the shore. When there he ran along the strand calling "Mary, Mary!" but all to no avail; the echoes of his voice died away amid the sounds of the dashing waves. As he was running about in wild despair, he heard a voice saying, "James, James! help, help!" He stood and listened, but could not hear any more. He returned home like a man in a dream. He could not rest all that night, but walked about not knowing where he was. Early in the morning he went to the sea-shore, and stopped there all day long, watching the waves ebbing to and fro. Often the words of the poet crossed his memory:

> The waters wild went o'er his child,
> And he was left lamenting.

Time rolled on, and six weary months passed by, and during that time he never spoke to Thomas nor Thomas to him. They always shunned each other. One day James met his father. "Father," says he, "if I do not leave this country, my brother Thomas will kill himself. I know by the way he acts. I have my mind on going to America." A few days after James started for Glasgow to take his passage to America.

* * * * * * *

When Thomas jumped out of the boat and left Mary to her fate, a thought came to her to try to stop the hole to prevent the leakage, in which she succeeded by stuffing it with her shawl. "Now if I had the oars I would get to shore, but they are floating away with the tide." She was drifted northward with a lively breeze. She was giving herself up for lost, when she heard the cries of her husband. Then she answered with all her strength, "James, James! help, help!" and she fell insensible in the boat.

Next day she awoke from her insensibility and found herself in the midst of the ocean; she became aware of her danger and stood up in the boat holding her handkerchief in her hand, hoping it might attract the attention of some passing ship. She waited about for a night and a day, and no sign of relief. The sun was sinking down on the waves of the Atlantic, when she espied, coming towards her, a full-rigged ship. "Thank Heaven, relief at last!" she says. She was taken on board the ship, and wrapped in warm clothing, and the Captain's wife took charge of her and nursed her tenderly. When she recovered herself properly, the Captain's wife took her on deck. But to her dismay, in all her grief, sorrow and trouble, she had no one to speak a word to her, for it was a Danish ship, bound for Iceland. There was only one sailor on board that could speak a little English. They all endeavored to make her as comfortable as possible.

The voyage was made to Iceland, and on her return back she was informed that the ship would call in at Glasgow, and she could get off there and take shipping there for Ireland. When they arrived in Glasgow the Captain sent her on shore, with money enough to take her home to Ireland, and directed her to a hotel. When she got to the hotel she entered the office. She heard a voice saying, "Good-bye, Mr. P. I am bound for America to-day." Passing through the office he saw a lady. He stood, and looked—ran and clasped his fainting wife in his arms, saying, "My wife, my wife, it is you?" He took her to his room and ordered a doctor. The doctor came and told him it was only weakness—she would be recovered immediately. When she recovered, how thankful she was to have her husband once more. After taking a few days' pleasure in Glasgow, they returned home to Culta-More, where they were received with "Caide-maile-failthes" from all friends and neighbors. Next morning after their arrival Thomas O'Donnell was missing, and in a week after his dead body was washed ashore. James O'Donnell and his loving wife lived happy afterward.

So ends the romance of Mary MacDermot, or the maid of Culta-More.

Large Noses.

Dr. Cid, an inventive surgeon at Paris, noticed that elderly people, who for a long time have worn eye-glasses supported on the nose by a spring, are apt to have this organ long and thin. This he attributes to the compression which the spring exerts on the arteries by which the nose is nourished. The idea occurred to him that the hint could be made useful. Not long afterward a young lady of 15 consulted him, to see if he could restore to moderate dimensions her nose, which was large, fleshy, and unsightly. The trait he found was hereditary in her family, as her mother and sister were similarly affected. This was discouraging, as hereditary peculiarities are particularly obstinate. But the doctor determined to try his method. He took exact measurement, and had constructed for her a "lunette pince-nez"—a spring and pad for compressing the artery, which she wore at night and whenever she conveniently could in the daytime. In three weeks a consolatory diminution was evident, and in three months the young lady was quite satisfied with the improvement in her features.

A BEAR STORY.

Encounter with a California Grizzly.

[Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.]

Crossing over the trail from Bear valley to San Bernardino, we encountered a grizzly bear standing directly in our path. My guide strongly advised making a detour and leaving bruin in possession of the pass, but I thought of my California stock bought at 60 and determined to be avenged upon this bruin for what I had suffered at the hands of the California street bears. I had a heavy Sharp's rifle, and, putting a handful of cartridges into my vest pocket to expedite rapid loading, I approached within sixty yards, and, dismounting, gave my lariat to my guide, telling him if he attempted to run off with the horses I would shoot him. I then took deliberate aim at the bear's head and fired. With a roar which sounded to me like that of forty lions combined he bounded toward me. Hastily reloading, I fired again, and was so fortunate as to break one of his forelegs. This so checked his advance that I was able to give him four more shots before we came to close quarters. Owing to my rifle having become heated from rapid firing, I had some difficulty in extracting an exploded cartridge, and by the time I was prepared to deliver my seventh and last shot—for I had no more cartridges in my pocket—my enemy was within ten feet of me. I could see that nearly every shot had taken effect. One bullet had plowed a deep furrow from near the end of his nose to his left eye, under which it had lodged. From a wound in his neck the blood was spouting in heavy, rapid jets. His end was evidently close at hand, but mine might be even nearer.

All depended upon the chance he would give me to put in my next shot. Even if I had had more cartridges, I knew that I would not have time to reload. I leveled my rifle, and as I did so the bear raised upon his hind legs as if to embrace me. His left paw hung helpless by his side, my second shot having shattered the leg above the knee. The long claws on his other paw looked anything but pleasant, as he extended it with the evident design of "going short" on me. As he raised his paw he extended his breast, and I sent my last bullet through his heart. He did not immediately drop, but settled back upon his haunches, and glared at me for an instant with a fury of 10,000 devils in his eyes; then with a growl of disappointed rage he gave one convulsive spring forward and fell dead at my feet. I examined my dead prize, and found that six of my seven shots had struck him. I came to the conclusion then and there to give a "grizzly" a wide berth for the future. It takes too much lead to kill him.

The Roads Across the Balkans.

Bulgaria, from the river to the Balkans, is a rolling country, covered in some places with rich pastures and fertile fields, and traversed by numerous streams. The villages are not numerous, and are widely separated from each other, but of considerable extent and generally well-provisioned; on this resource, however, an invading army cannot rely, as in all probability they have been already well drained by the Turks. This circumstance will, in consequence, necessitate the transportation of everything needed for the subsistence of the columns. The roads during the rainy season are, in this light, clayey soil, simply impracticable. The descent into the valleys, as we approach the mountains, becomes steep, and is rendered more difficult by the absence of bridges over all but the principal water-courses. In the winter, when the snow is very abundant, there are no roads at all. In the summer all vegetation is burned up by the excessive heat, and the want of water is sensibly felt, although Mussulman piety has established fountains and dug wells wherever it is possible. This circumstance often necessitates long marches, particularly for the cavalry, and is a reason for an enforced bad selection of camps and cantonments. Even when the roads are practicable an advance across the country is impossible for an army accompanied by a heavy train. The difficulties of the passage of the Balkans depend less upon the absolute height and inaccessibility of the mountains themselves than upon the countless obstacles of detail which accumulate during six or seven days' march, and are increased by the paucity and bad condition of the lines of communication. The Balkan is almost uninhabited; its sides are covered with virgin forests, and as, even in the valleys, villages are not numerous, the roads are neglected.

The first operation of any army of invasion will, then, necessarily, be the construction of roads. The defense of the Balkan itself demands no addition to its already existing permanent fortifications, but merely the establishment of field works and abattis at all the different defiles, as the enemy's forces must be opposed at many points, it not being within the limits of possibility to concentrate at any one.—Bucharest Correspondence.

The Ups and Downs of San Francisco.

Joined to this failure of crops comes the great panic or panics in mining speculations. Few States could stand the shock of $200,000,000 shrinkage in her securities in sixty days. All classes of the community are involved. Thousands have dropped from positions of affluence to poverty within the period named. One man, reputed to be worth $6,000,000, has lost all, and is said to be $300,000 in debt. Now that this disaster is keenly felt by all classes, from the hod-carrier to the richest mining magnate, is seen in the general effort at economy that universally prevails. The Sheriff's lock is frequently seen upon the door of hitherto prosperous merchants, old established houses are calling on their creditors for accommodation in the way of extensions, houses in the course of erection are stopped midway, and business blocks, for the time, are held in abeyance. Personal economy appears in hats a little out of style, and coats seedy on the edge, with rather a musty smell, suggestive of a raid upon a wardrobe long since laid aside. And yet it is refreshing to see with what complacency these men part with their splendid homes, their magnificent teams, and their expensive habits, and, figuratively speaking, roll up their sleeves and buckle in again to win back the fortunes they have so suddenly lost. Perhaps no city on the continent has made such rapid strides in commercial prosperity as the Queen City of the Pacific coast; and certainly no people have acquired such great fortunes in so short a time as the wealthy citizens of this community during the past seven years, but to-day they are suffering from [illegible] speculation, [illegible] securities based on fictitious values.—*San Francisco Cor. Windsor Castle Hospitalities.

A correspondent writes to the New York Herald:

"In connection with your graphic and interesting account of Queen Victoria's reception of Gen. Grant this remark occurs: 'No such honors, nor anything approaching them, have ever before been paid to an American citizen.' A similar distinguished attention was conferred upon Commander Henry J. Hartstene, United States navy, about the year 1854 or 1855. He was sent by our Government to return to England one of her vessels which had been abandoned in the Arctic sea and brought to this country and refitted. On this occasion Commander Hartstene received and entertained the Queen upon the vessel, personally escorting her Majesty through an inspection of it. He afterwards dined with the Queen and Prince Albert, surrounded by their children. He spent the night at the palace, but, with characteristic modesty and aversion to notice, he obtained permission to leave privately before breakfast the next morning. This reception was somewhat less stately than that of Gen. Grant, but to balance, this had in it even more of the elements of personal intercourse with the sovereign."

The Cuban Patriots.

Col. De Queralta, recently of the Cuban army and a member of the new War Commission now representing the Cuban cause in this country, in an address to the American people says: "At no time since the first blow of liberty was struck, nine years ago, have we Cubans been so near the realization of our hopes as at the present moment. We need arms and ammunition. We do not ask for filibusters. We have enough Cubans on the island and in exile—more, indeed, than we need—to plant the Cuban flag even in Havana itself if we only had arms and ammunition. For the last three long years we have not received a single round of ammunition from outsiders. We have to fight for it and take it from Spaniards. We, however, make a good deal of powder on the island, and then refill the cartridges picked up from the enemy. This is a slow process; still our little army of 18,000 men is now well clothed, and this has enabled us the past year to maintain the offensive with considerable success."

Ravages of Wolves in Russia.

A pamphlet by M. Lasarewski, which has been issued from the Russian Ministry of the Interior, gives a formidable account of the ravages of wolves, from which it appears that in European Russia alone about 200,000 of these beasts are harbored, a number which shows an increase rather than a diminution during the last decade. In the three years ending in 1861, 125 persons were killed by the wolves, and in 1875 161 persons met their death from the same cause. Official reports show that about 180,000 head of large animals and 500,000 head of small fall victims to these marauders; but these numbers are inadequate, since much destruction is wrought which is not officially reported. The female wolves nourish their young on fowl, and in the one government of Kasan they dispose of some 11,000 geese annually: besides this they kill at least 100,000 dogs in the same time, and altogether cost European Russia about 500,000,000 roubles per annum.

A Curious Will Case.

A very singular will case was brought to the attention of the Probate Court today. A man died leaving his property one-third to his wife, one-third to his child and the other third to a child then unborn. The unborn party proved to be twins, and the executor is sorely perplexed as to whether he shall divide the third, giving each of the twins one-sixth of the estate, or whether he should carry out the testator's purpose to serve all the children alike by giving them and the widow each one-fourth, or whether, again, he shall give the widow her third and divide the other two-thirds among the three children. The case being wholly without precedent in this State, the court gave the executor no advice, and the conundrum is to be in some way brought before the Supreme Court.—*Springfield (Mass.) Dead Horses Standing Erect.

Mr. Smith was in town on Saturday with his hired man, and the two tell a singular story about a lightning stroke. Mr. Smith was on a grain drill in a field, and his hired man was about twelve rods from him, dragging. Suddenly Smith heard the noise of thunder, and became unconscious. The man also heard the noise, but neither of them saw any flash of lightning. The man went to Smith, and in about twenty minutes he was restored to consciousness. Then attention was given to the horses. One of them was standing erect, with one foot lifted a little way from the earth, and the other was kneeling with his nose in the earth, and both were stone dead, and retained their positions until they were pushed over. The supposition is that in this case the electricity went from the earth to the sky.—Danville (Ky) Advertiser.

Alcohol and Insanity.

A correspondent of the Journal of Medical Science, Dr. Nonald, writing from Guinea, states with regard to the etiology of insanity in that colony, that it is not found to be depending in any way on, or modified by, the nature of the climate, but that one of the most fertile causes of the malady is intemperance; this is more particularly the case among Creoles and Portuguese, alcohol being traceable, in many instances, as the direct agent. Dr. Noland states that among the lower classes rum is mostly used, and frequently, in the form of highwines, rum 40 over proof, so that it can easily be understood that this in time seriously interferes with the bodily health, and, acting as a poison, eventually produces cerebral lesions.

Tom Thumb got angry because a staring crowd followed him into a Carson, (Nev.) barber shop, and he offered to fight any one of them.

A BACHELOR'S [illegible]

I'm a grumpy old bachelor,
Grizzly and gray;
I am seven-and-forty
If I am a day.
I am fussy and crusty,
And dyspeptic and lone;
So ladies, good ladies,
Just let me alone!

Oh shake out your ringlets,
And beam out in smiles
Go tinkle your trinkets
And show off your wiles.
Bewitch and bewilder
Wherever you can;
But, pray—pray, remember,
I am not the man!

I'm frozen to blushes,
I'm proof against eyes;
I'm hardened to simpers
And stony to sighs;
I'm tough to each dart
That young Cupid can lance;
I'm not in the market
At any advance!

I sew my own buttons,
I darn my own hose,
I keep my own counsel
And fold my own clothes,
I mind my own business,
And live my own life;
I won't—no, the Dickens!—
Be plagued with a wife.

And yet there's nine spinsters
Who believe me their fate,
There's two dozen widows
Who'd change their estate
There's silly young maidens
Who blush at my bow;
All—all bent on marrying me,
No matter how!

I walk forth in trembling;
I come home in dread;
I don't fear my heart,
But I do fear my head!
My civilest speech
Is a growl and a nod;
And that—Heaven save me!—
Is "charmingly odd!"

So ladies—dear ladies—
Just hear me, I pray;
I speak to you all
In the plainest way.
My logic is simple
As logic can be—
If I won't marry you,
Pray—don't marry me!

PITH AND POINT.

A tune that young ladies try to catch: a million air.

A splendid ear, but a poor voice, as the organ-grinder said of the donkey.

You know mock modesty as you do mock-turtle—from its being the produce of a calf's head.

"Don't you think, husband, that you are apt to believe everything you hear?" "No, madam, not when you talk."

An inquiring individual writes to a paper to ask "how long cows should be milked?" "Why, the same as short cows, of course!"

A little boy went to his mother and said, "Mamma, I'd think, if I was made of dust, I'd get muddy inside when I drink coffee."

What's the difference between the lower part of the leg and the late comet? One's shin and bone, and the other's been and shone.

A little boy, disputing with his sister on some subject, exclaimed: "It's true, for ma says so; and if ma says so, it is so, if it ain't so."

A boy, writing to his sister, said: "Sarah Jane Gibbs is dead, and her mother's got twins. They are girls, and this is awful fine weather for ducks."

"What to eat and how to cook it," is the title of a book recently published. "What to eat and how to get it," would meet with a livelier sale among the laboring classes here just now.

The man who is curious to see how the world could get along without him can find out by sticking a cambric needle into a mill-pond, and then withdrawing it and looking at the hole.

A strong-minded woman was heard to remark the other day that she would marry a man who had plenty of money, though he was so ugly she had to scream every time she looked at him.

A line in one of Moore's songs reads thus: "Our couch shall be roses bespangled with dew." To which a sensible girl replied: "'Twould give me the rheumatis, and so it would you."

Two sable philosophers took shelter under the same tree during a heavy shower. After some time one of them complained that he felt the rain. "Nebber mind," replied the other; "dere's plenty of trees. When dis un am wet through we'll go to de oder."

At a duel the parties discharged their pistols without effect, whereupon one of the seconds interfered, and proposed that the combatants should shake hands. To this the other second objected as unnecessary; for, said he, their hands have been shaking this half hour.

A negro having been brought up before a magistrate, and convicted of pilfering, the magistrate began to remonstrate. "Do you know how to read?" "Yes, massa—little." "Well, don't you ever make use of the Bible?" "Yes, massa, strap him razor on him sometimes."

A dry goods clerk relates that a very pretty and stylish young lady called in the store the other day and requested to see some lavender kid gloves, whereupon she was shown several different shades of that color. Being a little overcome with so great a variety, she asked, "Which of those pairs are the lavenderest?"

Appropriate names: For a printer's wife, Em; for a sport's wife, Betty; for a lawyer's wife, Sue; for a teamster's wife, Carrie; for a fisherman's wife, Netty; for a shoemaker's wife, Peggy; for a carpet man's wife, Mattie; for an auctioneer's wife, Biddy; for a chemist's wife, Ann Eliza; for an engineer's wife, Bridget.

Two eminent members of the Irish bar, Doyle and Yelverton, quarreled one day so violently that from words they came to blows. Doyle, the more powerful man (at the fists, at least), knocked down his adversary twice, exclaiming most vehemently, "You scoundrel, I'll make you behave yourself like a gentleman!" To which Yelverton, rising, answered with equal indignation, "No sir, never! I defy you! I defy you! You can't do it!"

MacMahon.

Marshal MacMahon's birthday was celebrated on the 15th of June. His age is 69. He was born in the chateau of Sully, near Autun, in 1808. His father, Maurice de MacMahon, was faithful to the Bourbon cause, and, during the reign of Louis XVIII., was created a Lieutenant General and a commander of the order of St. Louis. His grandfather, Jean Baptiste de MacMahon, born in Limerick, Ireland, was naturalized and ennobled by the French Government in 1750. His ancestor first visited France in the suite of the exiled James II. of England.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Coffee for Tired Horses.—A veterinary surgeon of Prague is said to have discovered that strong coffee has a wonderfully-reviving effect upon decrepit and overworked horses. In a very short time it renews their vigor, smooths their skin, and restores their full capacity for work.

No stock should be allowed to wander over the meadows. This is doubly injurious. It destroys the grass and spoils the appetite of the animals for dry feed. Nothing is gained, but much is lost by this practice. The ground is also "poached," and quagmires are formed in low, springy spots where the first grass appears.

Protecting Young Trees.—The cheapest and best way I have found to protect the trunks of trees from sheep, etc., is to cut bass-wood when it will peel freely, and cut the bark in strips long and wide enough to go around the tree. It will curl round in drying and be a sure protection.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Screens.—Mr. E. Moody said at the Rochester horticultural meeting that he found screens of trees of much value to some of his plantations. In his garden he gets abundant crops of the Franconia raspberry, except where there is an opening in the screen which surrounded it. He has known peaches to be killed on the windward side of a screen and to escape on the other side.

Sheep as Fertilizers.—Springel allowed that the manure of 1,400 sheep for one day is equal to manuring highly one acre of land, which is about four sheep per year. Mechi, a still more recent authority, estimates that 1,500 sheep, folded on an acre of land twenty-four hours, or 400 sheep for fifteen days, would manure the land sufficiently to carry it through four years' rotation.—Semi-Tropical.

Harness in Stables.—Harness should never be kept in the stable where manure is constantly generating large quantities of ammonia. This ammonia is rapidly absorbed by the leather, and the effect upon the leather is about the same as would result from saturating it with strong lye. In a word, ammonia rots leather, and hence keeping harness in the stable is sure to result in its damage, more or less.—Exchange.

Watering Gardens.—When the warm, sunny days come, and our gardens look dry and parched, we are so strongly tempted to use the watering pot that we frequently yield, and so injure the plants that we are striving to benefit. If we attempt to water our flower beds at all, we must do it thoroughly. Wait until after sunset, and then pour on water until it seems ready to run off. Let this soak into the ground and then water again. Finally, spread freshly-cut grass over the beds; this covering will tend to keep the ground soft and moist. The usual method of sprinkling the flower beds slightly only tends to make the surface of the ground hard and dry, thus excluding air and moisture.—Globe-Democrat.

Motherless Young Animals.—How to mother motherless young animals—foal, calves, or lambs. Rub the palm of the hand full of gin on the nose and mouth of the dam; rub a little of the same bottle along the back of the young animal to be adopted, place them together and the relationship is complete. The advantage of this simple process will be complete to those who have to do with long-wool sheep, where, as is frequently the case, a ewe leaves a pair of fine lambs, while probably another ewe loses her lambs, when exchange of maternal affection is instantly brought about by the gin, to the saving and successful raising of what otherwise would be two troublesome pets at best. When a ewe has three lambs, and another ewe one, the disparity can be effectually remedied in the same manner.

Regularity in Feeding.—Nothing is more important than regularity in feeding. If the usual time be allowed to pass the animals become uneasy and worried, and every feeder knows a fretting animal will not fatten. A supply of good, pure water is absolutely necessary, and especially if dry food is used exclusively. Rock salt should be kept constantly in the feeding-troughs. Injudicious feeding is generally followed by scouring, and the nature and conditions of the secretions form infallible guides to the careful feeder. All cattle should be carded daily; it is well known to the groom that nothing will so improve the horse's condition, and in all animals it induces warmth and cleanliness, and promotes the healthy action of the skin. Very poor cattle will sometimes be found to be lousy, a remedy for which is a good wash with tobacco water. Animals of restless disposition do not thrive so well as those of quiet temper, and kind words and gentle actions on the part of the feeder will be well repaid in their peaceful contentment and certain improvement.—American Cultivator.

About the House.

Huckleberry Bread.—One quart flour, one pint sour milk, one teaspoonful soda, one and a half pint berries; mix as stiff as biscuit dough.

To Clean Colored Silk.—Wash in warm soapsuds, rinse in clear, warm water, dry quickly, and iron on the wrong side while yet rather damp. If there are grease spots on the silk, press with a tolerably warm iron under brown paper.

It is worth knowing that if one volume of castor oil be dissolved in two or three volumes of spirits of wine it will render paper transparent, and, the spirits rapidly evaporating, the paper in a few minutes becomes fit for use. A drawing in pencil or in India ink can thus be made, and if the paper is placed in spirits of wine the oil is dissolved out, restoring the paper to its original condition.

Scalloped Oyster-Plant.—Boil oyster-plant or salsify till very tender; drain off all the water and rub through a colander; add butter, pepper, salt, and milk, and mix well together. Put in a baking-dish, cover the top with bread-crumbs, with here and there small bits of butter. Bake a delicate brown. Celery-salt may be used for a flavor, but not quite as much as one would of common salt.—Christian Union.

Removing Tea Stains.—The stains will come out of buff linen lunch cloth by being put in the boiler in a suds made of two pailfuls of water, a teacupful of soft soap, and a tablespoonful of the "Magical Mixture" for washing. Let these ingredients boil together five minutes; then put the boiler on the corner of the range and put the cloth in, stirring it around, but not letting it boil. The color will not be injured in the least by this process.

A Home-Made Carpet.—An Eastern lady says: Have any of you a spare bed-chamber, seldom used, which you would like to carpet at little expense? Go to the paper-hanger's and select a paper looking as much like carpet as you can find. Having taken it home, first paper the floor of your bedroom with brown paper; then over this put down your wall-paper. A good way to do this will be to put a good coat of paste upon the width of the roll of paper and the length of the room, and then lay the paper, unrolling and smoothing at the same time. When the floor is all covered, then size and varnish, only dark glue and common furniture varish being used, and the floor will look all the better for the darkening these will give it. When it is dry, put down a few rugs by the bedside and toilet table, and you have as pretty a carpet as you could wish.

Death in Life.

The other day I heard a Cabinet Minister talking to a young chap who wanted a place. "My young friend," said he, "don't apply. Saw wood, drive cows, anything honorable, but preserve your independence. I have a man in my department who has been in forty years."

"Forty years?"

"Yes, every day of it. He came in in 1826. Well, he gets about the same salary he had to commence with. The other day he came to me, saying 'I ought to have died forty years ago.' 'You don't mean that,' I said. 'Yes,' said he, 'I mean that. I have been buried in this building forty years, and I had just as well been buried in the grave. What's the difference between tombs? Of what advantage have I been to myself in here? I had nothing when I came in, and have got nothing now. I am disqualified for anything. If I was turned out to-day I would starve to-morrow.' So much for a Government position that young men are so anxious to get. They had better let it alone."—Cincinnati Commercial.

The Wanderings of a Family Bible.

Long years ago Ezra Osborn, of Long Hill, Springfield, departed this life, leaving behind him the record of a Revolutionary soldier and Mrs. Abigail Osborn, who ultimately sought the aid of a youthful lawyer, named Henry Morris, to get a pension for her. The law required proof that the widow of a soldier had been married to him before his services expired, and in proof of this a small family Bible was forwarded to Washington in 1833 that the Pension Bureau might peruse its record of births, marriages and deaths. The pension was secured and the lawyer soon dropped the business. The other day Gen. Lee received a letter from the bureau saying that an Osborn heir was wanted to which the Bible might be returned, and giving the name of the lawyer who sent it. Correspondence was exchanged, and the book was sent to Judge Morris, who drove down to Long Hill and gave it to Chester Osborn, a son of the veteran, 90 years and 6 months old, who gladly furnished the Government with a receipt. Mr. Osborn is the oldest member of the First Baptist Church, and lively and active still.—Boston Globe.

Devoured by a Bear.

A shocking story of devouring by a bear comes to us from Fredericton Junction. An old man, named Thomas Anderson, on Tuesday last, was chopping wood in Hardwood Ridge. Not returning at the usual hour for dinner, the people with whom he boarded felt some anxiety for his safety, he being a very feeble person. Night came, but with no tidings of the missing man. The following day the settlement was alarmed, and a strict search instituted, revealing the fact that the old man had been devoured by a bear. Bear's footprints were found on the ground, which was bespattered with blood, and near the foot of a tree were found the boots of the unfortunate old man with part of the legs in them. Not far from this was discovered a portion of his head dreadfully mutilated. From the footprints, plain in soft soil, and the blood along the tracks, there is no doubt but the unfortunate man became a prey to a bear.—St. John (N. B.) Freeman.

Sold Again.

The benevolent old man looked out from the window of the car, and whistled to a newsboy. Three dashed in at the front door and four in the back. The benevolent old man bought a paper of the smallest boy. In making change the lad dropped two cents. He went down on his knees in an instant and soon found the money. However, he did not cease searching. Suppressed sobs were heard, while he dug his fingers in the holes of the mat. The passengers became interested. "What's the matter, my boy?" said the benevolent old man, lowering his glasses and peering over their rims. "I've gone and dropped a dime, an' I can't find it," whimpered the boy as he thrust his hand under the seat. "Dad 'll wallop me when I gets home." "Never mind, let it go," said the benevolent old man. "Here's another one." The boy took the coin meekly, and, as he passed the conductor, remarked "sold again."—New York Sun.

Effects of Tobacco on the System.

Some years ago the French Government directed the Academy of Medicine to inquire into the influence of tobacco on the human system. The report of the commission appointed by the Academy states that a large number of the diseases of the nervous system and of the heart, noticed in the cases of those affected with paralysis or insanity, were to be regarded as the sequence of excessive indulgence in the use of this article; and it is remarked that tobacco seems primarily to act upon the organic nervous system, depressing the faculties and influencing the nutrition of the body, the circulation of the blood, and the number of red corpuscles in the blood. Attention is also called to the bad digestion, benumbed intelligence, and clouded memory of those who use tobacco to excess.

POPULAR FALLACIES.

The Necessity for Pure Air—How to Obtain It.

(From Hall's Journal of Health.)

Night air and damp weather are held in great horror by multitudes of persons who are sickly or of weak constitutions; consequently, by avoiding the night air, and damp weather, and changeable weather, and weather that is considered too hot or too cold, they are kept within doors the much largest portion of their time, and, as a matter of course, continue invalids, more and more ripening for the grave every hour; the reason is, they are breathing an impure atmosphere nineteen-twentieths of their whole existence.

As nothing can wash us clean but pure water, so nothing can cleanse the blood, nothing can make health-giving blood, but the agency of pure air. So great is the tendency of the blood to become impure in consequence of waste and useless matters mixing with it as it passes through the body, that it requires a hogshead of air every hour of our lives to unload it of these impurities; but, in proportion as this air is vitiated, in such proportion does it infallibly fail to relieve the blood of these impurities, and impure blood is the foundation of all disease. The great fact that those who are out of doors most, summer and winter, day and night, rain or shine, have the best health the world over, does of itself falsify the general impression that night air or any other out-door air is unhealthy as compared with in-door air at the same time.

Air is the great necessity of life; so much so, that if deprived of it for a moment we perish; and so constant is the necessity of the blood for contact with the atmosphere that every drop in the body is exposed to the air through the medium of the lungs every two minutes and a half of our existence.

Whatever may be the impurity of the out-door air of any locality, the in-door air of that locality is still more impure, because of the dust, and decaying and odoriferous matters which are found in all dwellings. Besides, how can in-door air be more healthy than the out-door air, other things being equal, when the dwelling is supplied with air from without?

To this very general law there is one exception, which it is of the highest importance to note. When the days are hot, and the nights cool, there are periods of time within each twenty-four hours when it is safest to be in-doors, with doors and windows closed; that is to say, for the hour or two including sunrise and sunset, because about sunset the air cools, and the vapors which the heats of the day have caused to ascend far above us, condense and settle near the surface of the earth, so as to be breathed by the inhabitants; as the night grows colder, these vapors sink lower, and are within a foot or two of the earth, so they are not breathed. As the sun rises, these same vapors are warmed, and begin to ascend, to be breathed again, but as the air becomes warmer they are carried so far above our heads as to be innocuous.

Rhetoric and Statistics.

"The day we celebrate." Let the toast go round. This the Sabbath day of liberty. Let the people all go up to the temple and worship. Bells will peal forth their merriest notes; flags will wave in every breeze around the world; bonfires will blaze; cannons roar; eloquence and song will contribute their share to the general rejoicings. Why not? A country whose farm products in one year reached the fabulous value of $2,447,538,658; slaughtered animals, $398,956,376; garden products, $20,000,000; orchard products, $47,000,000. For bread 287,750,000 bushels of wheat and 761,000,000 bushels of corn. The product of oats reached 282,000,000 bushels, 3,000,000 bales of cotton, 100,000,000 pounds of wool, 27,316,000 tons of hay, 262,732,000 pounds of tobacco, 87,000 hogsheads of sugar, 22,000,000 gallons of sirup, and 143,337,473 bushels of potatoes. Such are the sum totals furnished by census reports of 1870.

Miraculous Escape.

A railroad incident occurred recently on one of the East India lines, which was startling as it was singular, and may be said to be one of the most miraculous escapes on record. A train was approaching a bridge on a curve. When the bridge came within sight, at a distance of 300 to 400 yards, the engine-driver was horror-struck to discover that it was completely in flames. Finding his brake power totally useless in the emergency, he jumped off, as did also the fireman, just as the train entered upon the burning bridge, over which it rushed, fortunately with unabated speed, through a continuous flame that rose furiously above the height of the rail-road-cars. The wooden sleepers were on fire, and parts of the rails themselves were red-hot. The whole train, composed of a number of cars, passed safely over, and not a passenger was injured or scorched.

Strictly Confidential.

"My folks are going to the country to be gone all summer!" enthusiastically exclaimed a little girl yesterday as she met another on Cass avenue.

"Your pa must be awful rich," replied the second.

"Oh, no, he isn't, but if you'll never tell anybody I'll tell you something."

"I never will—hope to die if I do."

"Well, then, pa was telling ma that we'd all go out to Uncle John's. Ma she'll work for her board, pa will work in the saw mill, I'll pick berries and ride horse to plow corn, brother Tom will go round with a lightning-rod man, and while you folks are in the awful heat we'll be putting on airs and fixing over our old clothes for fall. Don't you tell, now, for ma is saying to everybody that she must have the country air to restore her shattered nerves."—Detroit Free Press.

A New Way of Raising the Wind.

Two gamblers were in Leavenworth, Kan., several years ago, with about $50 in their pockets. They desired to get money enough to go to California. They went to separate hotels. One registered as a physician, and advertised a remedy for cholera. The other put up a large quantity of yeast powders into sample packages, with a little croton oil in each, and hired a boy to distribute them. Soon family after family, affected by the croton oil, felt what they believed were symptoms of cholera. The sale of the cholera remedy was enormous, and the gamblers were enabled to go to California. They now tell the story through the Virginia City Enterprise.

Killed in his Sick-Bed by Lightning.

In the rainstorm of Thursday evening a bolt of lightning struck the house of Mr. Edgar L. Morrison, who keeps a grocery in a small two-story frame house in Douglass street, near Schenectady avenue, Brooklyn. Some of the family were just beginning their supper in a back room on the first floor, while Mrs. Morrison, with a young friend of the family, was watching beside the sick-bed of her son, Benjamin F. Morrison, aged 26, a clerk, who had been confined to the little low room over an extension of the house with consumption in its final stages. His mother sat by the table a few feet from the bed and a lighted lamp was beside her. The young man was speaking to the visitor when suddenly there came a sharp crack and the blaze of lightning was in the room. The bolt struck the tumble-down chimney in the center of the roof, just over the room where Benjamin Morrison lay, ran down the chimney, knocked out the tin covering which was plugged tightly in the stovepipe hole, burst through the wall, carrying away the plaster on both sides of the partition; jumped down to the baseboard, and ripped and splintered it. Another arm of it followed the chimney to the floor below, leaped to the table where four persons were at supper, turned over the dishes and blackened the food, and then passed away. It did not set fire to anything, but it scorched the laths where the plastering was torn off, and burned the baseboard. Mrs. Morrison was thrown from her seat in her son's bedroom against the wall, down which the lightning ran. The lamp was extinguished and overturned, and the hat of the young visitor was blown from her head. Mrs. Morrison says she was completely dazed at first, and thought that the roof had fallen. On relighting the lamp, she found that her son had been killed. She looked in vain, though, for any mark which the lightning had made. The body was not the least bit discolored, and he seemed to have fallen asleep. The lightning did not touch his bed, but ran along the baseboard by the side of it. The meal of those who were at the table was rendered unfit to eat. It smelled strongly of burned gunpowder. They felt an electric shock as the lightning flashed by, but beyond this they not disturbed.—New York Sun.

Queen Victoria's Wealth.

What Queen Victoria leaves behind her will never be known, because the wills of sovereigns are not proved, but those who have carefully considered the subject are of opinion that she must, since the Prince Consort's death, have saved at the very least £100,000 a year. Not only has she lived so quietly that a large proportion of her £385,000 a year public income must be saved, but it is to be remembered that Mr. Nield left her £500,000, which, at 4 per cent., would give her £20,000 a year, and she receives £43,000 from her Duchy of Lancaster. The crown-lands, given up to the country in lieu of a parliamentary annual grant, have of late years been so ably and economically managed that their revenue covers the royal allowance, and these crown lands were as much the property of the sovereign as the lands of the Duke of Devonshire, or any other landholder, are his. If the country choose to make the most of these lands by cutting up, say, the New Forest, and selling in lots, and adopting a similar plan with other outlying possessions of the crown, it would make money out of the royal family. The revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall has risen from £22,000 in 1824 to £75,000, and increases annually about £3,000, so that the next Prince of Wales will probably be independent of a parliamentary grant. Queen Victoria is probably saving with a view of rendering her family as independent as the wealth of the Duke de Penthièvre rendered the house of Orleans, and made Louis Philippe, in consequence, the cheapest of French kings.—Washington Capital.

A Boy in Love.

The following letter, from a boy to a woman nearly twice as old as he, was made public in a Virginia City (Nev.) court: "I want you to guess who this is from he who wrote this loves you from his very heart you know him very well his name is D. A. A. If you guess who it is you touch him on the back and he will bow to you he is a boy not a man, but if you are sure of it you can write me a letter I heard you say that I just suited your ideas and you just suit mine and if you will wait for me I will try to make you happy but if you say No you will make me unhappy for life for I love you as hard as any boy ever loved a girl. you may be older than me but I love you all the same dont show this to any one for god sake."

The War Against Disease.

The war waged against disease by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters goes bravely on. Dispatches are constantly received from the cured indicating the decisive nature of the advantages obtained by the great botanic cordial over its formidable adversary. Malarial fevers, constipation, torpidity of the liver and kidneys, general debility, nervousness and rheumatic ailments invariably yield to this conqueror and preventive of disease. For the infirmities incident to the decline of life it is also an excellent specific. It hastens convalescence and repairs the ravages of ill-health by facilitating the conversion of food into blood of a rich and nourishing quality. The appetite is improved by it, and, in cases of nervous disease, it tranquilizes that great sensorium, the brain, far more effectually than any mineral sedative.

Wilhoft's Fever and Ague Tonic.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. G. R. Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

THE SUN.

1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.

The price of the Daily SUN is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.

The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages of 56 broad columns, is furnished at $1 a year, postpaid.

Special Notice.—In order to introduce The Sun more widely to the public, we will send The Weekly edition for the remainder of the year, to July 1st, 1877, postpaid, for Half a Dollar. Try it.

Address THE SUN, N. Y. City.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer, to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccos, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS.

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so low that now they are as cheap as before the war. We have a good Ten at 25 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 60 and 90 cents.

Best Gunpowder 90c	Second quality 25 and 40 c.
Second best Gunpowder 40 and 60c	Imperial Best 60c and 90c.
Young Hyson 70c and 90c.	Second quality Imperial 25 and 40c.

Japan Uncolored, we have a good Tea at 40c. It is pronounced equal to any 80c tea sold elsewhere. The very best Japan 75c, and English Breakfast, the very best, 85 c. It never sell under $1.25 at other places,

A Few Words of Wisdom.

For all who are seeking new homes in the West. If you are going to change your location, by all means you should keep on about the same latitude as where you formerly lived for in this way you will escape the severe climatic changes in the weather incident to the extreme North or South, having none of these things to contend with, yourself and family are healthy and you become a producer at once, consequently soon independent; on the other hand should you listen to the many glowing accounts of the sunny South, or the mild climate of the North, and thus be induced to try your fortunes there, you will find the reality is not all your fancy painted it. If you go South it usually takes about two years to get acclimated to the climate, during which time, not being able to work, yourself and family are consumers, besides being constantly exposed to the malarial fevers which abound there, and the experience of many is that they return discouraged, leaving not a few loved ones beneath the sod in the sunny South. Therefore, in going West keep on about the same latitude which will insure health and happiness. There are most excellent lands in Northern Missouri on the line of the Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. and in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, "just as cheap and good as the sun ever shown upon," why not accept a certainty rather than run the risk of losing all? Through day and sleeping cars are run from Toledo, Ohio, via the Wabash R'y and Quincy to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas city, and from Chicago via Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., whereby all arre furnished firstclass accomodations.

A THING OF BEAUTY.

Indeed and a Joy Forever, is the New and Superb Edition of the Rocky Mountain Tourist.

So remarkably large has been the demand for the now widely noted work the Rocky Mountain Tourist that an entirely new edition has been necessitated, and is just ready for issue. While the first edition was an elegant thing, the second edition is really superb, and the Rocky Mountain Tourist in its new form, royal octavo, thirty-two pages, printed on the finest super-sized, calender paper, handsomely bound with engraved cover is without the slightest question the richest and most attractive book of the description ever issued. All who contemplate a trip through the garden of the continent, southwestern Kansas, to Alps of America, the Rocky Mountains, will commit the gravest mistake by starting before securing the Tourist, San Juan Guide and accompanying maps. Simply the mere request by postal card or letter addressed to T. J. Anderson, Topeka, Kansas, will insure, by return mail, absolutely free, the receipt of these indispensible auxiliaries to travel in the Great West.

THE CROSS AND THE CRESCENT.

The American people are distant, yet most deeply-interested spectators of the desperate struggle now in progress, between the Muscovite and the Turk. The vast array of forces on either side, the character of the combatants, the relentless, obstinate courage of the Russian, the fanatic valor of the Turk, the complication of interests which seem destined to involve all Europe in the strife, and the effect which such a war is likely to have upon the agricultural and industrial pursuits of this country, are points which give to this contest a deep and absorbing interest.

And yet, it is a fact that the mass of Americans are almost wholly without any definite knowledge of the regions most directly and primarily concerned in this war. To most readers of our newspapers, the news from the seat of war is in a large degree uninteligible, from lack of information as to those people and countries. Moreover, the demand for this information has developed the fact that there is not extant any book giving what is wanted, in reliable and popular form.

We are glad, therefore, to receive from the well-known publishing firm of Hubbard Bro. advance sheet of a forthcoming volume, entitled "The Cross and the Crescent; or, Russia and Turkey, and the countries adjacent." It is from the pen of the well-known historian, Dr. L. P. Brockett, and gives a full and complete description of the countries bordering on the Black Sea, the Danube, the Euphrates and the Tigris; including their Extent, Physical and Political Gerography; their History, with all is Varied and Thrilling Incidents; the Religion, Customs, habits, manners, and character of each Nationality; their Military, Naval and Financial Resources; the cause and influences which led to this and former wars, and a full and clear explanation of the complications which are driving the Nations of Western Europe into participation in it; the Massacre in Bulgaria; the oppression and cruelty which have goaded other Provinces and Tributary States into Insurrection, and the Despotic Sway of the Russian Government, all depicted with great Vividness and force. It also contains Biographical Sketches of all the Prominent Actors in the war now in progress, Monarchs, Rulers, Statesmen, and Generals, with portraits of many of them.

Aside from its relation to passing events, this is a most valuable and richly interesting volume. The brilliant, bloody, and eventful history of these nations, the character of their governments, the peculiarities of the people, their religious beliefs, their social customs, habits and manner of life, present a subject full of novelty and instruction, and treated by so able and brilliant an author as Dr Brockett, would at any time attract wide attention; but coming as it does, in response to an urgent demand for just the information here given, it will everywhere meet with an eager reception, and prove to be the most important publication of the year.

Notes and Items Of Early Times.

BY MAJOR M'FADEN.

The Indians were encamped on the Tippecanoe, about a mile above Wason's old ford, and near where Mr. Frayne now lives. It was a splendid place for a camp, at a big bend in the river, with steep banks on one side and low on the other, near a very deep hole with riffles or rapids above and below, with plenty of good timber, fish and game. It was in October, 1809—Indian summer—and very warm for the time of year. I found the Indians fishing and laying in their winter's supply. As there were no dams in the river then, there were thousands of fish where there are none now, and you could catch them in almost any manner, by spearing, bows and arrows, grabbing them, etc., but the best time, as I was informed by the Indians, is in the spring, when they come up in great crowds, filling the river in the shallow places. The noses of some are either worn or battered off, eyes out, some with their noses turned or twisted to the right or left, which gives them a very comical appearance, and is caused, the Indians say, by the fish battling with rocks, swift currents and riffles in coming up. These maimed fish are generally at the head of large bands, on account of which the Indians call them mi-u-ties, or chiefs. The Indians then build a dam across the river, in which they leave places to insert baskets or nets of wicker work. These baskets are generally from eight to twelve feet in length, and three or four feet in diameter. The end at which the fish enter is made with twigs, in the form of an entrance to a wire mouse trap. When the baskets are full they either take them to the shore and empty the fish out, or take them out at a door in the top and cary them to the shore in their canoes, which are convenient. They had caught a large lot of fish, mostly by spearing them after night. They had pike three or four feet long; catfish weighing from fifteen to twenty pounds, enormous buffalo fish that would weigh from thirty to forty pounds, and some fine bass and salmon. Eels were plenty then. They were busy in cutting up the larger ones in strips and drying them on scaffolds in the sun, or smoking them, and when dried they looked like pieces of old clapboards. They lay them away until the cold winter comes, when game is scarce. You might say they had cords of fish cured in that manner.

I have said something to you before about special providence, and I will now give you the strongest case I ever came across. It is in reference to the salmon of the Columbia river, and I will give it to you in the exact language, taken from Wilkeson's Notes on Puget Sound; page 26, as follows:

"McLean, a noted factor of the Hudson Bay Company, who lived for years between the Rocky mountains and the Pacific says: The salmon ascend Frazer's river and its tributaries from the Pacific in immense shoals, proceeding toward the source of the streams until stopped by shallow water. Having deposited their spawn, their dead bodies are seen floating down the current by thousands. Few of them ever return to the sea, and in consequence of the fish perishing in this manner they fail in this quarter every fouth year. Subsequently he tells a very queer thing—nay, I take to myself rebuke for this language wanting in reverence for the Providence which all over the globe provides food for the creatures the Creator has made. Mr. McLean says: 'I have already observed that the salmon fails every fourth year, and the natives would consequently, be reduced to the utmost distress did not the goodness of God furnish them with a substitute. Rabbits are sent to supply the place of the salmon, and, singular as it may appear, these animals increase in number as the salmon decrese, until they swarm all over the country. When the salmon return they gradually disappear, being destroyed or driven away by their greatest enemy, the lynx, which first appear in smaller, then in greater numbers, both they and their prey disappering together."

Or, in other words, for three years, plenty of salmon and no rabbits or lynx; the fourth year no salmon, but plenty of rabbits and lynx, and then dissappear as the salmon come round again. Rather a strong case, you will say, but I have got the book and any body can read it for himself.

The first night it was very warm and I laid out under a tree. In the night I was waked up by a grand stampede among the Indians, squaws and pappooses squealing and dogs barking. I jumped up, and one Indian said "Snakes in the camp." We got a light from a fire and looked around in the wigwam and found no snake. I went round on the outside and there did lay an enormous rattlesnake. One of the Indians got his gun and I held the light, and he shot his head off. It was the largest one I ever saw, and had seventeen rattles. He had been rattling around the wigwam and scared the squaws and papooses. They hung him up on a tree, and I slept the balance of the night on a log. In the morning one of the Indians took the snake and began to skin it. I ask him what he was going to do, and he said he was going to eat him. I protested, but he said it was good and better than eel, and actually did skewer it on a stick and roasted it by the fire and eat it. I told him if there was any more snake eating round there I would leave. He said he would not eat any more and did not, but we did not catch any more. I was surprised at his eating the snake, although my father had told me that he had seen Indians eat rattlesnakes. While I am on the subject of snakes, I will say that when I went that morning to wash in the river, I found a water snake that had got his just dues. He had undertaken to swallow a catfish head foremost. He had got him part of the way down and the catfish's stickers had worked through on each side of the snake and he had choken to death on catfish.

That day was very warm, and some time through the day, while I was helping to cut up and dry fish, and making myself generally useful about the camp, the dogs barked and looking around saw a little big fat Indian on a pony. The Indian and pony were fairly given out. Come to find out it was Kilkomic, from the Mississinawa, come over on a visit, and although he was a Miami, he seemed to be a kind of a forty-second cousin to my Indians. He could talk but very little English, and was the funniest looking fellow I ever saw. He was short, round and put up like a tub, and loked like he would weigh three hundred pounds. Years after I was informed that he had increased in weight to four hundred pounds, and if he is not dead still live on the Mississinawa. As the weather was very warm he suffered a great deal, and could hardly breathe, and would lay for hours in the Tippecanoe river cooling off, and the little turtles, minows and crawfish would play hide and go seek around his toes. One day while he was in the river I heard him hallowing loudly, and ran down and found that a large snapping turtle had him by the big toe, trying to swallow him. The turtle held on, and I had hard work to make him let go. After that Kilkomic did not lay in the river any more, but we would set him up on the bank of the river and pour water on him to cool him off. A short distance above us was an otter slide. Otters find a bank ten, fifteen or twenty feet high, of clay or other smooth earth, sloped off, which becomes as slick as glass. The otters take turn about in sliding from the top down into the water, like a lot of boys diving, and have lots of fun. I have watched them for hours, and seen them fairly laugh as they enjoyed it so much. One day I took Kilkomic up to see it, and when at the top he got most too close, and slipped, fell and slid down the slide like an otter. As the water was deep I jumped in after him. He came up and blowed like a porpoise. He could swim, but as the bank was so steep he could not get up, we had to cross over to the other side. Kilkomic always had a kind of a notion that I had something to do with his sliding down, and that he was a victim of misplaced confidence in going to the otters slide with me. But I had not, as I would not injure him for anything, he was so jolly and good natured. When I first came one of the pappooses was sick and got worse, and we had quite a time doctoring it. They had it in a kind of bark cradle, fastened to a swinging limb, and the wind swung it to and fro. They wanted some Seneca snake root for medicine, which only grows on the prairie. I went after some and came in sight of the eagle's-nest. The eagles had an eye out for me, and I did not go any closer. That night they thought the pappoose was going to die, and were all up except me, and had a fire burning brightly. In the night I heard a commotion among the Indians, and one of them came to me and shook me and said, "good, good pappoose all right, good Spirit come, etc." I jumped up, and lo and behold there was the great white owl that had watched by the dead Indian, and came to me when the wolves had me up a tree, sitting close by. The Indians were happy, and had a grand medicine dance. The owl quietly looked on and seemingly enjoyed it as much as anybody, and then left again "as other friends had laft before." The next morning the little Indian was better and soon got well, and from that day to this I am a believer in good and bad spirits. On the next day we started for Lake Manitou for more fish, with Indians, squaws, little Indians, ponies and dogs, leaving an old Indian, Kilgomic, a squaw and pappoose to keep camp. We stayed three or four days at the lake. The incidents pertaining thereto, I will relate to you again.

Robert Dale Owen's Last "Seance."

It was the writer's good fortune, while on a visit to a prominent Spiritualist in Brooklyn, N. Y., three weeks ago, to meet for the first time Robert Dale Owen, and to dwell under the same roof with him for several days. Once or twice a day circles would be held. Mr. Owen took a great interest and his many spirit friends crowded around him, anxious to send him greeting. So marked were the demonstrations that other members of the circle could not help becoming sensible that the gathering was one that awaited his coming into the other life. Among others who came was one who announced himself as "Comodore S., who had many a good time with him." Mr. Owen asked for the full name, and it was given—"Comodore Stringham." "That is very good," said Mr. Owen, "and I know to what he refers. Has he anything to say to me?" The reply came, "Yes, you can't row your boat much longer; it is time for you to go into the cabin." Mr. Owen seemed disposed to take the communications literally, and alluded to a boat at his home on Lake George; but the controle interrupted, saying; "No, that is not ment; you have sailed your course; the voyage is nearly ended, and you will soon come to an anchor. Then I shall meet you on the shore in company with your other friends and relatives who wait your coming. Do you understand?" Mr. Owen replied that he did, and for a time a feeling of sadness fell on the little company, for they knew that Mr. Owen was soon to exchange the corruptible for the incorruptible, and the mortal would put on immortality.

At a later seance, Mr. Owen was taking an afternoon rest on one of the warm summer days of early June, the intelligence was communicated that his mission was nearly ended, and before the autumn leaves fell he would be among those in the spirit whom he longed to meet; This was Mr. Owen's last sence, and a pleasant one it was.

Died—In Gaines, June 18, 1877, Samuel C. Lewis, aged 81 years.

Mr. Lewis was born in Poultney, Vt., June 8, 1796. He enlisted in the U. S. army in 1812; was in the battle of Plattsburgh, and at French Mills. In March, 1816, he settled in Gaines, on the same farm on which he lived sixty-one years.

Mr. Lewis was a man of great physical endurance, of remarkable order, and scrupulous exactness. He walked from Gaines to Poultney, Vt, twelve times, carrying his knapsack on his back. He braved the dangers, overcame the hardships, and endurnd the privations and burdens of pioneer life in this county, and saw the progressive changes of 61 years. The Erie canal grooved its way through his new farm; villages and church spires rose on all sides of him; the rail-track and telegraph lines throughout the State and the United States, all came into active operation under his observation. His remarkable order, regularity, and correctness of habits no doubt contributed greatly to his longevity and buoyancy of spirits. He said a few days before his death, "There has been but one morning in more than 30 years, that I have not been up and dressed before four o'clock." He lived to care for others — he did not know how to let others care for him.

Mr. Lewis was twice married, but for 36 years had journeyed alone. He leaves two sons and three daughters, for whom he discharged the duties of double parent until, in turn, they could make requital of filial love and devotion.

Mr. Lewis was never united with any religious denomination, but was a decided believer in the Christian doctrines. His views of religious ordinances and Church practices were with the Baptists, and his habit of prayer and study of the Bible has daily testified to his faith and devotion to Christ.

A grocer duing business on Michigan Grand avenue was yesterday asked to trust a colored man one day for a quart of strawberries.

"Can't do it; you'd never pay," he replied.

"I'll pay de money afore 8 o'clock in de mawning," earnestly continued the colored man.

"Perhaps you might, but I don't believe it. If you have no money now, how will you have any then?"

"Don't ax me, boss; I'll hab de cash, suah. Ize jes perspirin' to death fo' de want of strawberries."

"Does any one owe you?" asked the grocer.

"No, sah.'

"Then how do you expect to get any money?'

"Oh, de pay will be all right.'

"I guess not. You'll have to try some one else.'

"Boss, you hez pinned me right down to cold facts,' said the customer. "I wants strawberries, an' da hez got to come, an' derefore let me say dat I wasn't going out to-night to steal chickens, and sell 'em to get money.'

"Ah, you wasn't?"

"No, sah, caus I done pulled 'em in last night, and dey'll be sold to a butcher dis evenin'. Dat's de cold fact, mister, and now wrap up dem strawberries, and doan abuse my confidence."

THE WAR CALDRON.

Double, double, toils and troubles!
Burns the fire, the caldron bubbles!
And the hell-broth boiling over,
We its elements discover,
From the bottom springs to light
Brain of wily Muscovite,
And his hand, its gauntlet hid
In the skin of peaceful kid,
And his tongue of treachery
Cancered with a chronic lie,
And a flint-stone, shaped with art
To the semblance of a heart,
First stock, these, for broth of war,
Cooked in kitchen of the Czar.
Double, double, toils and troubles!
Burns the fire, the caldron bubbles!
Hissed from out that seething pot,
Comes a whisper, "Trust him not!
Murd'rous is the Islamite!
Slave, ere smitten, rise and smite!"
After pause, the same voice said, "Lo!
Islamite! the Christian foe
Plots thy death this very hour;
Strike for life, then! crush the Giaour!"

Double, double, toils and troubles!
[illegible]
Straightway from its lips of hell
Burst all sounds of mortal wail—
Shriek of women, infant's cry,
Strong man's shout of agony,
Welt'ring, then, upon a flood,
Mixed of lurid flame and blood,
[illegible] the doomed, the dead, the dying;
Lo! the chaser and the flying;
Lo! the headsman's grisly knife;
Lo! the shreds of comely life;
Awful eyes in dying stare;
Hands lopped off in act of prayer;
Limbless trunk and trunkless head;
Beauty's flower dishonored—
All adown the ghastly spate,
Whirled by murder, lust and hate,
Drunk with venom from the tongue
That [illegible]
Lo! the whisp'rer's handiwork,
Wrought on Christian and on Turk
Lo! th' ingredients, sleeping got,
By "Holy Russia" for the pot.

From its center casting up
Yankee cartridge, gun of Krupp;
Tons of Russian bounce and brag;
Half unfurled, the Prophet's flag;
Bulls and bears of every nation,
Goring, roaring, "Death! Damnation!"
Armies swarming 'cross the Pruth;
Not one little word of truth;
Then a lull, half hope, half fear,
And, with eyeballs red and blear,
Dozes forth sleek Ignatieff,
Whisp'ring, "War to us is grief;
But from oath there's no recoiling;
Czar has sworn—his blood is boiling—
His great name is compromised;
Then, our troops are mobilized.
We've borne the last that honor may,
In vain, my Lord. Oh, by the way,
Perhaps, if set in different key,
The beastly Turk might fail to see
The motif of that little song,
And take and sing it? Can't be wrong
To hoodwink kite in such a cause;
Well, sing he must, or lose his claws;
For, as I said, we're compromised,
And, zounds! your Lordship, mobilized."

BRIGHT & CO.

Rufus Lynde had just got comfortably settled in his new store. The window (it had only one, being—well, not a large store) was, after much thought and experimenting, arranged to his satisfaction—the bright-colored scarfs and cravats and neckties forming a sort of rainbow against the somber background of black ones; the packages of kid gloves, showing the tips of their many-hued fingers at the ends of their gilt and white wrappers; the gaudiest silk handkerchiefs flying like jolly young flags about the dozen or two other articles pertaining to the masculine wardrobe which, in admirable taste and order, were grouped below them—when his one clerk, who was also errand boy and several other things—in fact, engaged for "general utility," as they say in the dramatic profession—rushed in, with a face, every feature of which said, as plainly as words, "important news!"

Rufus looked at him a moment. "What is it, Fred?" he asked, at last.

"One hundred and thirty-six is taken," said Fred, pausing to give due effect to whatever further communication he had to make.

"Well?" queried his employer.

"Same business as ourn, gent's furnishing," continued Fred.

"Don't say 'ourn,' and don't say 'gents,'" said Rufus, in his surprise relapsing for a moment into his old role of teacher.

"Well, 'tis," said Fred, sulkily.

"The deuce it is?" exclaimed Rufus, resuming the character of the man of business, as he threw down the collars he had been assorting, and walked moodily to the door.

Before the next store, which had been vacant for a long time, stood a heavily laden cart. Two men were unloading and carrying in boxes and cases the same shape and size as those which had contained his own goods. A tall, rather rough looking young man was superintending, and a boy—evidently "general utility," like Fred—was darting hither and thither with a great pretense of rendering valuable assistance.

Rufus stepped out on the sidewalk, whistling carelessly and becoming at once very much interested in an over-worked horse that had fallen across the car track, but as the horse was helped to his feet by a sympathizing crowd he slowly turned and came in again, giving as he passed a comprehensive glance at the neighboring establishment.

Every pane in the window—it also had only one window—shone like an overgrown diamond, and in each corner was already placed, on a pretty walnut stand, a pot of ivy, the dark green vines climbing the gray-papered wall, while the scarlet flowers of a flourishing geranium smiled gayly in the sunshine.

A sign above the door, beside which the modest one bearing his name looked like a dwarf beside a giant, bore in great glittering letters the inscription, "Bright & Co."

"Going in for combining poetry with business. 'Twon't pay," said Rufus, referring to the ivy and geranium, as he slammed his own door behind him, and, seating himself at his desk, took up the morning paper, but not to read. He had lost all interest in the political situation; all he did was to gaze vacantly at the printed sheet and think about his rivals to be—"Bright & Co."

"This neighborhood won't support us both, that's sure," he said. "It must be a hand-to-hand fight until one is left victor. Too bad! to bad! Here's sister Fan nicely married, and mother as comfortable and happy as can be in her little rooms around the corner, and I thought I saw smooth sailing before me at last. After teaching school five long years away out West, besides keeping books for people and copying law documents far into the night, to say nothing of living like a miser all the time, on purpose to save money enough to start in business in my native city—to have a fellow set up right next door in the very same business, it's too much;" and Rufus shook his head at the frowning face that looked at him from the mirror that hung opposite.

A young face, and not a disagreeable one (on the contrary, quite an agreeable one when minus the scowl), surmounted by waving locks of bright auburn—some people call them red—and lighted by a pair of sparkling real blue eyes. Nose aquiline, mustache to match the hair, mouth large and not so very ugly, and the chin—well, perhaps if the chin had been a trifle more prominent, and the hair a shade less—auburn, Rufus might have possessed more hopefulness and a better temper.

That very evening—such is the inconsistency of man—in spite of his assertion that "that sort of thing didn't pay," Rufus bought at the nearest florist's two Madeira vines, a smilax, and a spicy carnation pink, and the next morning there they were sweetly blooming in his window, when the tall, rather rough-looking young man who had been overseeing the carmen the day before came briskly in.

"Mr. Lynde?" said he.

Rufus bowed stiffly.

"Called to see if you'd let me take a look at the arrangement of your window from the inside—capital effect outside. How do you manage? I don't know much about such things myself."

"What cool impertinence!" thought Rufus. And then he said, in an icy manner and in an icy tone, "I'm afraid you won't be taught here, sir. It costs me time, thought and patience to produce the 'capital effect' of which you speak. You must use your own brains. Mine are not at your service."

"Oh! is that the way you feel?" said the young man with a chuckle. "Well, I guess Bright & Co. can do without you;" and he disappeared as suddenly as he came.

And apparently "Bright & Co." could, for in two or three hours the shop window of that enterprising firm burst upon the admiring gaze of the passer-by like a whole garden of flowers.

Such a delicate mingling of shades and skillful combination of colors had never been in a shop window before—at least not in that avenue. Dark purple scarfs and ribbons prettily intwined with those of pale yellow; smoking caps gay in crimsons and golds, and blues and puffs, and scarlets and greens; bows of every hue, looking like a flock of gigantic butterflies clinging to a carpet of dark brown velvet; beautifully embroidered slippers; silken and satin watch fobs of many fantastic shapes; pipeholders quaint and graceful in design, and fifty other things Rufus had never thought of, "but which women will be just fools enough to buy and give to men," he said to himself, bitterly—shone from his neighbor's window.

Poor fellow! That gorgeous window completely eclipsed his own, and he saw, with a heartache, the people pass his door day after day and enter the more attractive store of Bright & Co.

A week went by, during which Mr. Lynde refused the loan of a hammer—they had mislaid theirs—to his neighbors, kicked their cat (it was a very gentle kick, and intended more for a hint than anything else) when she chased a flying rat into his store and under his counter, and Fred had a rough and tumble fight with the boy, "'cause he swept all the dirt of his own sidewalk on to ourn."

Then, one uncommonly bright and pleasant Monday morning, as Rufus, refreshed by the Sabbath rest, was coming down the street, humming an old hymn tune which his mother—good old Methodist—was fond of singing, and happily forgetful for the moment of all life's cares and vexations, his eye was caught by an unusual glare at the very top of "Bright & Co.'s" building. A mammoth sign had been placed there, calling attention in enormously fat letters of the guiltiest gilt—large enough to be seen at least half a mile away—to the business of that wonderfully and aggravatingly go-ahead firm; and that sign trespassed at least two inches on his own premises.

Rufus ceased humming, scowled, quickened his steps, entered his store, seated himself at his desk, flung his hat on the floor, ran his fingers through his sanguinary locks until they stood up like an aureole around his head, seized pen, paper and ink and dashed off the following note:

"Mr. Lynde's compliments to Bright & Co., and begs to call their attention to the fact that their last and biggest sign exceeds the limits allowed them by law."

This, with a snort of delight, as a war-horse that scenteth the battle afar, did Fred receive and hasten to deliver next door, to return with answer, equally concise, written in a large, bold, but rather scrawley hand:

"Bright & Co. are sorry that the sign-maker should have made such a mistake; but unless Mr. Lynde wishes to put up a similar sign, they are at a loss to see how so slight an infringement can interfere with him."

"Oh, indeed!" said Rufus, his face almost as fiery as his hair. "What remarkable coolness the fellow has! But I'll let him see he can't completely overshadow his humble neighbor," and forthwith dispatched another note:

"Mr. Lynde demands the instant removal of the before-mentioned sign, or Mr. Lynde's lawyer will wait on Bright & Co. this afternoon."

To which came the short but pertinent reply:

"Mr. Lynde's lawyer may wait on Bright & Co. as soon as Mr. Lynde chooses."

But it happened that Rufus couldn't get away from the store that day. Some great festivity, to take place that evening in the vicinity, sent all the boys and young men in search of masculine necessities and adornments, and the overflow from Bright & Co.'s alone was sufficient to keep Rufus and his only assistant extremely busy. But as soon as night had fairly set in and the rush was over, he sent Fred, a delighted messenger—with a communication to a young lawyer friend, and, with resolution and defiance written on his brow, and hands firmly clasped behind him, he began slowly pacing backward and forward, his determination to fight it out with his neighbor growing stronger and stronger every moment; for, "in the first place, it was downright shabby to set up in the very same line right next door," he repeated for the twentieth time. "I couldn't and wouldn't have done it; but, no doubt, this Bright is some selfish, grasping, cold-hearted, unpleasant fellow, not caring who he shoulders out of the way as long as he—" when suddenly the door flew open, and the roundest, plumpest, prettiest lot of a woman flew in.

She wore a dainty white apron, with a bewitching bib and two charming pockets, and the pockets were adorned with scarlet bows, and the bib had a bit of scarlet geraniums pinned at the left corner, and a saucy small hat, turned up on one side and trimmed with scarlet berries and green leaves, was perched insecurely on the top of her satin-smooth black head.

"Mr. Lynde!" said she, in a voice that implied "I'm not to be contradicted under any circumstances whatever," as she confronted Rufus.

Rufus replied, "At your service," with a smile. He'd have been more than mortal if he could have looked at that bright face, with its frank, fearless gray eyes, cunning pug nose, dear little mouth, and general air of cheerful independence, without smiling.

"I am Bright & Co."

"And rightly named," flashed through Lynde's mind; and then his face betrayed the great astonishment he felt, but he bowed and said nothing.

"You look surprised," said the little woman.

"I am," said Rufus. "I thought—I mean I was sure—that is, supposed—"

"No matter what you supposed," interrupted "Bright & Co." in a manner that in anyone else would have been rude, but in her was decidedly charming. "I'm Bright—and Co., and Co., and I want to know why, in the name of pins and needles, you're so awful hateful about that sign? It can't hurt your house—if it is yours—or you, extending only that far" (holding out two tiny forefingers, with nails like wee pink shells, about half an inch from each other) "beyond my house—it is my house—and you know, if you have one grain of common sense, it can't."

She paused, but Rufus said never a word.

"I suppose," the little woman went on, shaking her pretty head so emphatically that the saucy hat nearly slipped off, just hanging on her back hair in a manner that suggested to Rufus the days of his boyhood and the "Sailor's Hornpipe," "you think I have injured your business. If I have, I didn't mean to. The building next door was left to me by an old aunt, and the store was stocked from the wholesale establishment of an old uncle. Now, I couldn't set up a millinery shop or a flower store, or a confectionery with shirts and socks, and collars, and cravats and suspenders—and such things—could I?"

"Of course not," replied Rufus. "I see no way in which they could be converted into bonnets, bouquets, or candy."

"Just so," said Bright & Co., putting her right hand into her pocket and drumming softly on the counter with the fingers of her left. "I took the house and thanked my lucky stars and my auntie; and I took the goods and thanked my lucky stars again and my uncle. I placed 'Bright' over the door without any 'Miss,' (Rufus could not explain for the life of him why he was so relieved to find it wasn't 'Mrs.,') "or Christian name, because it looks more business-like, and I added the 'Co.' because it sounds well, and my small brother (the one your Fred tried to thrash the other day) is my general assistant, and my big cousin (to whom you refused to look at your window) helps me in every way he can, though that isn't much, because he has his own business to attend to—"

"Glad of it," thought Rufus. "And I have a pair of lovely twin sisters only 6 years old, and a dear mother and grandmother to take care of—and oh! how can you be so hateful about that sign?"

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Rufus, running his fingers wildly through his red—that is, his auburn—curls, and causing the aureole to rise again. "Don't say another word about it. Cover the whole of your house and mine also—though it isn't mine; there, too, you have the advantage of me, as you have in anything else—with signs if you will. I can make a living for my mother and myself somewhere else, if not here. I have no large family depending on me, like 'Bright & Co.'"

"Oh, dear, no, Mr. Lynde, that wouldn't please me at all," said the little woman; "the 'somewhere else,' you know. Stay right here. There'll be room for us both after a while, I'm sure of it."

Rufus looked into the rosy, earnest face with an almost lover-like smile, as Fred burst into the store shouting, "The lawyer says come to his office at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, and he'll see that the old sign comes down in a jiffy."

"Oh, you wicked boy!" said Bright & Co.

"Never mind that," said Rufus. "I give you my word that the sign shall remain just where it is;" and seizing his hat he escorted her to the door, leaving Fred in the act of executing a break-down, illustrative of extreme astonishment, but too much astonished to whistle an accompaniment.

And the sign didn't come down—that is, it did eventually, but not until the next May, and then another, still larger, and stretching twice the distance, took its place.

"Lynde, Bright & Co.," the new sign reads, and the two small stores are turned into one large one, and "Rufus Lynde" and "Bright & Co." are partners for life.

A Disastrous Young Woman.

As an instance of what hot temper and rash action can accomplish to ruin a life, an affair that lately occurred at Sharon, Pa., is one of the best illustrations. A young lady, Miss Kate McGilvery, was out driving alone, and desired to get ahead of a wagon. She called out to the driver to turn aside so that she could pass. He was a deaf, infirm old man named Bell, and at first did not hear what she said, but after a second or third call did as requested. Misunderstanding Mr. Bell's delay, the young lady on her arrival at home, told her father that the old man had tried to frighten her horse. Mr. McGilvery started down town to find Mr. Bell. He met him in front of a store, and, without warning, knocked him through the window, cutting his head badly, though not seriously. Mr. Bell was removed to his residence, and his son Richard was so maddened by his father's condition that he determined to punish his assailant. He found him in front of the very store where the first assault was made, and, picking up a two-pound brass weight, hurled it at Mr. McGilvery's head, fracturing the skull. The wounded man died in a few hours. Miss Kate, the innocent cause of all the trouble, has lost her reason, and is now a raving maniac.

AMERICAN ARMS.

Remarkable Superiority of the Munitions of War of the United States.

[New York Cor. Chicago Times.]

The past few years have developed a great trade in American munitions of war. Our rifles were first put into the hands of foreign troops at the close of the rebellion. The United States had on its hands two million stands of arms, which were offered for sale to foreign governments, and many of the Asiatic levies of the Porte are armed with the guns of Union soldiers. The French Government took 800,000 muskets, and the balance are still in the United States arsenals. All except 50,000 of these arms were muzzle-loaders, a style of weapon which, in the past few years, has been almost entirely superseded in the armies of first-class powers by the improved breech-loading rifle. Some time ago the Turkish Government gave the Winchester Arms Company a contract to furnish 600,000 rifles. The filling of this contract is now giving employment to 2,000 men a day at Providence, R. I. The Winchester Company has in the past two years sold over 100,000 rifles to other foreign governments, to say nothing of its sporting arms, of which it sends abroad about 2,000 a month. A large part of the Khedive's army is armed with the Remington rifle. This company has sent abroad about 1,000,000 stands of arms, of which Spain has taken 300,000; France, 200,000; Egypt, 100,000; Mexico, Central America, and a number of smaller powers 50,000 each. Even the Prussian needle-gun has been Americanized. The Prussian Government, impressed with the value of American improved methods of manufacturing arms, introduced complete machinery from the United States, and has established an American arsenal at Berlin for the manufacture of the famous needle-gun. The machine-made weapon was found to be so much superior to the old needle-gun in point of cheapness and finish that the Government has discarded its old stock, and the Prussian armies are now equipped with guns made by American machinery, under the supervision of American skilled labor. Russia, within the past two years, has purchased 500 Gatling guns, the American mitraileuse, every gun equal in effectiveness to 100 muskets. Thirty thousand of her troops are equipped with rifles made on the Berdan principle, at Colt's manufactory, Hartford. Her armies also carry 200,000 Smith & Wesson pistols, and orders for further supplies are now being filled.

American arms have won their way abroad, first by their comparative cheapness. It is only another illustration of the inevitable displacement of hand-made wares by the cheaper and more perfect products of machinery.

Not less vigorous has been the growth of our trade in ammunition. A large part of the cartridges in the ammunition stores of Russia were made at Bridgeport, Ct. The Russian Government has purchased from this one manufactory, in the last five years, some 40,000,000 cartridges. Early this spring Russia purchased 3,000 tons of Lake Superior copper, which was taken to Bridgeport and is now being turned into cartridges. It is stated that the Russian Government, three months ago, made contracts with powder firms of this country for 25,000 barrels of powder, and that some 6,000 barrels have already been shipped. The Turks have been equally active in the purchase of our munitions of war. Within the past four months three vessels, loaded with arms and ammunition, have sailed for Constantinople. Other foreign powers are also becoming liberal patrons of American dealers in ammunition.

Punishing Military Offenders in Turkey.

The battalions were drawn up in columns of companies along the slope outside their tents. The report was made in the usual fashion, and then, just before the sun disappeared over the snowy sierras toward Erzeroum, the imperial salute was rendered. The bands played a long-drawn-out, wailing kind of air, the regimental bugles sounded a flourish, the drums rolled, and simultaneously from the entire army burst the cry, "Long live my Padishah;" while the troops presented arms. This ceremony was repeated three times, and then the offenders were marched from their battalions to a point in front of the whole line. Each man placed himself on his hands and knees, and by him stood a soldier holding a stout stick about a yard long. On a signal from the commanding officer the bands struck up a lively air, and the men with the sticks commenced belaboring the culprits, keeping time to the music with the greatest regularity. At a distance they had the appearance of men beating dust out of carpets. After each had received about fifty blows on the back the music ceased, and the offenders returned to the ranks.—Armenian Cor. London News.

Volcanic Eruptions.

What a volcano can do the following record will show: In 1797 the crater of Tunguragua, one of the great peaks of the Andes, flung out torrents of mud, which dammed up rivers, opened new lakes, and in valleys 1,000 feet wide made deposits of 600 feet depth. The stream from Vesuvius, which, in 1737, passed through Torre del Greco, contained 33,600,000 cubic feet of solid matter; and in 1793, when Torre del Greco was destroyed a second time, the mass of lava amounted to 45,000,000 cubic feet. In 1769, Ætna poured forth a flood which covered eighty-four square miles of surface, and measured nearly 100,000,000 cubic feet. On this occasion the sand and scoria formed the Monte Rosini, near Nicholosa, a cone two miles in circumference and 4,000 feet high. The stream thrown out by Ætna, in 1810, was in motion at the rate of a yard a day for nine months after the eruption; and it is on record that the lava of the same mountain, after a terrible eruption, was not thoroughly cool and consolidated ten years after the event.

Silver Mines of Peru.

Peru contemplates an imitation in her silver mines of the Sutro tunnel, which for many years has been in the process of construction for the drainage of Comstock lode, in Nevada. The famous silver mines of Cerro de Pasaco, in Peru have, since their first discovery, yielded silver estimated at $500,000,000 in value. This enormous sum was realized in spite of the unfaithful working of crude systems that did not produce anything like the amount the ore was capable of yielding. The projected tunnel, by draining the mines, it is thought, will restore their value and enable the miners to reach the richest ores. The project is the plan of Mr. Henry Meiggs, the famous American railway builder of Peru, and, if it is pushed with the vigor characterizing his Peruvian railway construction, it is likely to be successful.

TORNADOES.

Concerning the Phenomena of Storms.

[From the Cincinnati Times.]

To the elaborate researches of Mr. Redfield, of New York, who published, in 1831, the first of a series of remarkable papers on the phenomena of storms, we owe our first full acquaintance with the origin and progress of these tornadoes or hurricanes of which we have had such an abundance this summer. Mr. Redfield's initial proposition that the hurricane is a progressive vertical whirlwind has been fully sustained, as also his auxiliary proposition that the progress of the vortex is in the line of a parabola, with the curve making away from the equator—a consequence, it is believed, of the revolution of the earth upon its axis.

But while these are "fixed facts," concerning the origin and cause comparatively little is positively known. It used to be common to attribute them to more occult forces, such as electricity, but the immense mechanical power stored up in the heat and vapor of moist air, as abundantly demonstrated by Espy, Peslin and Reye, is now believed sufficient to account for all the wonderful exhibitions of force in the gyratory hurricane. Whenever a lower stratum of warm, moist air is rapidly elevated above the sea level, which may be by various causes, there at once occurs an influx of air from all sides, and the formation of the whirl commences. Its subsequent development depends upon the supply of moist air, and the size of the original vacuum, and, once fairly whirling, it sets out upon its triumphal parabolic (and diabolic) tour.

The velocity of the wind (which must not be confounded with the progress of the storm) in these hurricanes is very difficult to get at. Mr. Redfield explains that over and above the average velocity of the wind, come occasional gusts of extraordinary speed and power. It is these gusts which do the mischief, and their velocity has rarely, if ever, been actually gauged. A velocity of 600 miles per hour has been estimated for some of them, though they should be estimated by the second rather than the hour, for the spasmodic increase in the rapidity of the whirl is of very brief duration. The velocity of one of these gusts in a British hurricane was figured at 130 miles the hour, and our own signal corps have recorded as high a speed as ninety miles, without claiming to have measured the fiercer whirls. They are at least fast enough for all practical purposes, when they break great trees like pipe-stems, and set houses, cattle and men flying over the country.

How Liquors Are Made.

At the recent meeting of the American Temperance Union in Cooper Institute, New York, Mr. Eli Johnson said: "Two years ago a prominent wine importer died in this city. Among his books no record of a single invoice of wine was found, but in his cellar machinery for making it was discovered. There are beer factories which can make beer in fifteen minutes, without a particle of hops or malt. I had heard that drummers of liquors no longer carried around samples of liquors. They took a box of drugs instead, from which to manufacture their wares. For a long time I tried to obtain a similar box, but failed to do so. Finally, a young physician committed suicide, induced by use of poisonous liquor. Among his effects was found one of these sample-cases. Here it is." The lecturer showed a black tin box, in which were several bottles containing colored liquids. He continued: "In this box were essential oils for making eight kinds of brandy, six of whisky, four of gin and two of wine. Each of these bottles is guaranteed to make twenty gallons of liquor. There is a house in this city that manufactures these articles. This bottle of oil made by them contains material for twenty gallons of French brandy. They also issue this book of directions," which he showed, "which specifies one hundred different oils for manufacturing drinks. All are made of different parts of alcohol, water, sugar, tartaric acid and other deleterious ingredients, together with the essential oil. The oil is the only change made in any of them. This bottle is guaranteed to make twenty gallons of port wine. It is what physicians order for sick people."

Judge Lynch.

—Allen county, Ky., was recently the scene of a terrible crime. A Miss Burton was missed from her home, and no tidings could be learned of her whereabouts for a week, when her dead body was found in a secluded spot not far from the residence of her brother-in-law, one George Stark, with two bullet-holes in her head and her body in an advanced stage of decomposition. Investigation pointed to a criminal intimacy between her and Stark, and to him as her murderer. He was arrested and placed under guard. While his preliminary examination was in progress, a body of men, relatives and friends of the young lady, took Stark from his guards at 12 o'clock at night and hung him. There seems to have been a good chance for his acquittal, as there was a lack of positive proof against him. Yet the citizens generally believe him guilty. Stark was of good family, and stood well heretofore.

Storrs' Story.

Emory Storrs has a new story. It runs thus: While Satan was tempting the Savior on the mount, there came, slinking along the slope, a Jew of the Hilton pattern, with his pockets full of bonds and securities, who, as soon as his eyes alighted on the twain, saw that some sort of a dicker was going on. He proceeded at once, and very softly, to where they stood, and "fetched up" immediately behind Satan, who was making his offer with every appearance of earnestness, and showing up his abstracts and title deeds. The Savior hesitated an instant. The Jew saw it. He tapped Satan on the shoulder, with "Shay, mishter, if de shendleman don'd accebt de brobosition, I vill."—Chicago Times.

GOING TO PRESS.

[illegible]

[William [illegible] Jones, foreman of the composing-room of the New Orleans Times, died recently. Just before his death he became conscious for a moment, and in that gleam, dwelling upon the habit of his life, he suddenly exclaimed: "The ads are all right, foreman; lock up the forms and let's go to press."]

Fellow-man, a moment linger,
On the dying printer's speech;
For it bears a weighty lesson,
One unheeding hearts to teach.

Day by day thou art composing
What a universe shall read;
Type to type are ceaseless setting,
As thou addest deed to deed.

Ah! how surely life's full columns,
When the hand that set them lies
Fixed in an unbroken stillness,
Their composer advertise.

Soon the forms are locked forever,
Changeless shall the impression be;
Scan thy proofs in time, O printer,
Thou art near eternity.

Are the "ads" all right, composer?
Art thou standing justified?
Ready now for death and judgment,
That unfolding [illegible]

So shalt thou, as night advances,
Greet th' unstaying Pressman's call;
Then await the morn eternal,
Publishing thy life to all.

An intoxicated German got on a Hudson river train at Kinderhook to go to Troy; and the Budget of that city says: "He threw his sachel down in a corner of the car, took a seat, and was soon asleep. On awaking he said he had left his baggage at Kinderhook, and asked the boy employed on the train what he should do to recover it. The latter, who had seen the German place his sachel in the corner, replied: 'You give me 30 cents and I'll telegraph to Kinderhook to have the depot master forward it by telegraph to Greenbush. It will reach there before we do.' The German paid the 30 cents and the boy departed, taking the sachel into another car. On reaching Greenbush the boy returned with the bag. 'Ah,' said the German, 'dot delegraff is vun grate dings. Here, dake anoder quorter, mein poy.'"

A Whistling Match.

A Hazardville correspondent tells of a novel wager recently won in that town. A party of men being together, one of them proposed a bet that Peter Toombs would whistle one hour, without stopping or speaking, and without repeating any tune. The proposal was taken by another of the party, who reduced the time to half an hour. Mr. Toombs accepted the amendment, the stakes were put up, and Mr. Toombs began his task. Beginning with "I Wont Go Home Till Morning," he ran through his repertoire, ending with "Paddle Your Own Canoe," in grand style. When the half hour was ended, not being blown, the whistler kept it up twenty minutes longer, winning, of course, the stakes.—Hartford Times.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Should your wheat be too rank and in danger of lodging, you may go over it with a long roller before it shoots into head. It will check the growth; the wheat will rise again. It has been known to save a crop.

A gallon of warm water poured on a pailful of walnut leaves will make a safe wash for horses and cattle, and save them the annoyance of flies. We recommend its use daily until we hear of something better.

M. Chatot recommends common salt as an antidote for mildew on vines. By sprinkling a handful of salt around the base of each vine, the effect, he says, was marvelous; and vines hitherto covered with this fungus grew luxuriantly, and had an abundance of grapes entirely free from oidium.—Paris paper.

When planted in very rich soil, tomatoes often produce much wood and little fruit. The best crop of tomatoes I ever saw was furnished by main stems as free from side growth as a walking-stick. All growths, except the leaves and flowers attached to the principal stem, had been pinched off as they appeared. —The Garden.

We are often recommended not to give manure water to grapevines until the fruit is swelling. I always apply it freely from the time when the young shoots are one inch or two inches long until the fruit is coloring, and I find it to do far more good in strengthening the shoots and produce before the bunches are in flower than at any subsequent period. —Northern Gardener.

Some of the best hay which we have found in the market this year has been that made from Nepaul barley the yield of which on some tule farms exceeds three tons to the acre. The greatest hay-producing district this year will include the reclaimed lands, and even lands partially reclaimed, the owners of which have no complaints to make about drought, northers, or heated terms.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Mr. Steele said if we could attract the birds to our orchards and fields, we would find a great help toward a successful victory over insect enemies. Among our best friends is the little wren. The blue jay he does not like for his destructive habits toward other birds, and he has waged a deadly war against them. Our common house cat is a very destructive enemy of birds, and should be watched carefully.—Michigan Farmer.

A Derry correspondent of the News-Letter writes as follows: "Don't kill the crows even though they raise a little corn on their own hook. A farmer in our town shot one last week, and found his crop literally packed with potato beetles. These are meaner than crows." We are informed that a Londonderry farmer is this year successfully fighting the bugs with a little army of guinea hens, and there are some who claim that ducks will earn an honest living destroying the bugs.—Mirror and Farmer.

Heading Down Newly-Planted Trees.—This subject has been written about for a thousand or more years, but a note now and then to a new planter of trees may be useful. In transplanting more or less of broken roots have to be removed; these must be balanced by the top which they have to support. However carefully we may transplant a tree there is a certain check given—a certain disorganization of the system takes place. When the roots and tops are shortened at the same time, the check administered is two-fold. We must, therefore, prune very carefully the top of a newly-planted tree and according to the injury given to the roots.

It is possible to raise calves without giving them fresh new milk, for with a little skimmed milk and hay tea they will thrive almost if not quite as well as upon the pure lacteal fluid. Fifty years ago Sir James Stewart Denham, of Scotland, instituted experiments in raising calves with hay tea, taking them from their mothers when three days old, and those experiments were eminently successful. Two pounds of hay were steeped in twenty quarts of water, and then boiled down one-half, and to this was added a quart of skimmed milk. In some instances molasses was added also to give sweetness, and the calves not only thrived upon this diet but preferred it to fresh milk.—Farmers' Union.

About the House.

How to Use Lard.—Lard for pastry may be used as hard as it can be cut with a knife, and will make far better paste than if let stand to warm. It needs only to be cut through the flour, not rubbed.

Poor Man's Cake.—One cupful of molasses, one of water, table-spoonful butter, table-spoonful ginger, one heaping teaspoonful saleratus, a little salt, flour enough for soft batter. Put in a square pan; bake quickly.

For Fruit Trees or Large Plants.—Boil one table-spoonful of borax in one pint of water, and, while warm, paint the stems of fruit trees or plants. This will destroy the green fungi, and prevent insect life from forming in the bark; it will also make the trees healthy.

To Take Mildew out of Linen.—Mix soft soap, fine starch and lemon juice to a paste, using equal parts. Spread it thickly on both sides of the cloth and lay on the grass, day and night, till the the spots disappear. This does not make the fabric tender, as many patent preparations for the purpose do.

To Disinfect Rooms.—The disinfection of a room is not complete unless the walls have been thoroughly cleansed. If they are papered, the paper must be removed and the surface beneath carefully scraped and washed. If the walls are painted, they should be washed with caustic soda. The ceiling should also be subjected to a similar treatment.—Scientific American.

Making Hair Grow.—If the head be perfectly bald, nothing will ever cause the hair to grow again. If the scalp be glossy, and no small hairs are discernible, the roots or follicles are dead; and you might as well cause an arm which has been amputated to grow again. However, if small hairs are to be seen, there is hope. Use the following every day, brush well, and bathe the bald spot three or four times a week with cold, soft water: Carbonate of ammonia, one drachm; tincture of cantharides, four drachms; bay rum, four ounces; castor oil, two ounces. Some elderly people often desire to keep their hair from turning gray. The following dye will effect this: Take the hulls of butternuts, say about four ounces, and infuse in a quart of water. Then add half an ounce of copperas. Apply with a soft brush every second or third day. This preparation is harmless, and I have reasons for believing has never been published. It is far better than those dyes made of nitrate of silver.—Cor. New York Tribune.

Destruction of Forests.

More and more attention seems to be given each year to the denudation of the land by removing the forests. That large masses of trees have a salutary climatic influence is generally acknowledged. In regions where forests are extensive the severe extremes of heat and cold are rarely experienced. The climatic influences of trees seem to make themselves felt under exactly those conditions where man most needs protection. In Northern Maine, where formerly there were immense and wide-extending forests of pine, spruce and hemlock, which have now vanished before the ax of the rapacious lumberman, the winters were not so severe as these now experienced, while the summers had few of those long heating and prostrating periods which are now of almost yearly occurrence.

In Europe great care is now being given to the preservation of old, and the creation of new forests. In Germany the question is taken up by the Government, and there are laws relating to the destruction of the trees and the growth of new forests. It has become necessary to enact new laws in order to prevent the almost total disappearance of woodland. In England vast forests are preserved as parts of the estates of the nobility, and there will be little danger of their disappearance as long as English wealth and pride remain as great and as strong as they are to-day. But sometimes an heir comes into possession of an incumbered estate—a condition brought on, perhaps, by his predecessors and perhaps by himself—and, to free this patrimony from vexations and pressing claims, he cuts down and sells the trees which had been the growth of centuries, and had become the pride of his ancestors.

In France great anxiety is felt to preserve the few forests which remain, and with characteristic zeal Frenchmen have studied the question of forest-growing, showing its influence on climate and soil. The changes produced by different kinds of trees have been studied and explained. Among the more interesting of these investigations are those relating to the pine and larch trees, each of which is a great promoter of fertility in the soil. It is claimed that the pine will grow on, and, in fact, naturally selects inferior soils, and soon raises them to a higher grade of fertility. Loose, sandy soil they render stable; compact, clayey soil they pulverise, and by the desquamation of their leaves cover it with a thick mat, which furnishes fertilizing properties, and retains the fallen moisture. In fact, they will create from mineral soil good alluvial land. The French point with grief to the almost desert wastes in the South of France, produced by the destruction of the forests, and demand protection for those woodland tracts which still remain. It is affirmed that sheep and goats are as destructive to forest growth as the woodman's ax, devouring and exterminating every shoot which would in time replace the trees which might be cut down. Horses and cattle do not seem to be endowed with those instincts which are so fatal to forest growth in the case of the other animals, and it is demanded that the goats and sheep shall be excluded from woodland pasturage, and that, if any animals are allowed to browse upon the tender shoots, it shall be only cattle and horses.—San Francisco Bulletin.

White-House Whitewash.

The following recipe, which is frequently inquired after, is given for the famous whitewash with which the Presidential mansion is adorned:

Take one-half bushel of nice unslacked lime, slack it with boiling water; cover it during the process to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer, and add to it a peck of salt, previously dissolved in warm water; three pounds of ground rice boiled to a thin paste; one-half pound Spanish whiting and one pound of clean glue which has been previously dissolved by soaking it well, and then hang it over a slow fire in a small kettle within a larger one filled with water. Add five gallons of hot water to the mixture, stir it well and let it stand a few days covered from dust. It should be put on hot, and for this purpose it can be kept in a kettle on a portable furnace. About a pint of this mixture will cover a yard upon the outside of a house, if properly applied. Fine or coarse brushes may be used according to the neatness of the job required. It answers as well as oil paint for wood, brick or stone, and is cheaper. It retains its brilliancy for many years. There is nothing of the kind that will compare with it, either for inside or out side work. Coloring matter may be added of any shade desirable except green, for which there is no material that can be used with lime. Spanish brown will make reddish pink when stirred in, more or less deep according to quantity. A delicate tinge of this is very pretty for inside walls. Finely pulverized common clay, well mixed with Spanish brown, makes a reddish stone color; yellow ochre stirred in makes a yellowish wash, but chrome goes further, and makes a color generally esteemed prettier. It is best to try experiments on a shingle and let it dry.

A Defendant's Poem to the Jury.

The Boston Herald says that a jury of the Superior Criminal Court, that city, retired to its room a few days since, and not being able to agree for some time went to dinner in charge of officers. While they were gone the anxious but humorous defendant, whose destinies were in the hands of the absent ones, penned the following:

Gentlemen of the jury—ye twelve men good and true—
I fear you're getting full at Young's while here I'm getting blue.
Did you agree not to agree until you got a feed?
And eat there when you had no greed or really had agreed?

Mourning in France.

As regards mourning, the French are far more sensible than are we. The rules of bowed shutters, and of wool and crape habiliments of the hue of outer darkness, donned for an indefinite length of time, would appear absurd to this peculiarly intelligent nation. Their rules on this head are extremely precise, each shade and style of mourning being severely regulated. A widow must wear mourning for two years. She must wear black woolen stuffs, with collars, cuffs and veil of crape, for one year; she must not crimp or frizz her hair, and she must wear a cap in the house during that period. At the end of one year she can wear black silk trimmed with black lace; this not very oppressive costume is de rigueur for six months. During the following six months, all shades of violet, gray and lilac, are permissible, after which, her two years mourning having expired, she can dress as she pleases. The mourning for a parent or a child is to be worn for one year: six months of crape and bombasine, three months of black silk and lace, and three months of grays and purples. For a grand-parent the rule is six months, and for a brother or sister four months, the half of which period only is to be passed in black stuff and crape. In deep mourning it is not considered proper to wear kid gloves, cloth gloves being considered appropriate, nor is any ornament, even of dulled jet or of Berlin iron admissible. When the head of a family dies, the servants are put in mourning as well as the relatives. Each servant receives from the heirs two complete toilets, one for every-day wear and one for Sundays. Children under 12 years of age are never put in mourning. Abstention from society or worldly pleasures is marked by the duration of the deep mourning only; that is to say, for one year after the death of a husband or a wife, six months after that of a child or parent, etc. It might seem, to our exaggerated American notions of mourning formalities, from the above rules that the French lacked affection as signally in all relations of life as they do in the marital one. Such, however, is not the case. The tie between parent and child is a peculiarly close and touching one among them. Not a lack of affection, but a plenitude of sense, has dictated the French regulations as regards mourning.—Appletons' Journal.

Killed by the Sting of a Bee.

A distressing event occurred at Lydney on Friday week, and was the subject of a Coroner's inquiry on the following day, viz., the death of Henry Larkham, Sen., a retired farmer, from the sting of a bee. It appeared from the evidence given before Mr. M. F. Carter, Divisional Coroner, that at about 4½ o'clock on the day named Mr. Larkham was in his son's garden, and, on passing in front of the beehives, received a sting upon the temple. The old gentleman at once returned to the house, and asked a young man named Lloyd to fetch the blue bag, which was done, and the liquid blue was applied. Lloyd likewise, at the request of Mr. Larkham, took an egg from his pocket which he had gathered from a nest. Upon sitting down in the yard, Mr. Larkham fainted, and was bathed with vinegar and water. This, however, proved a powerless restorative, death supervening within a quarter of an hour after the sting. Dr. Gimblett was called at the inquiry, and stated that he had been sent for, but deceased died before he could reach the house. He had since examined the body, and found a wound upon the right temple inflicted by a bee. This it was which caused death. Upon this testimony the jury returned their verdict.—Cardiff (Wale Mail.

French Chickens.

It is probable that few persons out of France are aware of the extent of what may be termed the "poultry industry" of that country. According to statistics given by one of the French papers, France supports at the present time no fewer than 40,000,000 hens, representing, at an estimated average of 2 francs 50 centimes each, 100,000,000 francs ($20,000,000). These 40,000,000 hens give birth annually to 100,000,000 chickens, of which it is found expedient to put aside 10,000,000 each year for product purposes. Accidents and disease again reduce the number of chickens destined for consumption to 80,000,000, which, putting their average value at 1 franc 50 centimes apiece, may be estimated as worth 120,000,000 francs ($24,000,000). To these figures must be added the further value due to capons and fat pullets, which may be stated as 6,000,000 francs.

Buffalo's city directory for 1877 has 48,298 names.

Appetite a Necessity.

Appetite is a necessity. Without it, sufficient food is not received into the stomach, either to nourish the system or to give the stimulus to the bowels which they require. Both these organs and the liver become torpid in consequence, and the blood grows poor in quality and quantity. Improve the appetite, therefore, and avoid such results. This is most effectually done with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a tonic appetizer and alterative without a peer. It gives not only an unwonted zest for food, but enables the stomach to digest and the system to assimilate it. Flatulence, heartburn, nausea, and every other concomitant of indigestion, are removed by it, as are also biliousness and constipation. Each nerve and fiber of the body is made to tingle with health by its use, and it is the leading remedy for despondency.

Trouble in the Household.

We would advise every one interested not to buy Yeast or Baking Powder, loose or in bulk. They are usually made by unskillful persons, and have frequently proven totally unfit for use. There is no guarantee or responsibility attached to loose powder. Dooley's Yeast Powder is always put up in cans, warranted full weight, and absolutely pure.

Thirty years' experience proves the Graefenberg Vegetable Pills to be the mildest and most effective medicine ever known for the complete cure of headache, biliousness, liver complaints, nervousness, fevers, and diseases of digestion. THE SUN.
1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.

The price of the Daily Sun is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.

The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages of 56 broad columns, is furnished at $1 a year, postpaid.

Special Notice.—In order to introduce The Sun more widely to the public, we will send The Weekly edition for the remainder of the year, to Jan. 1, 1878, postpaid, for Half a Dollar. Try it.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JULY 26, 1877.

County School Superintendents and Town Trustees—A Few General Observations with an Application.

Since among the varied interests of a prosperous county there is none that takes a higher rank than those pertaining to the common schools, there is no office in the gift of the people of a county which is attended with more important duties than that of school superintendent. He to, whose hands the important duties of this office are entrusted by the people, should be a man, of no ordinary endowments. He should be a man whose soul does not live in his pocketbook, and whose official aims are not circumscribed within the narrow limits of self. He should be a man combining with a liberal education, energy, executive ability, and sound judgment. He should be a man of pure motives, of exalted aims, and of broad culture. Moreover, it is all-important that he be a teacher, not in theory only, but also in practice; and his official prestige should be based upon years of successful experience in the practical work of the schoolroom. This last qualification is especially indispensible when he assumes to instruct his teachers in the science and art of their profession,—when he undertakes to carry on a normal school. The sphere of his official action should be far, far, above the influence of local bias, and no consideration should be able to tempt him to prostitute his high office to selfish and mercenary ends, however inadequate the compensation paid for his regular services may be.

It will not do for a county superintendent to be weak and vacillating in his official capacity, turning hither and thither with every change in the current of public opinion. Nor may he adopt the contemptible non committal policy whose design is to please everybody, no matter how widely they may differ upon all questions relating to the schools. He should have force of character sufficient to adopt the line of policy which he deems right and practicable, and having adopted it, to carry it out even in the face of opposition. He should be intent upon improving the schools rather than upon pleasing the people.

Concerning boards of school trustees in incorporated towns, it may be said, that in is not only their right but their duty to employ every legitimate means in their power to promote the efficiency and increase the patronage of their schools; nor is the school board of any particular town bound by any obligation to limit its action in any way in consideration of the school interests of any other town.

School boards differ greatly in point of general efficiency. Some are of such inferior worth that they consider their duties ended when they have bought the fuel, and employed a corps of cheap teachers for the year. Others, more energetic, and impelled by a lively interest in the progress of their schools, are constantly devising new means for raising them to a higher standard of excellence.

These differences and many others which we might enumerate we find abuntly exemplified in the school boards of the several towns of DeKalb county. We, of Auburn, had for a long time permitted ourselves to believe that in our own worthy board were combined all the virtues necessary to entitle it to the first place among the school boards of the county; but a recent new departure on the part of the school board of Waterloo has dispelled our conceit, and forced us, however reluctantly, too award the palm to them, and too conclude that our board is entirely too slow for the times. Conclusion ditto respecting the other school boards of the county.

Now we speak frankly and honestly when we say that we admire the tact in a school board which is quick to discover, and ready to utilize a tool in a county superintendent. But however heartily we may endorse such action on the part of a school board, we condemn without stint or qualification the county superintendent who does not scruple to sacrifice the dignity of his high office by becoming such a tool.

As these reflections pass through our mind we are forcibly reminded of the action of the school board of Waterloo, and that of the school superintendent of DeKalb county.

For some years past it has been the custom of the latter to carry on a school for teachers at Waterloo; and it affords a very pleasing reflection to remember that in carrying on these schools the magnanimous superintendent had no sordid, selfish interest at stake, but was moved wholly by the noble desire of bettering the condition of the teachers of the county! The teachers were to attend his school that they might be "lifted up" into a higher professional atmosphere. He wanted them to come; and to that end he employed all sorts of "winning ways" to "gather them in." We will not say that among other inducements he freely gave them to understand that inasmuch as he was examiner, his school afforded "peculiar" advantages to those teachers who, needing license, desired to prepare themselves for examination? It is easy to see what would be the effect of such a hint, whether expressed or implied. Very naturally there was a rush of persons wishing license to teach, and the school was large and flourishing. The "lifting" power of this school was something remarkable; it could take in boys and and girls fresh from the country schools, and in from six to eight weeks "lift" them to the dignity of teachers, and send them out equipped with license to teach in the public schools.

But the pernicious influence of this sort of thing upon the teachers and general school interests of the county was at length perceived and condemned as it deserved to be; and when the trustees met, in June, to elect a county superintendent, it was urged as an objection to the re-election of the incumbent. This objection, if we may credit the statement of reliable men, was only removed by a deliberate pledge, on the part of the incumbent, to the trustees, that he would do no more work of the kind. In striking contrast to this pledge is the announcement appearing in last week's "Waterloo Press," that "Prof. Barnes 'has been engaged' for the fall term, and he will have charge of the normal classes," &c. !! Our former acquaintance with the superintendent had not prepared us to see such an announcement under the circumstances. Perhaps we do not understand. Does the superintendent, by a ruse like that, hope to lead the trustees to think that the work which he has engaged to do is in any way different from that which he has done before? The mask is ingenious but altogether "too thin." Tear it off, brother Barnes, and stand out like a man. Be assured that in the end a quiet conscience will prove of more worth than shekels of silver and gold.

In conclusion we must say that we cannot express our admiration of the plan of this extraordinary arrangement. It is a kind of double back action affair, equally adapted to the ends of both parties interested. By means of it the shrewd schoolboard of Waterloo secures to the place the usual advantage of a large school of foreign pupils; while the county superintendent derives from it a sort of a mask under which he seems to hope he may be able to do without offense the very work which he pledged himself not to do. People, however, are not quite so easily deceived; and we feel tolerably safe in saying that those whose eyes are good enough to enable them to see the broadside of a barn at short range will be likely to understand the trick in all of its bearings.

OBSERVER.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

A full house responded to the call of the Reform Club, for a mass meeting on last Sunday evening. A delegation from Waterloo consisting of Messrs. R. M. Lockhart, Sinclair, Bidler, Shoner and Willis were present, and addressed the meeting. Abe. Reinoehl, Esq., of Garrett, led off in a spirited address of telling effect. Mr. R. is a young attorney of marked ability and having recently joined the ribbon band is giving the temperance cause his undivided attention. He will remain in town until Thursday evening. In his remarks at the temperance meeting last Sunday night, Mr. Sinclair, of Waterloo, took occasion to reprimand that class of people who signify a disposition to "straddle the fence" in the temperance cause.

We are indebted to Mr. L. J. Miller for the following statement of the amount of grain shipped from Corunna for the year commencing July 15th, 1876 and ending July 15th, 1877: Number of lbs. of wheat, 3,721,905; Oats, 867,905 lbs.; Corn, 40,720 lbs. It should be born in mind that the foregoing transaction in grain occurred in season, that the crops hand been pronounced a "total failure."

He was approached with the pledge and asked to sign. He replied with offended dignity that "he did not wish to be classed with drunkards." That man has wasted a lifetime at the shrine of bachus, and yet he does not consider himself a drunkard!

John Lipsitt, the egg packer, has 300,000 dozen eggs and 2,000 lbs. of butter on hand as the result of the strike. He can pickel eggs, "by dang," quoth John.

The strike has extended west of Toledo on the Lake Shore, and all trains have been abandoned except regular passenger trains. No. 1 and No. 4 will stop at all stations for the present.

Harvest is now over, and the work of the thresher has begun. At least twenty busnels to the acre will be the average in this part of the county.

Two car loads of new wheat have already been received at this station.

New wheat brought $1.27c. in this market yesterday.

The strikers at Fort Wayne seem directed by some discretion, and are not organizing a mob out of their members. As long as they do this they have a great advantage in the possession of the sympathy of of the people at large, which will prove more effective in the accomplishment of their object than mob violence.

At Butler.

W. W. Cole's mammoth circus and menagerie will exhibit at Butler on Saturday Aug. 4th. We do not know much personall about this organization, but we notice from other papers speaking very flatteringly of the menagerie and circus. One paper says: The collection of animals was both large and varied.

The species on exhibition are not often brought within the bounds of an iron cage and therefore were great curiosities to the beholder. Taken altogether, Cole's circus gave unbounded satisfaction, and of course had the canvass filled each time to overflowing. Everything about the exhibition is orderly and the attendants are obliging to even the fastidious inquirers who always go to circuses.

We had the pleasure of listening to a rendition of "Paul Pry," and the "Secret," by the Athenians at Garrett last Thursday evening at that place. We were agreeably surprised in a better representation than we expected. The ladies had their parts well committed, and rendered them with good effect. But the star of the evening was Mr. Chris. Taylor as Col Hardy. He played the austere, invincible old Colonel equally as good as we have seen it played in the best of troups. His make up was good, and his conception of the character, very life like. Mr Knoder played the colored "Thomas" very well, and was loudly applauded. Charley Follett, did the song and dance business to the delight of the boys. Charley is a good stepper and has few equals in the State.

RIOTERS RAMPANT

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.

MILLIONS OF PROPERTY DESTROYED.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

A strike of the employees of the great railroad lines of the country, took place last week, since which time horrible scenes have been enacted, especially at Baltimore and Pittsburg. We give the following condensed account of the affair.

The crisis of the railroad strike was reached at Pittsburg about 5 o'clock Saturday night, when the Philadelphia troops, who had been sent here to suppress the strikers, fired upon the crowd. The terribly fatal effect of the shots fired by the troops exasperated citizens as well as strikers, and in less than an hour thousands of working men from the rolling-mills, coal mines and various manufacturing establishments hurried to determined to have revenge on the troops and railway officials. It was stated that Gen. Pearson, commander of the sixth division of the State guards had directed the troops to fire before any resistance had been made, and the fact that many of those killed and wounded had gathered on the hillside merely as spectators served to increase the bitterness of the crowd. By 8 o'clock in the evening mobs were moving about the city in various directions,

BACKING STORES TO SECURE ARMS,

breaking into the armories of the military companies, and preparing themselves to execute the threats early expressed of massacreeing the entire Philadelphia command. By this time the military had withdrawn from the railroad crossing at Twenty-seventh street, where the first conflict took place, and were ordered to one of the round houses where they could find better protection. About ten o'clock in the evening a mob numbering several thousand had congregated about the round-house. They had previously captured the guns belonging to Hutchison's battery, a local organization, and planted them so as to command the round-house.

SEVERAL SOLID SHOTS WERE FIRED

at the building and a breach made in the walls, but when the infuriated mob attempted to rush into the building the military were ordered to fire. The volley of musketry which followed and the rumor that the Gatling guns of the command were being brought into requisition caused a panic, and the mob fled precipitately for several squares, the military meanwhile keeping up the fusilade. The rioters, however, were soon reassured, and as thousands were flocking to their assistance they returned to the attack. Finding it difficult to dislodge the military from the building

THEY RESOLVED TO BURN THEM OUT.

An order to this effect was issued, and it was carried into execution with a fiendish alacrity by the rioters. As a consequence of the blockade which had existed for two days the siding in the outer depot yards, as well as those extending eastward some three or four miles, were crowded with freight cars filled with grain, products and merchandise of all kinds, besides which a number of laden oil, coke and coal cars were piled up in the mass. While a portion of the mob surrounded the building in which the military had taken refuge, large bodies proceeded to and in a moment the huge volumes of black smoke which rolled upward, followed by lurid flames reaching out in every direction, told that the work of destruction had commenced. The sight of the flames seemed to literally craze the rioters, some of whom rushed wildly about with flaming torches in their hands applying them to the cars indiscriminately. An alarm way sounded and the department promptly responded, but the rioters, who had complete controle of the city, refused to permit them to make any effort to extinguish the flames. They kept their work, too, and when a lumber pile belonging to the citizens took fire, the rioters themselves turned in and helped to extinguish the flames and removed the lumber to a safe place.

TRAIN AFTER TRAIN

was fired by the infuriated crowd, but the cars were so far distant from the round-house that the heat did not seriously affect the military, although their position was one of peril. Finally, a large party of strikers captured a car filled with coke, which they ran from the Allegheny Valley railway track to a siding connecting with the Pennsylvania railroad. They then procured large quantities of petroleum oil and pouring it over the coke ignited the materials. In a very few moments the car was and it was then pushed along the tracks and forced against the round-house. The building was soon ignited and the soldiers were now compelled to prepare to fight their way out through the frenzied mass of humanity clamoring for their blood. The building did not burn as rapidly as was desired, and the mob, bent on revenge, rushed out the road and sent burning trains toward the doomed building.

A MASS OF FIRE

THE FLIGHT OF THE TROOPS.

From midnight until five o'clock this morning the main efforts of the crowd were directed to firing the buildings and cars, but about half an hour later the mob which had been besieging the military left for some unexplained reason. This afforded the troops, who were in actual

DANGER OF BEING ROASTED ALIVE,

an opportunity to emerge from the building, and they succeeded in reaching Liberty street in a very few moments. They quietly formed in line and marched up to Thirty-third street, and thence to Pennsylvania avenue and Butler street. Their objective point was the United States arsenal on Butler street, where they expected to obtain shelter. While turning into Butler street, however, the leaders of the mob had discovered their retreat and fully one thousand men, fully armed and supplied with ammunition, followed in pursuit. Some of the troops fired at the citizens, either accidently or intentionally, as they moved along, and this added fuel to

THE CRY FOR REVENGE.

When they reached the arsenal the commandant refused to admit them. He said he had but ten men and would be powerless to hold the place if the mob should attack it. He consented to take care of the wounded and they were accordingly carried into the hospitals. The main body of the troops continued their march out Butler street.

A FUSILADE BEING KEPT UP on them by the mob as they moved forward. The shots fired killed one of the soldiers before they reached the arsenal, and nearly opposite the cemetery gate, fully a mile above the arsenal, two others were killed and were left lying on the sidewalk. They continued their flight and crossed over to the north side of the Allegheny river, on the Sharpsburg bridge, the mob following them as rapidly as possible. After reaching the north side the troops scattered, and in this way the mob was divided into very small bodies. In the meantime the city was

IN A STATE OF ANARCHY.

Thousands who had not joined in the pursuit of the fleeing troops gathered about the burning buildings and trains and assisted in spreading the flames wherever they had not been applied. By 7 o'clock the fire had extended from Milevale station to Twentieth street and enveloped hundreds of cars, the extensive machineshops, two round houses, the depots and offices of the Union Transfer company, blacksmith-shops, store houses, and numerous buildings making up the terminal facilities of this mammoth corporation.

THE SCENES

transpiring on Liberty street, along the line of which the tracks of the railroads run, simply beggar description. While hundreds were engaged in firing the cars and making certain of the destruction of the valuable buildings at the outer depot, thousands of men, women, and children were engaged in pillaging the cars. Men armed with heavy sledges would break open the cars and then the contents would be thrown out and carried off by those bent on profiting by existing. The street was almost completely blockaded by persons laboring to cary off the plunder they had gathered together. In hundreds of instances wagons were pressed into the service to enable the thieves to get away with their goods. Mayor MaCarthy, early in the day endeavored to stop the pillage, but the handful of men at his command were unable to control the crowd who were desperate in their anxiety to secure goods. At one time the pillage was checked, but the mob fired the cars and then proceeded with the work of destruction. It is impossible to form any idea of

THE REIGN OF TERROR

THE AMOUNT OF GOODS STOLEN,

but hundreds of thousands will not cover the loss.

THE LOSS

here within the last twenty-four hours can only be estimated. Along the Pennsylvania railroad from the Union depot to East Liberty, the numerous tracks were filled with loaded cars.—These were burned from Milevale, Thirty-third street, to Thirteenth street, a distance of twenty blocks. It is estimated that two thousand cars loaded with oil, coal and all kinds of merchandise were totally destroyed. All these, together with locomotives, buildings and other property destroyed, swell the Pennsylvania railroad company's losses to an aggregate amount variously estimated from three to five millions.

THE STRIKE.

The formidable strike of the employes of the different lines of railroad throughout the country, causes grave apprehensions, and will certainly add to the general depression, which hangs like a pall over the country. It is hard to determine where the responsibility lies for the wanton destruction of property that has taken place since its inauguration a few days ago. That railroad organizations are to some extent relentless and oppressive in their administrations no one can deny, yet they have rights which the people are bound to respect, on the other hand the employes of any corporation have a right to strike if they so desire, though we have always doubted the wisdom of such a measure. The strikers certainly had it in their power at one time to compel the railroads to acceeded to their demands. The strike was general and as it requires skilled labor to fill their places, there was no class from which so large a force could be recruited in so short a time. Had they held out peacably using naught but persuasion to prevent others from taking their places, the result would have been in their favor. But the moment they employed force to carry out their object, they surrendered the great advantage they possessed. Violence is at war with every interest of society, and no permanent good can be secured by its aid. These riots will bring down upon the poor people more misery and suffering than could possibly be brought out by a reduction of wages. We hope to see the difficulty settled to the interest of the poor laborer as well as to that of wealthy corporations.

Rome City.

There is a lovely little lake a few miles north west of us, dotted with a number of small island, around which the blue limpid waters disappear; forming serpentive channels, that glisten in the shimmering sunshine like great ribbons of blue, spread out in fantastic shape; hiding themselves away beneath the deep green foliage of the woodland, presenting a scene as picturesque and romantic as heart could desire. This place is known under the classical name of Rome City fast becoming a popular resort for those who desire to escape for a few hours the oppressive heat and cares of busy life. A very pleasant party left here last Wednesday morning to spend the day there, passing over the Eel River road to LaOtto, and thence over the Grand Rapids line. The usual pastimes of a summer resort were indulged in, the party returning at 7 o,clock in the evening, more than delighted with the trip. A small party of ladies and gentlemen from Garrett joined the excursion at the junction, whose cordial manners soon made their neighbors their intimate friends. The Rome City people are very pleasant, especially the ladies, and there is a great desire to visit them again.

The Laporte Argus gives the particulars of the trouble at the Northern Prison. The new Republican Board of Directors, appointed by the last Legislature, want to discharge all the employes, whose efficiency is not questioned and thus provide a place for their pets. Col. Chas. Mayne, the Warden, who holds his office four years, has submitted the question of removal by the Board to the Attorney General, who says the Directors have no such power. Mr. Mayne refused to obey the order of the Directors for the discharge of the Deputy Warden, and the guards. The Board then passed an order for the removal of Warden Mayne, and the appointment of Chas. A. Manning to the position. They also refused to audit the claims for salaries for the Deputy Warden and the guards mentioned for discharge. Warden Mayne and all the old officials refuse to recognize the order and they hold possession. The case will be carried to the courts and tried on its merits. This is a brief and impartial statement of the facts and it will enable our reader to understand the matter as it passes through the subsequent stages of litigation. To the extent of the welfare of the prison and the safety of the convicts the people of the whole State are interested in the difficulty. It seems to be a mere political trick of the Republican Board, and partizan interests are to be advanced to the detriment of prison discipline, and the great interests of the people.

THE EAST.

A terrible boiler explosion occurred in an ore mill near Allentown, Pa., one day last week, resulting in the killing of three men and the fatal wounding of five, while three others received serious injuries....There was a notable gathering of literary men in Boston, the other day, to say good-by to James Russell Lowell, on the occasion of his departure for his post of duty as Minister to Spain. Among those present were the poets Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes, Ralph Waldo Emerson, the President and professors of Harvard College, Charles Francis Adams, Jr., and a number of Massachusetts Congressmen.

Lightning struck a shed during a thunderstorm near North Bergen, N. J., the other day, killing Mrs. Sandow and a babe 20 months old, and Frederick Muller, a boy of 14 years. Mrs. Sandow and Muller had been weeding in a field, and took shelter from the rain in the shed....The extensive foundry and machine shops of A. Hartupee, in Pittsburgh, Pa., have been destroyed by fire. The total loss is estimated at $500,000....New York claims to have had a genuine case of Asiatic cholera.

The Hartford Courant advises the public that it will be very foolish for any one who holds a policy in the Charter Oak Life Insurance Company to sacrifice it. The lowest estimate yet made by any one of the value of the assets of the company puts them at $6,000,000. Even at that a policy is worth saving, and as soon as a receiver is appointed the necessity for making payment ceases, and at some time each policy-holder will receive his dividend on the present value of the policy....Forest fires are raging in the vicinity of Fort Fairfield. Vast areas of timber-land are burned over, and many buildings destroyed....Ex-Gov. Tilden sailed from New York for Europe last week.

THE WEST.

From the scene of the Indian war in Idaho Territory Gen. O. O. Howard telegraphs an account of a battle with Chief Joseph's band. From the meager particulars furnished we glean that, after making a forced march, he struck the enemy, 300 strong, at 1 o'clock on the afternoon of July 11, in a deep canon, at the mouth of the Cottonwood; opened fire at once with a howitzer, and succeeded in driving the savages from their position. The fighting then began in earnest, the troops firing from behind rocks and barricades, and continued till nightfall. The soldiers slept on their arms, and, early on the morning on the 12th the attack was renewed, and, after some severe fighting the Indians were driven from their position. The pursuit was kept up for some time, and the retreat of the hostiles was accelerated by a number of shells that were sent after them by the artillery. Gen. Howard claims a victory as the result of this engagement, but the casualties show it to have been a dearly-purchased one, if such it can be conceded. Thirteen Indians were killed (the number of wounded is not given), while exactly the same number of soldiers, by a singular coincidence, were slain, and twenty-four wounded. Among the killed were Capt. Bancroft and Lieut. Williams....Another St. Louis bank, the Butchers' and Drovers', has closed its doors....Reports of rich gold discoveries in the Big Horn country have produced an immense excitement at Deadwood, from which place large parties have set out in the expectation of finding a fortune in this latest Dorado.

Lieut. Col. M. V. Sheridan returned to Chicago a few days ago from the battle-ground where the brave Custer and his troops were slain. The bodies of some of the dead were found to be decomposed beyond recognition. The bodies of the privates which could be identified were properly buried and the graves marked. The remains of twelve officers were boxed and brought to Fort Lincoln. The bones of the gallant Custer will be taken to West Point for interment. Those of Col. Custer, Capt. Yates, and Lieuts. Smith, Calhoun and McIntosh will be removed to the National Cemetery at Leavenworth. The remains of the other officers await the action of their friends. Those of Lieut. Crittenden were given permanent burial on the spot where he fell, in obedience to the wishes of his father, who objected to their removal.

The failure of the Second National and Butchers' and Drovers' banks, in St. Louis, caused quite a run on the savings banks of that city, and two or three of the weaker of these institutions have suspended.

Crop item from the Springfield (Ill.) Register: "Crops in Iowa were never so good as this season. It is said by persons who have examined the matter in that State that 'Iowa will be able to revictual the world.' This may be true as to Iowa, but Illinois crops were never so promising as this season, and Illinois will not only be able to revictual this world, but the world to come, from the crops this year."....A dispatch from Walla Walla, Oregon, says the Indians have massacred three men and one girl on Crow Creek....The Cheyenne and Deadwood stage was again stopped by road agents near Cheyenne river, a few days ago. All the passengers were relieved of their money and valuables.

A dispatch of the 19th from San Francisco says: "Advices from the Indian front state that thirty-five Indians surrendered to-day. They were made prisoners and were told that they would be tried and that murderers of white men and outragers of women must be punished. Joseph did not surrender, as he proposed to do, but instead started for the buffalo country with the other hostile chiefs. The prisoners had but two guns and no ammunition or supplies. A general disintegration of the Indians is expected. Joseph is supposed to have gone to Montana."

THE SOUTH.

A negro named Wilson was hanged at Nashville, Tenn., last week, for the murder of a policeman. Over 5,000 witnessed the execution, which was conducted in a shockingly bungling manner. The noose slipped, and the culprit died slowly of strangulation, suffering intolerable agonies.

The New Orleans School Board has decided to establish separate schools for the two races. ....The whole body of troops now stationed in Southern States, with the exception of those in Texas to operate against the Mexican marauders, does not exceed 1,000 or 1,200 men.

A dastardly crime was recently perpetrated near Worthville, Ky. Some miscreants set fire to the house of William Anderson, at an early hour in the morning, while the family were asleep. A daughter, 16 years old, awoke, came to the front door, opened it, and immediately several shots were fired, eleven shots taking effect upon the girl's person, inflicting wounds from which she died.

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of the Navy has addressed a letter to Capt. Howgate, the originator of the plan to establish a colony for Arctic exploration in the far north, declining to detail a civil officer to accompany the expedition. The Secretary does not consider himself authorized to detail a civil officer for such service, and, for the same reason, he regrets that he cannot comply with the request for a loan of instruments belonging to the navy for the use of the expedition.

The Treasury Department has issued the fifty-first call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, consols of 1865. The call is for $10,000,000, of which $7,000,000 are coupon and $3,000,000 registered bonds, principal and interest to be paid at the treasury on and after the 18th of October next, interest to cease on that day....The Treasury Department has received from Barnstable, Mass., the official report of the seizure of the whaling ship Rising Sun, of that port, by a Spanish armed vessel off Cuba. The Department has also been made officially acquainted with the arrest and confinement of Capt. Dunham, of the schooner Ellen Rizpah. These matters will be looked into, and Spain held to a strict accountability for the outrages.

A Washington telegram says "it is stated upon high official authority that, before taking any steps toward a recognition of the Diaz Government, the United States Government will await the promised reparation for actual invasion and conflict by the Mexican troops upon the soil of the United States."

Bayard Taylor has accepted the appointment of Minister to Russia....The Mexican Government having promised to put a stop to raids across the Rio Grande, no further action will be taken by our Government for the present, in the hope that the Mexican authorities will be able to fulfill its promises, and thus prevent any invasion of Mexican territory by the United States forces.

POLITICAL.

The President has decided that, inasmuch as the National Republican Committee will have no political work to perform for some three years, the members of it do not come within the scope of the recent order forbidding officials to take an active part in politics, and consequently there is no objection to Federal officials retaining their membership on the committee.

Ben. Wade, of Ohio, has written a letter denying the published report that he had become reconciled to the President's Southern policy. He fears that this policy "is but an ignominious surrender of the principles of nationality for which our armies fought, and for which thousands upon thousands of brave men died, and without which the war was a failure, and our boasted Government a myth."

The question recently raised by members of the National Republican Committee touching the application of the President's late civil-service order to their cases was discussed at much length in a Cabinet meeting at Washington last week. It seems that the opinion previously reported as having been given by the President, that it would not be necessary for members of this committee to consider that order as applying to their cases, was given as his first impression in the matter. A further and more careful consideration of the subject has convinced the President and the members of his Cabinet that it is best to make no exception to the rule, and a complete understanding was arrived at, that members of the National Republican Committee who hold Federal offices will be required at no distant day to choose which they will relinquish.

The Committee on National Affairs in the New Hampshire Legislature introduced majority and minority reports last week. The majority report set forth that Hayes was elected President by the people, and so declared by the Electoral Commission, and that any movement to reopen the question would be both mischievous and contrary to public interest, etc.; the minority report recited the withdrawal of troops from South Carolina and Louisiana, and approved the President's course, etc. The majority report was adopted.

GENERAL.

The Washington authorities having become satisfied that the military force now operating against the Nez Perces Indians in Idaho and Oregon is totally inadequate for an offensive campaign, it was decided, at a Cabinet meeting the other day, to authorize the Governor of Washington Territory to enlist and equip 500 volunteers and dispatch them to the front as speedily as possible. A skeleton regiment recently stationed at Atlanta, Ga., has also been sent to reinforce Gen. Howard's command. Gen. McDowell, the commander of the Department of the Pacific, in his dispatches to the War Department, represents the situation as exceedingly grave....The Mexican President Diaz has instructed his commanding officer on the Rio Grande to co-operate with the American troops in suppressing thieving incursions into Texas, and in apprehending the brigands.

At Martinsburg, W. Va., last week, striking firemen and brakemen on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad came in collision with a body of seventy-five militia. The strikers fired upon and wounded one of the soldiers. The latter returned the fire, and one rioter was instantly killed and several wounded. For several days the road was almost entirely blockaded, the strikers, to the number of 1,000, keeping strict watch on the seventy freight trains detained at Martinsburg, and threatening death to any engineer who essayed to run a train out.

Dispatches of the 18th from Martinsburg, Grafton, and other points along the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in West Virginia, announce the striking firemen and brakemen in quiet but determined possession of the company's property. At Martinsburg the strikers numbered over 500. At the Sand House station, a little further west, 450 or 500 strikers had fortified themselves. At Keyser the strikers, several hundred in number, received information that a company of militia would probably reach that place on the train east for Martinsburg, and resolved that if this company attempted to board any train they would be torn to pieces. At Grafton there was a mob of several hundred, who threatened death to any one that attempted to run a train out of the place. This was the alarming aspect of affairs when Gov. Matthews, of West Virginia, telegraphed to President Hayes that he was unable to quell the disturbance with the force at his command, and requesting that United States troops be placed at his disposal to put down the mob. The President thereupon issued a formidable proclamation, in the usual form, commanding the rioters to "disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes," etc. An order was also issued from the War Department directing two companies of infantry and one of artillery, under command of Gen. French, to proceed immediately to Gov. Matthews' assistance.

A Pittsburgh dispatch of the 19th says: "All brakemen and conductors on outgoing freight trains east on the Pennsylvania railroad struck here this morning, and prevented others from taking their places. A new order of the company doubling up trains and dispensing with one-half of the employes was the occasion of the strike. Congregating to the number of several hundred at the outer depot, the strikers stopped all freight trains and compelled engineers and firemen to abandon their posts. All the freight employes of the Pan-Handle, Pittsburgh and Connellsville branch of the Baltimore and Ohio and Allegheny Valley branch of the Pennsylvania railroad struck at 8 p. m. No freights are leaving the city except on the Fort Wayne and Chicago. The engineers of the Pennsylvania railroad and branches held a meeting and unanimously resolved to strike."....A telegram of the 19th from Martinsburg states that the arrival of the military and the arrest of the ringleaders of the strikers had produced a favorable effect, most of the strikers having retired to their homes. At Grafton and other points along the Baltimore and Ohio road the strikers were still holding out.

Burned: Almost the entire business portion of Owensboro, Ky., loss $50,000,000; the shoe manufactory of T. A. Coolidge, at West Marlboro, Mass., loss $100,000; a match factory and shoe-blacking factory, on Fourth street, Philadelphia, Pa., loss $40,000.... Robberies: The house of David Garves, at Brandywine Springs, Del., of $11,000 in United States bonds, $100 in cash, and valuable jewelry; the People's Bank, of Newport, Pa., of $5,000 in money and $1,500 in bonds; the First National Bank, of Canandaigua, N. Y., of $17,000 worth of stocks and bonds; the coach from Deadwood City to Cheyenne was stopped by highwaymen at three different points in the region of the Cheyenne river, on the night of July 18, and when the passengers got through running the gantlet they found themselves minus money, arms, blankets, in fact, everything but their clothes.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

The reported abandonment of the siege of Kars and the precipitate retreat of the besieging forces from Asia turns out, as might have been suspected, to be a canard. The Russians are still investing the place, and dropping shells into it at the rate of 2,000 a day....After a desperate fight the Russians have succeeded in relieving the besieged and half-starved garrison of Bayazid.

The reports from the seat of war in Asia are not of much interest. General Melikoff remains not far from Kars, with 35,000 men, strong in cavalry and artillery. Mukhtar is at Kars, his entire force, including the garrison, numbering about 40,000. The Russians still hold Ardahan, which is about all that remains to them of the conquests with which they so brilliantly opened the campaign....Constantinople dispatches announce that the Russian advance guard, consisting of 10,000 Cossacks, has appeared between Yamboli and Adrianople, having traversed Heion pass through the Balkan mountains.

Serious fighting has at last begun in Bulgaria. On the 16th the Russians made a determined attack on the fortified town of Nikopolis, and captured it in gallant style. Nikopolis has hitherto been considered one of the strongholds of the Danube. From Galatz and other points comes news of Russian victories which threaten the second line of the Turkish defense. The capture of Nikopolis is of great advantage to the Russians. Another bridge will be constructed at that point, and across it will pass immense stores of provisions and war material that have been awaiting transportation for some time.... From Asia comes a report that the Abchasians, Circassians and Leschians are in full rebellion, and have killed many thousand Russians.

For the purpose of facilitating the discovery and arrest of that desperate offender against the public peace, the American potato-bug, the German Government has had his life-size photograph added to the rogues' gallery of the police department, and copies of it distributed in all the ports and harbors of the empire.

An Ibrail correspondent telegraphs that the Turkish position at Medjidie was attacked by Gen. Zimmerman's army. The Turks, numbering 9,000, acted very badly. After a short resistance they precipitately retreated, and their retreat was turned into a complete rout.

Dispatches from Bucharest of the 20th announce that the Russians had completely surrounded Rustchuk, that a column of 50,000 was marching on Widdin, and that these two places, together with Shumla, would be besieged with infantry....Abdul Kerim, Generalissimo of the Turkish army, has been dismissed, and Mehemet Ali appointed to succeed him. Mehemet Ali is a Prussian, whose real name is Schultz. He has shown himself capable as a division commander in Montenegro and elsewhere....A Constantinople dispatch states that a large section there believes that Mahmoud, Redif and Abdul Kerim have sold the country to Russia, and that the transaction was negotiated by Abraham Pasha....There was very little news from the Russian force that had penetrated the Balkan pass from Drenova to Heinkoi. It was known that severe fighting had been going on between Gen. Gourko's cavalry and the Bashi-Bazouks. The main body of the Russians, it was believed, would advance by another route by way of Selimno.... Moukhtar Pasha telegraphs from Kars that the revictualing and reorganization of the Kars garrison is now complete.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

The Greek Parliament has adjourned without making any provisions for war with Turkey. This action is attributed to British influence....A Berlin dispatch reports Bismarck as saying that any attempt to mediate between Russia and Turkey at present is impossible.... News comes from Havana that the Cubans have assumed the offensive; that a battle has been fought and the Spanish troops defeated with the loss of over 600 killed; that the yellow fever is decimating the ranks of the Spaniards; that discontent is rampant among all classes of people, and that the financial stringency is growing desperate.

The German settlers in Bulgaria are seriously suffering from the war, and the German Government has complained to Russia and Turkey of their ill-treatment by the soldiers of both countries....Gen. Grant was cordially received and hospitably entertained in Frankfort and other German cities.... The fertile valleys of Chilo and Tumbaco, in Ecuador, have been devastated by a terrible volcanic eruption, followed by a flood which lapped up what the volcano left. The city of Latacunga was almost swept out of existence, many lives being lost by the sudden inundation....Accounts from the famine-inflicted districts of India are worse, and there is grave cause for apprehension unless abundant rain falls soon.

The rinderpest has broken out among the cattle in the environs of London....The young man Hackett, who was killed in Montreal on Orangeman's day, was buried with great pomp on the 16th, a procession of 5,000 Orangemen and 200 soldiers following the remains to the grave.

Armenia has been utterly devastated by the hostile armies, the Russians having destroyed or carried off everything eatable that the Turks had left to the people. Large districts are threatened with famine, and some are already suffering its horrors....The Russians captured a large number of prisoners at Nikopolis. The Turks who surrendered included Achmet Pasha and Hassan Pasha and 6,000 men. Forty cannon, twelve heavy caliber guns, and two monitors fell into the Russian hands. The attacking force consisted of three divisions of infantry, and the fighting was of the most desperate character. Whole ranks of Russians were mowed down by the terrible fire of the Turks, but the Russians, it seems, were too many for them, and, after a stubborn resistance of several hours, they finally capitulated. The Turkish authorities charge that the two Pashas who surrendered were bribed....The reported passage of the Balkans by the Russians is confirmed. The force now south of the mountains is said to number 22,000, consisting of infantry, artillery and cavalry. Some fighting is reported, in which the Russians were the victors.

Paris dispatches state that an active alliance between Italy and Russia will be effected, in case Austria should interfere in the present war.

President Hayes Challenged.

The President recently received the following letter from a Baltimore lunatic:

Baltimore, Md., Thursday.

Mr. Hayes—Honored Sir: The fact of my being a staunch Democrat and the result of the Presidential election going against all my feelings on the subject, I see no other way of getting satisfaction than by challenging you to fight in a twenty-four-foot ring, and may the best man win; and, besides, I have got a twenty-four pound bull-pup that can lick any dog in Washington, give or take a half a pound. If any of the above arrangements fail to meet your acceptance, I've got a benefit at the Central Theater on the 7th of April, and I'd just as soon sell you twenty tickets for $10 as any other good American citizen. Well, anyhow, I must congratulate your Highness on the success you have met with and the long engagement you have to play. Hoping you will make a big hit, I remain yours, patriotically,

D. N. Collyer.

Twelve Years After the War.

Twelve years ago Richmond, with 45,000 inhabitants, lay half in ruins. Now she has rebuilt the whole of the burnt district, has established 200 factories, and with a population of 70,000 people is the handsomest city in the world. Norfolk ships near 1,000,000 bales of cotton this year, and has developed a trade in vegetables, fruit and fish which has extended through our great Northern cities, across the Atlantic, and has increased the value of lands in the adjacent counties many hundred fold.—Danville (Va.) News.

Diaz is said to desire the ceding of five Northern Mexican States to the United States.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

The Pittsburgh Gazette declares that the progress toward better times is apparent. In the iron trade the volume of business has been equal to the average for the last seven years.

The Iron World says "the British iron trade is in a worse condition than that of the United States. There are heavy failures constantly occurring, there is a rapid decline in wages, and the works advertised for sale are found occupying considerable space in many papers of the kingdom.

Large purchases of cotton have been recently made in New York for the Russian Government, 20,000 or 30,000 bales having been taken since the beginning of the war. The interruption of the Black sea trade, and the consequent stoppage of supplies for the southern portion of the empire from India and Egypt, probably accounts for the increased demand for the American staple.

Foreign papers believe that Europe can take 3,000,000 head of cattle from the United States every year, the limit of cattle-rearing having been reached in many parts of Europe. Figure up yourself what that would come to in the way of revenue to the United States at $75 a head. The impression abroad is that Americans are not acting with reference to the export of beef as vigorously as they might.

The Indianapolis Journal of a recent date says: "A business man of this city, connected with one of the leading grain and commission houses, informed us that the orders and commissions received yesterday by his house were the largest for a long time, and were of a character that indicated a healthy revival of business. We have reason to believe that other houses are having the same encouraging experience. There is a general feeling of hopefulness in business circles at present, and a belief that the harvesting of the wheat crop will be the beginning of better times and a general revival of trade."

The last quarterly report of the commercial agency of R. G. Dun & Co., just issued, shows that the total failures in the United States and Canada for the first six months of 1877 were 5,399, a slight increase over the number of failures during the corresponding period of 1876. There is a marked decline, however, in the average amount of liabilities. The circular says "the business of the country is improving, though very slowly. All the conditions appear to favor better times. There are many encouraging features in the outlook, the best of which is the excellent crop prospects throughout the country."

The Public Printer has delivered the first annual report on the internal commerce of the United States. It says, among other things, that the value of the railroads of the United States is about twenty-three times the value of the shipping engaged in our foreign commerce, and that the value of internal commerce is twenty-five times the value of our foreign commerce; that 87 per cent. of our grain shipped from the West to the seabord during the last year was transported on rail lines, and over 20 per cent. of the internal commerce of the country is on railroads. Although the total amount of the contributions of the Government up to the close of the year 1876 in aid of railroad construction amounted to $44,000,000, embracing land-grants and subsidies to the Pacific railroads, yet this sum is only 3 per cent. of the entire cost of the railroad system of the country.

Recent commercial failures: J. Clark Wilson & Co., hardware, Boston, liabilities $100,000; the First National Bank of Delhi, Ind., assets $50,000 in excess of liabilities; Minksheimer, Lindheim & Co., wholesale liquors, New York, liabilities over $500,000; Martin & Johnson, tobacco, New York, liabilities $60,000; Thomas A. McLean & Co., leather, Montreal, liabilities $50,000; ex-Congressman J. M. S. Williams, general speculator, Boston, liabilities heavy; Young, McNaughton & Co., dry goods, Montreal, liabilities $150,000; Detwiller & Welsh, flour, Philadelphia; Merchants' Loan and Trust Company, bankers, Paterson, N. J., liabilities $50,000; W. H. Lamb & Co., dry goods, Tuscola, Ill., liabilities $55,000; Dugan, Case & Spear, commission merchants, Chicago, John H. Keyser, the "Tweed ring" plumber, New York, liabilities $200,000; Buttle & Lees, straw goods, New York, liabilities $175,000.

Robert Dale Owen's Insanity.

Dr. Orpheus Everts, superintendent of the insane asylum at Indianapolis, where Robert Dale Owen was confined while temporarily insane, expresses the opinion that the Katie King expose had nothing whatever to do with Mr. Owen's insanity, which was purely the result of physical and mental overwork. He was not a monomaniac upon the subject of Spiritualism by any manner of means, and that theme occupied a minor place in his thoughts. While at the asylum he was constantly projecting schemes for the benefit of the institution, and once penned an elaborate challenge to Gov. Hendricks, proposing a horse-race, the loser to pay for a $15,000 piece of Philadelphia statuary which should be put in position in front of the main entrance to the asylum before the race was trotted. He also made arrangements for the presentation of his play, "Pocahontas," and addressed a communication to the Governor proposing that the State pay the salaries of Edwin Adams, Lawrence Barrett, Davenport, and other great actors, who were expected to participate, and whose services were too valuable to be given gratuitously. The proceeds of these theatrical exhibitions, which would be enormous and almost beyond computation, were to be placed to the credit of the institution as an endowment fund. He proposed to enact the part of John Smith, giving the minor roles to the stars imported for the occasion.

English Dinners.

Gen. Grant was not greatly impressed with the excellence of English dinners. One of the London press-gang called on him at Gen. Badeau's (the American Consul). The interviewer worked up to the question uppermost in an Englishman's mind—good eating and drinking—and observed:

"You ought to be a great judge on the dinner question now; don't you think we can dine better as a rule in the United States than here?"

"Well, the dinners are good enough here, but I think they are better in America. Our markets offer a more varied supply of provisions. Here the dinners are nearly all the same, wherever you go."

"That is partly the fault of the cooks, who persist in sending up the same old dishes year after year."

The Suicide Mania.

John Anderson, a citizen of Doniphan county, Kan., attempted a singular suicide. He took a pocket knife and cut one side of his neck, which not producing death, he cut the other side. This likewise failed, and, a stream being near by, he jumped in in his frenzy. The water was too shallow. He then went home, cut a clothes line from its posts, ascended a hay loft in a stable, fastened the rope to a beam in the roof and around his neck and jumped off, securing a fall of about five feet. His neck was not broken. The noise attracted two men passing who ascended the loft. One lifted the body by the legs and the other cut the rope. In falling, Anderson's head struck the corner of a beam on the floor and cracked his skull, from which it is feared he will die.

Henry Longfelder, a Cleveland saloon-keeper, committed suicide by shooting himself twice in the mouth with a revolver. He first saturated different parts of his room with coal oil, then set fire to it, and then shot himself, expecting probably to burn his body up in the flames. The firemen dragged his body out of the room before it was burned.

August Swapdollar, of Pittsburgh, was bitten by a dog, and one of his acquaintances told him he would go mad. The matter preyed so much on his mind that he determined on suicide to escape the terrible fate his friend predicted for him. He went into a stable and swallowed the contents of a vial of sulphate of morphia, enough to kill fifty men, and died instantly.

George Sherman, one of the oldest and most respectable citizens of Newport, R. I., attempted suicide the other day. He left a note, stating that he was going to meet his dear wife, and that his family would find his body in the cistern. When found a rope was tied around the body, but as it was tied to a wheelbarrow outside of the cistern, it did not lower him far enough to cover his head, and he was rescued.

Odd Occurrences.

A rooster on a farm near Poughkeepsie accidentally had one of its drumsticks cut off, but now stumps about on a wooden peg manufactured expressly for it by an ingenious young man.

A photographer at Council Bluffs was astonished to see a woman, whose portrait he was about to take, cautiously and tenderly remove from a basket a snake six feet long and coil it around her neck. It was her own dear little pet.

A locomotive on the Lake Shore railroad struck a 2-year-old bullock. The animal bounded over the smoke-stack and fell across the boiler, the fore legs on one side and the hind legs on the other. The fireman went out on the engine and held the animal until the train could be stopped. The lively little bullock was scratched, nothing more.

A pigeon perched on the minute hand of the clock in the tower of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, at a quarter of 11 Friday forenoon, and held its post until its body was securely fastened between the two hands. When it attempted to fly it could not stretch its wings, and in a few seconds was squeezed to death. The ponderous machinery was stopped by the sexton, and the dead bird could not be taken out until the hands were unscrewed.

A faithful hound followed the hearse containing his mistress' remains to Bellevue Cemetery, Wilmington, Del., and whined dismally at the grave.

A negro woman, wife of Peter Montgomery, of Carroll county, Miss., while at church the other day became very happy, and, after shouting herself hoarse, got into what the colored people call a "trance," and in this apparently happy condition passed from earth.

A Fight for Millions Ended.

On yesterday expired the time for the defendants in the Gaines suits to file their bonds of appeal from the judgments rendered against them by Judge Billings, and, as no bonds have been filed, the struggle of over forty years, so heroically made by this remarkable woman, may be said to have ended. In truth, the abandonment of the appeals by her opponents is an admission of the hopelessness of reversing the decision recognizing the execution and validity of the will of Daniel Clark in 1813, declaring Myra to be his legitimate child and sole heiress, and, as such, entitled to the large amount of property held by the defendants.

Believing that, in the happiness of her final victory, the generous elements of her character will lessen the misfortune of those who suffer by her success, we congratulate Mrs. Gaines on at last reaching the goal of her life's struggle.

Wonderful, indeed, must be her feelings this Sabbath morning, as she enjoys, for the first time since she learned of her parentage, a day free of anxiety.—New Orleans Picayune.

Taxation in the City of Paris.

The budget estimate for the city of Paris for the year 1878 has been prepared and distributed to the members of the Municipal Council. The expenditure for the ensuing year is reckoned at the enormous sum of 254,837,732 francs, or upward of $50,000,000. There is, however, no lack of funds to meet it. The receipts from the octroi alone are estimated at 121,000,000 francs. The gas company pays 8,500,000 francs, and the omnibus company—"for the right of circulation"—something over 4,000,000 francs. Of the total expenditure not far from one-half is incurred to meet the interest of the city debt and to pay off a portion of the principal. Among the appropriations asked for is $78,000 for "fine arts." The amount of local taxation for each inhabitant is averaged at $25. Of national taxes every Frenchman, woman and child pays $15 yearly on the average. Reckoning each family at four persons, we find the average Parisian citizen and head of a household paying $60 to the State and $100 to the city, or $160 a year in all.

It is said that there are more Chinamen in California than can now find profitable employment.

TRAJAN'S WALL.

What it is, What it Was, and When it Was Built.

[illegible]

The events now transpiring in the neighborhood of the Danube bring into curious prominence the name of the Emperor Trajan, the buttresses of whose bridge, we believe, still stand on opposite banks of the Danube, and whose famous wall seems to be the line along which the tide of war is rapidly rolling. The bridge thrown over the Danube by this great monarch was, in some respects at least, the most remarkable of all the structures that successive belligerents have erected for the passage of their troops. It was not a mere floating bridge, but a permanent structure, carried on piers 150 feet high and 60 feet wide, and it comprised twenty arches, extending altogether over a span of 3,570 Roman feet. This giant structure, than which ancient history records nothing of the kind equal to it, seems to have been intended as a fortress as well as a bridge. Standing 80 feet above the water, it is supposed to have afforded the command of the Danube navigation, a garrison posted on it being, of course, able to damage or destroy vessels passing under, while they would be above the reach of retaliation. It was destroyed by Hadrian, and its precise locality has been the subject of some doubt. Ruins which evidently might have formed the buttresses of a bridge, occurring on the line of an old Roman road, however, seem to leave little room for doubt. Trajan's wall is another relic of this terribly energetic old Roman. It is, strictly speaking, a rampart of earth about 35 or 40 miles long, and extends from Rassova, just at the bend in the Danube, to the shores of the Black sea. Though only an earthwork, it is a formidable line of defense. It is 8 or 10 feet high, with a fosse in front of it, while the western portion is still further fortified by deep lakes and the swampy valley of Kara-Su. In addition to all this, another rampart of a similar character lies just in the rear of it. This is known as the South wall, the space between the two ramparts being from 1,000 to 2,000 feet.

Lively Scene in a Nevada Theater.

At the theater last evening, in order to give general eclat to the scene in which Buffalo Bill scalps Yellow Hand, it was determined to enact it on horseback. Accordingly in the afternoon two very gentle horses were brought on to the stage from Mooney's livery stable and trained to familiarize themselves with the explosion of firearms. In an hour they became so accustomed to it that pistol shots could be fired in rapid succession under their very noses without giving them the slightest concern. When the curtain rose for the grand equestrian scene, Buffalo Bill, mounted on a snow-white charger, galloped across the stage. A moment later Captain Jack (as Yellow Hand) trotted out from the wings, and then the trouble was begun. Bill raised his Henry rifle and began firing, while Jack pulled his revolver, firing one shot in doing so. He fell heavily on the stage, with his foot clinging for a moment to the stirrup. The horse, relieved of its rider, rushed about wildly, confused by the sudden fall and continued firing, and at one time ran toward the footlights and seemed about to jump into the auditorium. Capt. Jack rose to his feet and limped off the stage, but a moment after made his appearance again in a hand-to-hand encounter with Buffalo Bill. He stood upon one leg with blood streaming down the other, and seemed to be in great pain, all of which was considered by most of the audience to be only a part of the performance. At the sight of the blood, Miss Granville, who was in the box on the right, fainted. The curtain fell abruptly, and all the actors rushed on the stage to see what was the matter. They found Jack hardly able to rise and bleeding from the groin. He was taken to the dressing-room, and physicians were immediately summoned. When his leggings were removed, an ugly wound was found in the left groin, from which the blood was flowing so copiously that the physicians were apprehensive that an artery was severed. The wound was caused by the premature explosion of Jack's revolver, the weapon having been discharged as he was pulling it from the sheath.—Virginia City Chronicle.

THE MONTENEGRIN CAMPAIGN.

The Brave Mountaineers, Though Temporarily Defeated, are Neither Conquered Nor Cast Down.

(From the Chicago Tribune.)

The Montenegrin campaign is over. The brave mountaineers, after a desperate resistance, were crushed between the overwhelming numbers of the Turkish armies, led by two of the best Generals in the service, and composed of the very flower of the Turkish soldiery. But Montenegro is still free. Her warriors are still in their mountain fastnesses, upon the sides of which lie 15,000 Turkish dead. Though driven back to their rocks and crags, they are still unconquered, and their ancient enemy, through the demand of Austria on the one hand and the straits of the armies in Bulgaria on the other, has withdrawn, and is now slowly pursuing its way to the south of the Balkans to co-operate with the forces of the quadrilateral.

In reviewing the campaign from the outset it will be seen that the Montenegrins, though defeated, have been of immense service to the Russians. At the very beginning of the outbreak in Herzegovina, the Montenegrins were in arms against their old oppressor, and, down to the time when Servia entered the field, defeated the Turks in every engagement. When Bosnia and Herzegovina were overrun and Servia sued for peace, Montenegro would accept no terms from the Turk because her claim for territory was not allowed. She wanted the small strip of level territory to the north that once belonged to her, arable land for her crops, pasturage for her flocks, a chance to descend to the plains, instead of being cooped up on her bleak mountain crags. The Turk refused this demand, and the mountaineers refused to lay down their arms. When Russia declared war with Turkey, the Turk's first effort was to crush Montenegro, so that she should not co-operate with the Russian right wing as it moved south to turn the Balkans, which was in the outset supposed to be part of the Russian programme of operations. The Turks sent up one army from the south through Albania, under Mehemet Pasha, and a second down from the north through Bosnia, under Suleiman Pasha—in all, a force of about 60,000 of the best soldiers of the Turkish army, under command of two of the best of their Generals. This powerful force the little Montenegrin army of 30,000 men has kept employed ever since the 1st of April, and what have the Turks accomplished? Montenegro is still free. Fifteen thousand Turks have been killed and the remnant of 45,000 is now on a long tedious footmarch to the south of the Balkans, to relieve the forces of the quadrilateral, and to hold the mountain passes against the Russians if possible.

The Turks have made many blunders in this campaign, but none so monstrous as the diversion of 60,000 of their best troops to carry on this disastrous Montenegrin campaign.

It is apparent now that if the Russians are successful during the present season in their Bulgarian campaign, it is owing to this defection of 60,000 of the best troops in the Turkish service, to waste their strength for three months against the Montenegrin mountain sides, and leave one-fourth of their number under Montenegrin soil. If the Turks are beaten in this campaign, they deserve it for their blunder. If the Russians are successful, the Montenegrins deserve to have the territory given to them which they have claimed of Turkey, both as a reward of gallantry and heroism, and as compensation for the great service they have rendered Russia.

Armenian Dwellings.

A correspondent of the London News, while riding toward the headquarters of the Turkish army on the Songhanlu range, suddenly felt his horse sinking beneath him, and in another instant he was enveloped in a cloud of dust and splinters. He had fallen through the roof of a house into an apartment where a family was breakfasting. An Armenian village, from a distance, resembles the heaps of refuse one sees around iron smelting works. Here and there a couple of feet of dry stone wall and a cave-like entrance suggest the possibility of the existence of human dwellings. Between these dwellings the spaces are carpeted with an elastic layer of dung and offal five or six feet thick. Huge, ungainly buffaloes, with bodies like bisons and the eye of an octopus, low and moan, standing mid-leg deep in the filthy paths. Turbaned men are perched here and there like storks on the house-tops, pulling their beards, and giving the whole place a Scriptural appearance. Calves, dogs and fowl wander promiscuously among the chimney-pots, and now and then a dark-eyed, olive-faced woman comes stealing shyly by, her face half averted from the gaze of the Giaour, and partly concealed by the folds of her linen headdress. The gloomy interior of one of the houses or earth-heaps is forty feet in length, and is divided into two compartments by a low boarded partition four feet high. That next the door is devoted to horses and buffaloes; the inner space affords accommodation to travelers. A little terrace of beaten earth, six inches above the floor, flanks both sides of the room. It is covered with coarse matting and constitutes a seat by day, a bed by night. Two square holes in the roof admit light and air.

A Bully's Fate.

A fatal shooting affray occurred near Richmond a day or two since, which is in some respects quite peculiar. It appears that George Moody, a young son of Whit Moody, a large property owner at Kingston, was set upon by one Tom Stivers, a big bully, who was discharged from Gen. Custer's command just before the death of that brilliant but ill-fated soldier.

Stivers abused the youth by pulling his ears and slapping his face. The boy bore this treatment for some time, and finally said, "Tom, I don't want to hurt you, but I've had enough of this." Stivers answered by ordering him out of the house. Young Moody said he was not going until he had transacted his business. Stivers instantly seized him and threw him against the wall of the room and kicked him as he fell. The boy instantly drew a small revolver and fired. The first shot struck Stivers over the left ear and passed through the head, coming out on the other side. A second shot entered the chest and struck the lower part of the heart. As Stivers turned to fall Moody fired a third shot, which entered the back and lodged in the very center of the heart. Any one of the shots would have produced death. Moody had his examining trial and was acquitted.—Lexington (Ky.) Press.

ELECTIONS.

States that Are to Vote This Fall.

Kentucky will hold the first State election on August 6. A Governor and other State officers and a Legislature will be elected. The main interest centers in the election of Legislators, who will choose a successor to Senator McCreery, whose term expires in 1879. Of course a Democrat will be elected, and the main issue is whether McCreery will succeed himself. Next follows Vermont, where the people will vote for State officers on the 4th of September. On the 10th of the same month Maine will elect State officers and a Legislature. Sept. 5, California will elect a Governor and Legislature. The present Governor, Irwin, Democrat, was elected by a majority of 435 over both the Republican and Independent parties. The Legislature to be elected will select a successor to Senator Sargent, whose term expires in 1879.

On the second Tuesday in October elections occurr in Ohio and Iowa. In both States Governors and Legislatures are to be chosen. The Legislature elected in the former will also select Stanley Matthews' successor in the United States Senate, although Matthews' term, like that of Sergent, does not expire until 1879.

The following table gives a view of all the elections to be held this year:

State.	Election Day.	Officers.
Alabama	Aug. 6	Legislative.
Kentucky	Aug. 6	Legislative and county.
California	Sept. 5	Legislative.
Vermont	Sept. 5	Full ticket.
Maine	Sept. 10	Full ticket.
Colorado	Oct. 2	Legislative.
Iowa	Oct. 2	Full ticket.
Ohio	Oct. 2	Full ticket.
Louisiana	Nov. 6	Legislative.
Massachusetts	Nov. 6	Full ticket.
Minnesota	Nov. 6	Full ticket.
Mississippi	Nov. 6	Legislative.
Nevada	Nov. 6	Full ticket.
New Jersey	Nov. 6	Legislative and county.
New York	Nov. 6	Legislative and State.
Pennsylvania	Nov. 6	Legislative.
South Carolina	Nov. 6	Legislative.
Tennessee	Nov. 6	Full ticket.
Texas	Nov. 6	Full ticket.
Virginia	Nov. 6	Full ticket.
Wisconsin	Nov. 6	Full ticket.

The Governors whose terms expire at the close of the present year, and whose successors must, therefore, be elected, are as follows: Iowa, S. J. Kirkwood;* Maine, Selden Connor; Massachusetts, Alexander H. Rice; Minnesota, J. S. Pillsbury; Mississippi, *J. M. Stone; Neveda, L. R. Bradley; Ohio, T. M. Young;* Tennessee, J. D. Porter; Texas, *Richard Coke; Vermont, Horace Fairbanks; Virginia, J. L. Kemper; Wisconsin, H. Ludington. The Democrats are printed in italics, making seven Republicans and five Democrats. Those marked with an asterisk have been elected to other positions, or fill vacancies caused by such changes. Gov. Stone occupies the chair made vacant by the resignation of Gov. Ames, and Gov. Young that vacated by the President. Senator Kirkwood left the executive office of Iowa last March, on being sworn into the United States Senate. So also with the Governor of Texas, who is now in the Senate.

Strange Railway Accident.

Not long since an accident occurred to an express train on the Southeastern line, England. A passenger in the second carriage from the engine states that all went well until they arrived within about five miles of Minster, when, the train traveling at express speed of about forty miles an hour, the faintest shock was felt by those in the foremost carriages, a slight crash heard, and stones and dust began to fly up around the carriage. On looking out of the window, he saw that a horse was being dragged along by the engine; its hindquarters were on the ground, the hind legs on either side of the front left wheel, and the rest of the body was held up by the engine, and being thrust forward in some strange way. The train was gradually brought to a standstill, and upon going to the engine he found the body of a large, powerful black cart horse with the left buffer of the engine driven right into the body, and holding it up apparently at the juncture of the lower rib of the spine. In this attitude the body had been carried by the engine for about a quarter of a mile. It seems that a man was passing over a level field crossing with a wagon and two horses, when suddenly round a sharp and closely adjacent curve the express train swept upon them; he escaped, but the left buffer of the engine struck the shaft horse, impaled it, and carried it bodily off in the manner described—the right buffer caught the other horse on the flank, killed it instantly, and threw it off the line; the corner of the wagon came in contact with the first carriage of the train, broke one of its panels, and was hurled off the line. It was the opinion of the engine-driver that if the horse, being hit so full by the engine, had not been impaled and carried forward in the way described, or if it had dropped from the buffer on to the line before the train had stopped, the engine would in all probability have been thrown off the track.

The Indian Troubles.

The administration looks upon the Indian trouble in the Northwest as constituting just now the most serious question with which it has to deal. The latest reports from the seat of war prove what was before known, that the military force now on the Pacific coast is altogether inadequate for the prompt suppression of the present difficulties. To reinforce the United States troops with regulars would involve the transportation of men and material of war across the continent, and before the relief could reach the Pacific coast it might be too late for it to be of any assistance. If matters continue to look as serious as at present in the Northwest it is not impossible that the President may call upon the States to furnish militia for the suppression of the Indian war.—Washington Correspondence.

A COAL-MINE HORROR.

Particulars of the Disaster Near Sharon, Pa., by Which Six Men Lose their Lives—Heartrending Scenes.

(Sharon (Pa.) Cor. Chicago Times.)

About two weeks ago the Brookfield Coal Company completed a tunnel to their mines. Previous to this the company had hauled out their coal by mule-power. When the tunnel was in readiness a small locomotive was introduced, but it did not work well with soft coal or coke, and anthracite coal was tried as an experiment. For three trips it proved successful. Then it was observable that the long tunnel was filling with sulphuric gas. At the fourth trip the brakemen were overcome by the noxious gas, and fell to the ground, insensible. The engineer managed to get the locomotive out, and gave the alarm. A large number of men instantly rushed in to rescue the miners. All were affected, and fell unconscious. This state of affairs continued until twenty-three men had entered the tunnel. Squads of four were then formed. They entered the tunnel, caught up a miner, and carried him out of the bank, and turned him over to the physicians present, who did all in their power to resuscitate the men. In this way the work went on till thirty unconscious and six dead miners were brought out. The excitement spread to the Cleveland shaft and Wood's bank, adjoining. Eight men from these two mines, laboring under the impression that other miners were in the tunnel, rushed in, and all succumbed to the deadly gas. Of these, five were shortly afterwards brought out insensible and the three others dead. Among the first to enter the tunnel to save his comrades was John Jones, the mine boss. He had proceeded about a quarter of a mile, when he fell, and an hour later was taken out dead. He was 60 years old, and leaves a wife and large family.

The scenes that took place as the dead and dying miners were being brought out were agonizing. Mothers and wives, sisters and brothers of the miners ran around distracted, crying and wringing their hands over the dead bodies of their dear ones. One woman lost her husband and two grown-up sons. Her grief gave vent in shriek after shriek, as she alternately embraced her dead. It was a scene that never could be forgotten. The excitement seized upon the crowd, and for the time many acted like lunatics. Grim, coal-black miners huddled together like so many sheep, completely panic-stricken.

The engineer of the locomotive, after he had given the alarm, threw up his arms, staggered wildly, and, uttering incoherent words, became insensible.

A grief-stricken wife threw herself on the dead body of her husband, rolling over with the corpse tightly clasped in her arms, all the time crying hysterically, and cursing God and every living human being.

Three sisters surrounded the body of a beloved brother, and refused to allow the physicians to strip the body, to afford greater facility in their endeavors to revive the spark of life.

A majority of the sufferers were men with families, and their untimely death falls with double force upon their poor wives and children. The manner in which most of the victims encountered death, trying to save the lives of their imperiled comrades, speaks volumes in praise of the heroism of the miners.

An Arizona Shooting-Match.

A letter from Greenwood, Arizona Territory, gives the following account of a characteristic Western affray, resulting in the death of three men: "On Friday night Grant Blake and Johnny Baker were killed. It seems that Johnny Baker got drunk, and swore he would kill any man in Smith's saloon. There was a Dr. Foster there, whom Johnny did not like. He kept flourishing the pistol over the doctor's head, saying he was going to kill him. The doctor got up from the table, where he was sitting, and went up the street to his cabin and got a double-barreled shotgun. He came back to the saloon to make Johnny beg his pardon; so he says. Grant Blake saw him go over to Smith's saloon with the gun and ran after him to take Johnny's part. Arriving there, Blake told the doctor and Johnny to put up their weapons. At this the doctor turned on him and shot Grant right through the breast. The latter seeing the movement of raising the gun, had almost immediately returned the fire, hitting the doctor between the eyes. After shooting Grant the doctor turned on Johnny Baker, and firing the second barrel of his gun landed the charge in Johnny's breast, killing him instantly. Johnny and the doctor fell at the same time. Grant turned around after being hit and had walked half-way across the street to his saloon, when he also dropped. They buried Grant and Johnny on Saturday; the doctor is not expected to live."

An Adroit Robbery.

A very bold and skilful robbery was committed in a New York broker's office the other day. The sales clerk had just taken in a check for $3,000 on the Leather Manufacturers' Bank and $2,200 in $100 bills, which he placed on the counter by his side. The part of the counter where the sales clerk stands is partitioned off by an iron railing about three feet high, the iron work being wrought so closely that it would be difficult for a man to insert one finger between the rails. The clerk turned to transact some business with the bullion clerk, and a minute later noticed that the money was gone. A square piece of the iron inclosure had been cut off, leaving a space just large enough to admit a hand. There was no clue to the thief. Word was sent to the bank to stop the payment of the check, and thus limit the firm's loss to $2,200 in greenbacks. An examination showed that the piece had been cut or filed off. The thief had carried the piece off with him, and it is believed that the iron work must have been cut some time ago preparatory to some such robbery, and that the piece was put back in its place to be removed only when an opportunity should arise.

An Editor in Trouble.

Guido Weiss, editor of the Berlin Radical journal Die Waage, has been sentenced by the Berlin Court of Appeal to three months' "honorable imprisonment" for charging Russia with pursuing a hypocritical and mendacious policy, under the protection of the Three Emperors' Alliance. It was in vain that the accused quoted a previous speech of Prince Bismarck to the effect that the so-called Three Emperors' Alliance was really not such, but only an agreement to secure mutual consultation in the event of peace being endangered. The court thought that another appeal was open to the accused.

London.

The population of what is called London for 1877 is estimated at 4,286,607, or nearly that of the State of New York, and fully as many as the two States of Illinois and Iowa. This is 1,000,000 more than was given by the census of 1871; a large part of the increase results from annexing suburbs to the metropolitan district. An exchange says:

"The section embraced in the Registrar's tables, under the name of London, includes parts of three counties, and comprises an area of 122 square miles. The city of London is itself only a small district in the metropolis, just as the "old city" of Philadelphia is but a small section of the consolidated city today. Here the old dividing lines between the city and surrounding districts have been obliterated, and are only vaguely remembered by the present generation, but in the metropolis of London they are maintained through the existence of local governments for the districts, with special laws and customs inherited from olden times. During 1876, 153,192 children were born in London, and 91,171 persons of all ages died, the annual birth-rate being nearly thirty-six, and the annual death-rate not quite twenty-one and a half per 1,000. The death-rate is very low for such a vast city, but great care is taken with the sanitary regulations to keep the public streets in good condition, and to carry off the sewage. Fourteen thousand men, with 6,000 horses, are daily, or rather nightly, employed in cleaning the streets, and their labors are supplemented by the work of crossing-sweepers and "street-orderlies," or boys who are employed during the day in collecting manure from the business streets. The streets of London are cleaned by contractors, the work being done at night, and the refuse which cannot be utilized is carried in barges to the mouth of the Thames and dumped into the sea. The outlying districts of London have increased rapidly in population within the last ten or twenty years, rapid transit, elevated and underground railways stimulating the growth of the city in that direction."

How Cheap Cigars are Made.

The room was low and long, with four windows on the north side. Near one of these windows sat a woman about 40 years old, bunching cigars from a pile of strippings close by. At another window were two men finishing the cigars, and in the farther part of the room were two beds and a table, with dishes on it. While the pretended dealer was talking with one of the men in regard to the cheapness with which it was possible to manufacture cigars, the door opened, and a ragged little girl entered with a dirty canvas bag on her arm, the contents of which she emptied into a barrel near the door. She then sat down and commenced to strip tobacco from the pile before mentioned. The man who did the talking was very loquacious, and stated that he could sell cigars for about $7 a thousand. He said that the wrappers used were of Western tobacco, while the fillings were sometimes of "much finer quality." To illustrate this latter assertion he showed the contents of the barrel to which the little girl had contributed. It was half filled with a mass of what might be called garbage, culled from the streets, and consisting of scraps of brown paper, cabbage-leaves, and cigar-stumps, some of which were, no doubt, stumps of Havana cigars. The manufacturer then took his customer into another room opening from the stairway, where there was a kettle in a brick fireplace, and a plank on which were spread out the gleanings from the barrel, assorted and separated to dry. He showed how the burnt ends of stumps were cut off and the remainder unrolled; how dried cabbage leaves, boiled with tobacco stems and sumach leaves, could be converted into "very fine tobacco," and closed his explanations by extolling the virtues of the tonka bean, valerian and ammonia, as flavoring extracts.—New York Tribune.

Mistaken for Highwaymen.

Senator Spencer, of Alabama, was taken for a highwayman while he was journeying to the Black Hills, late in June. The treasury agent who left Deadwood in the Bismarck stage had been cautioned to take no risks, and if any suspicious persons appeared on the road to "get the drop on them." The messenger, the driver, and another man employed by the company all had rifles close at hand, when four horsemen were espied galloping down a mountain toward the stage. It was a lonely spot, and the messenger did not like the appearance of the strangers. As the four horsemen drove up and leaped from their saddles, they were covered by three trusty rifles. "Stop! we are honest men!" shouted the strangers. "Throw up your hands, then," cried the messenger; and the squad of four slowly approached under cover of the rifles, and finally convinced the guardian of the national treasure that they ware not public plunderers, night-riders, murderers, but only Senator Spencer and friends.—New York Tribune.

Chinese Cheap Labor Played Out

The last of the Chinamen in the employ of the Beaver Falls Cutlery Works took their departure this morning for San Francisco, and the village of Beaver Falls, which a few years ago swarmed with these Joss worshipers, knows them no more. The works mentioned had at one time in their employ between three and four hundred of them, but recently discharged and replaced them with American workmen. The wages paid the latter are a little higher, but the character of the work turned out is superior, and the corporation seems better satisfied, and will rest under less odium than formerly. The efforts to Christianize the Chinamen at Beaver Falls was a complete failure. They clung with great tenacity to the religion of their native land.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

WOMAN'S WEAKNESS.

A Peddler Who Has It Down Fine.

(From the Chicago Times.)

He was a melancholy, low-spirited kind of man, with no style about him, but he bowed politely to the lady of the house who answered his ring at the door and smiled almost sweetly at the urchin who was tugging at her dress.

"Can I sell you a bottle of the Magical Instantaneous Freckle Eliminator?" he asked, producing a bottle from the little black box with leather handles which he had with him.

"Don't want any."

"It's a splendid article, madam—warranted or money cheerfully refunded. Better try it."

"I don't want any, I say."

"If you don't think it will work, I can give you the most convincing proofs that you are mistaken."

"Go 'long. I haven't any use for it."

"I see you haven't got 'em bad!"

"Got 'em bad! Sir, what do you mean?"

"I was saying that you ain't bad yet. But don't neglect 'em if you don't want to be as speckled as a duck egg."

"Me! me freckled? Get out with you, you impudent man."

"If them ain't freckles on your nose I never saw any."

"Take yourself off instantly. Go, I say, or I'll call the police."

"Better try the Magical Instantaneous Eliminator before it's too late."

"Ugh! you nasty—"

"Here's some of my World-Renowned Pimple Subjugator. It'll take the pimples off that boy there so you wouldn't know him in two days."

"Police! Police!"

"It's too bad, though, that nothing will cure his cross-eyes or turnup nose."

"Ugh! you brute. I could——"

But she never said what she could, but slammed the door shut with a crash and threw herself on the bed and cried with vexation until dinner-time.

"How crusty and disagreeable some women are," muttered the gentle Eliminator man as he passed through the front gate.

At the next house the patient sufferer said to the fairy who came to the door: "Madam, I am selling the deservedly popular and ever successful Potent Hair Crimping Fluid."

"No, I don't want any."

"I am also selling the famous Magical Instantaneous Freckle Eliminator, but I saw at once by your very fine complexion that you are not in need of any such article. Let me sell you a bottle of the Hair Crimping Fluid."

"Well, I don't know."

"I can't help smiling to think that the lady next door to you, to whom I tried to sell a bottle of the Eliminator, denied up and down that she's freckled."

"Denied that she's freckled?"

"Indeed she did."

"Why, she's the freckeldest object I ever saw, and she knows it."

"I couldn't help thinking so myself."

"She's a vain, stuck-up thing, anyway."

"I dare say she is. I'm pretty sure I can tell when I meet a real lady."

"How much did you say this is?"

"One dollar and a half a bottle, madam."

"Well, I guess I'll try a bottle."

"If I hadn't failed to catch the first woman on the Eliminator I wouldn't have caught the other on the Crimping Fluid, and, bless their souls, they're both the same thing," muttered the meek and low-spirited peddler as he passed on.

A Man Lives Eighteen Hours with a Broken Neck.

A gentleman named Miller, residing at the corner of Park and John streets, Second ward, and aged about 60 years, was engaged in picking cherries at Mr. Pfohl's, near by, and while doing so a limb broke and he fell to the ground, a distance of only ten or twelve feet, striking on his shoulders and the back of his head. This occurred about 10 o'clock in the morning. Miller was taken to his residence, and Dr. Whedon was called. When the doctor reached the house, and made personal examination, he found that Miller had suffered a dislocation of the neck at the base of the brain and at the upper part of the spine. He could hear and understand, but could not speak. Dr. Whedon, on further examination, found that when the man's head and neck were pulled into the natural position he could not only understand and hear, but could talk as well. For about two hours the neck remained in its dislocated condition, and most of the time persons were employed in holding the head and neck in position, his mental faculties being in their natural state. Doctors who visited the house during the afternoon declared that not in the history of the country has such a case ever happened before. A dressing consisting of bandages and weights was applied to the patient's head to keep the neck extended. The injured man died about 4 o'clock Sunday morning, and previous to his death he became paralyzed in his right side. He lived eighteen hours with a broken neck!—Syracuse (N. Y.) Courier.

A Turkish General's Amusement.

A correspondent of the Manchester Examiner found Abdul Kerim, the Turkish Commander-in-Chief, sitting in front of his tent at Shumla, smoking a long amber-mouthed pipe and watching a wrestling match. On the green sward three couples were engaged, their heads bare, their bodies greased and, save a wrapping around the loins, without clothing. While two of the wrestlers were making guarded approaches, another couple were locked in an embrace that was as close as the oil on their skins would admit of; and two more, prone upon the ground, were still clasping each other like writhing serpents. Now and again an attendant sprung forward to throw a few drops of water on one of the couples, or with a dirty cloth to wipe the perspiration from their faces; and when the round was over an officer presented to the competitors a few piasters in paper money with the compliments of the Commander-in-Chief.

The Radish in Japan.

The one vegetable which serves all purposes, and seems to be absolutely indispensable to every Japanese, whether high or low, is the radish. They have developed it to gigantic proportions, the roots often three feet long and three inches in diameter. The color is always white. They eat it raw with salt; they boil and serve it as we do turnips; they pickle it in brine, tops and roots, and consume the result in vast quantities; they dry the tops and roots and feed upon them, and, worst of all, they hang them on poles in the fields to freeze and thaw all winter, and then consider the shriveled remains worth eating.

A cloud-burst may be a serious thing in the Cheyenne region, where the streams run down from the mountains. Recently there was a sudden and uncommonly heavy fall of rain there. The dry bed of the creek, on which no water had flowed for six years, suddenly became a river fifteen feet deep.

A Few Words of Wisdom.

For all who are seeking new homes in the West. If you are going to change your location, by all means you should keep on about the same latitude as where you formerly lived for in this way you will escape the severe climatic changes in the weather incident to the extreme North or South, having none of these things to contend with, your self and family are healthy and you become a producer at once, consequently soon independent; on the other hand should you listen to the many glowing accounts of the sunny South, or the mild climate of the North, and thus be induced to try your fortunes there, you will find the reality is not all your fancy painted it. If you go South it usually takes about two years to get acclimated to the climate, during which time, not being able to work, yourself and family are consumers, besides being constantly exposed to the malarial fevers which abound there, and the experience of many is that they return discouraged, leaving not a few loved ones beneath the sod in the sunny South. Therefore, in going West keep on about the same latitude which will insure health and happiness. There are most excellent lands in Northern Missouri on the line of the Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. and in Kansass, Nebraska and Colorado, "just as cheap and good as the sun ever shown upon," why not accept a certainty rather than run the risk of losing all? Through day and sleeping cars are run from Toledo, Ohio, via the Wabash R'y and Quincy to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas city, and from Chicago via Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., whereby all arre furnished firstclass accomodations.

Notes and Items of Early Times

BY MAJOR M'FADIN.

All aboard for lake Manitou. Kilkomid had become so fat living high on venison, fish, honey and small game, that he could not travel, and we had to leave him and a few others to keep camp while we went over to the lake. Our party consisted of two indians, two squaws, Othello and Parthena, three little Indians, three ponies and two dogs. It would have done your soul good to have seen the procession. The ponies were loaded down with everything, and the little Indians on top, and the rest walked, and I watched my chance and took it afoot and brought up the rear to see that nothing was lost. Single file, turning neither to the right or to the left for anything. Consequently the first thing we run into was a hornet's nest, which stampeded the ponies, and made them run off, scattering goods and Indians for half a mile. I hurried up and helped catch the ponies, and gather up the traps. No body hurt except a little Indian got his arm broke. We wrapped his little arm up in some willow bark and moss. He stood it manfully, and never whimpered. I had to draw my breath as true as a hair to keep from laughing when the ponies run off as the Indians do not like to be laughed at. On the way we found a bee tree in a white oak, fixed an Indian ladder, got up, cut out the honey, and got about two gallons, which we put into a sack made out of a ground hog's skin, and fastened it to a pony and started on. After traveling about fiften or twenty miles we arrived at the west end of the lake, where there is a small island near the shore. We found a good large wigwam, or bark hut, standing near the lake, that they leave standing for a summer residence whenever they visit the lake. The lake is called by the Indians Lake Manitou, or Devil's lake, and for hundreds of years back the Indians have been afraid to camp or stay about the lake much, as they believed that it was the home of the Devil or evil Spirit. These Indians had become so that they were not afraid to camp or fish about the lake, unless a storm came up.

I will now proceed to tell you how they got that idea or belief that there was an evil Spirit in the lake, and well they might think so, and you might think so too when I tell you of the monster that inhabited that lake from time immemorial, and how even white men were almost scared to death at what they saw at different times. When the white men first came to the lake, the Indians told them wonderful stories of what was in it. Now for the facts: In 1829 the first mill was built at the outlet of the lake, and the men who worked on the dam several times saw something rise up out of the lake six or seven feet, as large around as a man and of a dark color, and make a great splash in the water and disappear again, which had such an effect that none of them would go into the lake to swim. It seemed that it did not show itself very often, not being seen again for several years. In 1837 it came up near Joshua Lindsey, who was fishing in the lake, and scared him so that he broke for the shore and would never go on the lake again In 1843, Peter Schroeder, an old settler, was in his canoe with a gig looking for fish and saw something on the bottom of the lake ten or eleven feet long, that looked like a log. He ran his gig down to it to see what it was, and it began to move off, and he broke for the shore,' and that settled him. In 1847, Robert Newel was out with his two daughter in a canoe on the lake fishing, and it reared up close by them and splashed water all over them, and scared them that they could hardly get ashore. A few years later a young man was watching for ducks and saw what he supposed to be a log floating in the lake. After a while the thing reared up and dove down. I will now come to the point: In August of 1854, in a very dry time, when the lake was very low, two men were out in a canoe with their gigs looking for fish in the shallow places. In pushing through the rushes and reeds where the water was about three or four feet deep, they came upon the monster shoveling or diging in the mud. One of the men got scared and wanted to leave, but the other sunk his gig into it and held on and it towed canoe and all out into deep water, and at last went so far he had to let go of his gig handle, which disappeared. After two or three hours, and when returning they saw away over on the other side of the lake something sticking out of the water that looked like a gig handle, and went to it, and sure enough, they had given it a death wound, and it had grounded and died on the other shore. They had hard work to get it out, and come to look at it, it was a perfect monster, about eleven feet long and as big around as a man, with a bill or shovel about four feet long and about a foot wide. It was put up and looked like a catfish, except its bill, and no wonder that it had scared the poor Indians. The head was cut off and brought to Logansport by John T. Burns (now dead) and given to Dr. Culbertson and I think Dr. Faber, and thus that splendid specimen of an almost unknow fish was mutulated and lost to science. Whether that was the only one that ever inhabited the lake, we cannot tell, but I have never heard of anything like it being seen since, and perhaps it was the last of its race. Within the last year something like it has been caught in Lake Erie. It was only about five feet long, and created quite a sensation, and if such a fish would create an excitement among scientific men, what would our Lake Manitou monster, eleven feet long with a bill or shovel three feet long and a foot wide, have done? And so ended the evil spirit of Lake Manitou.

The first night at the Lake betokened a storm. The wind raised; the black clouds began to roll up into the heavens; the lightning flashed, and the thunder roared. The Indians were scare and said the evil spirit was coming, and wanted to move back from the lake about a mile, but I told them no, that we would stay right there and see it out, and that if there was any bad spirits about I wanted to see one, as I never had in my life. After awhile they became reconciled, and concluded to stay, but were very uneasy, but the night came on and a terrible night it was. It was one glare of light from the lightning, and peal on peal of thunder, some of the Indians fell flat on the ground and called on the good spirit. While the lightning was flashing I asked one of the Indians to show me Manitou, and he pointed across the lake and said "Don't you see him?" but I could see nothing unless it was a black stump. The waves lashed the shore and made all kinds of noise, and I must admit that I was getting kind of shaky myself, when at last came a glare and flash of lightning that blinded us all, and struck a tree close by, and shivered it into a thousand pieces, but hurt no one except scorching the ponies some and taking the tails off some fox squirrels that were in the tree. It was so close that I could smell fire and brimstone for a week afterwards. This scared the Indians so badly that they were about to break and run, but I told them it was about over, and that lightning never strikes twice in the same place. We were camped under a huge beech, and lightning never strikes that kind of a tree. And so it was, the wind went down, the clouds disappeared, and the moon rose in all his glorious brightness, the harbinger of peace. The next morning was the Sabbath day, and the Indians talked about going fishing, but I told them that we had better not, as it was the Lord's day, and the good spirit had protected us from the storm the night before, and that if we hunted or fished on Sunday it would displease the good spirit, but one of them said he did not see any difference in the days, and that the bees, ants, animals and birds made no difference, but I told them that animals were not held accountable for what they done, as they had no soul and did not live hereafter, and that man had an immortal soul that lived for ever and never died. It was hard for them to understand that, but at last one of them ask me what they should do to inherit eternal life, and be happy hereafter. I told them how Christ had died for sinners who would repent and believe. I told them how our Savior, who was without sin, was baptized by John in the River Jordan, and if he had to be baptized that the law might be fulfilled, how much more us poor sinners required it. The Indians were well pleased with what I said, and I was beginning to think about starting a church, when along came a little man with a plug hat on and on horseback. He said he lived way down at the mouth of the Big Indian, and was looking for cattle. He dismounted, and we gave him something to eat. We got on to religion again, and he said he believed that all would be saved, and I told that was hardly fair for the man who disobeyed the laws of God and man all his life and then set down hereafter with the poor and humble followers of the Savior who had trusted long in his promise that he would reward the faithful and good hereafter, and I told him that Christ did not die for every scalawag who disobeyed Him, but that he died for all those who obeyed His laws, and lived a good and just life. He said He had forgiven the thief on the cross. Yes, but He did not until the thief had said: "Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." He then said that the Prodigal Son had even been forgiven. Yes, but he was not forgiven until he returned home and threw himself on his father's neck and weeping, said: "I have sinned against the and against heaven." I then told him of Lazurus and Dives, who dressed in purple and fine linen and fared sumptiously every day, and when Lazurus lay at his gate and fain would have picked up the crumbs of his table, and how they both died, and the different places assigned to them in the great hereafter, &c. At last he concluded that he must hunt up his cattle, that had either strayed or been stolen, and from all I know he is still hunting for his cattle, as I never heard of him afterwards, but I do hope that he got home to kingdom come all right on the broad gauge, but it is a dangerous road to travel if it is a wide track.

But here I am running off into theology again and you will get tired of it. I will get back to my story again, but here let me say that the great mistake of my life was in going into the law and politics, instead of being an humble follower and worker for the cause of the Savior, and if the good Lord spares my life I may yet get back into the ark of safety, and make some amends for my long neglect of him and his.

After spending the day pleasantly, walking round the lake gatering flowers, we took supper off of dried venison and honey, and concluded the day by singing:

Oh, to grace how great a debtor
Daily I am constrained to be;
Let thy goodness like a fetter
Bind my wandering heart to thee.

And retired to rest early so that we might be ready for the next day's battle of life. More anon.

RAILROADS.

The Men On a Strike—Their Daily Lives and Doings.

A writer in the New York Exchange says: A gentleman who knows a good deal about the character, training and duties of the men who constitute a very large majority of the employes on our railroads in every department, gives the following details about them: "The men engaged in the present 'strike' are principally engineers, firemen, and brakemen. What are their duties? The engineer has first to learn his trade as a mechanic, which costs him years of toil at a nominal compensation. Then he generally becomes a fireman at $40 a month, and finally he is promoted to the footboard, and becomes the pilot at the helm of his train, from the time he takes hold of the 'throttle' until the train reaches its destination, a hundred to a hundred and fifty miles distant, he shoulders, more personal responsibility of life and property, he encounters more personal risk and exhausts more nervous energy than any man attached to the corporation, from the president down to the lowest subordinate; and for this service, requiring intelligence, mechanical skill of a high order, and involving imminent personal hazard, he receives from $2.50 to $3.50 per day, or trip. But this is not all—he must stay with his engine, if delayed by accident upon the road, and in my own experience I have often known one of these faithful men to be without sleep and almost without food for thirty-six hours, and all for $3.50. If he wishes to insure his life for the benfit of his wife and children, he is either told by the insurer that his company does not take such risks, or is charged with a premium which he cannot pay. The engineer drives an iron horse over an iron track, and treachery is the very nature of iron.

Again, I venture the assertion from careful inquiry and observation that the active life of a locomotive engineer working in that capacity cannot be safely estimated at over twelve years. Within this short span, taken out of the prime of his life, he so exhausts his nervous power that he cannot be regarded as perfectly reliable and self-posessed. I speak of the rule, not the exceptions. Show me an engineer who has run an engine for fifteen years and I will show you a man care worn and permaturely old. If any one doubts let him take his stand at the throttle of an engine and let him remain there from six to ten hours each day, with one hand directing the movement of the train and with his eyes straining intently forward for the possible signal of danger. Such is the life of an engineer.

Similar to it, but by no means equal in responsibility, nor exacting the same skill, is the fireman's life. The personal risk and danger are the same, and I have often been touched in observing the intimate friendship which is apt to develope and ripen between the engineer and his fireman. They share a common peril, and each watches for the safety of his companion as well as his own, and both for that of the precious cargo of life and property behind and dependent upon them.

The duties of the brakemen are too well understood to require any special description. They are arduous, they involve constant exposure in passing from car to car in all hours of the day and night, and upon freight trains often chilled and blinded by rain and smoke; creeping over the roofs of cars from brake to brake, upon the shrill summons of the engineer, to avoid danger, of the nature of which they know nothing For this service and risk and exposure they receive from $1.25 to $1.40 per day, or trip. But this is not all; and at the risk of making myself tedious, and only that your readers may understand and decide intelligently whether these men are altogether in the wrong or not, I will state further, that the three classes of employes referred to are subject to daily expenses not attaching to any other branch of railway service, but which seriously diminishes their net wages. They are away from their homes more than onehalf of their time, and when so away they must provide themselves with food and lodging at their own cost. This necessary outlay absorbs no small fraction of their daily or monthly pay.

Very many of our roads are in the hands of federal and state courts, whose record shows that the pay roll of the employes are terribly in arrears, while they should have been promptly paid in preference to bondholders or any other class of creditors. So they are left to the mercy of the small grocers and shop keepers to furnish them food and raiment upon their credit in the corporations, and now the employe is refused further credit, and is at the same time called upon to pay up his back dues, which he cannot do.

THE EAST.

A HARTFORD dispatch states that a complete reorganization of the Charter Oak Life Insurance Company has been consummated, according to an arrangement that had been agreed upon between Commissioner Stedman, the company's officers, and the investigating committee, representing the local insurance companies and policy-holders. The result is that the old management is completely wiped out. Ex-Gov. Jewell, late Postmaster General, was elected President of the reorganized company.

THE Lackawanna coal region of Pennsylvania is one vast theater of idleness, the striking miners having compelled a total suspension of work, both in the mines and on the railroads that carry the coal product to market. Gov. Hartranft has offered to assist the mayor of Scranton in the enforcement of law and the protection of life and property, but the Mayor fears to avail himself of the help of the State militia, and declines to take the responsibility. Serious trouble is anticipated.

HERBERT BLANCHARD, of Savory, Mass., was ordered to discontinue his visits to the daughter of E. Trask. He met the gentleman in church last Sunday, shot him dead, fatally wounding a brother, and missed his third shot at the woman.

A FRIGHTFUL accident occurred at Totten & Co.'s foundry, in Pittsburgh, last week, by which ten men were seriously injured, two it is feared, fatally. The men were molders, and were engaged in making a large hollow casting. The core, composed of sand, was wet, and, when the metal was poured into it, a terrific explosion occurred, with the result above stated.... William H. Vanderbilt, President of the New York Central railroad, has issued a circular, in which he says that out of 12,000 of his employes less than 500 allowed themselves to be carried away by the late excitement. These have been discharged and are not to be again employed. In acknowledgment of the good faith of the men employed in operating the road, Mr. Vanderbilt proposes to divide $100,000 among them, and promises to increase their pay as soon as the business of the road will justify it.

THE WEST.

THE time of the annual Western fairs is approaching. The Chicago Exposition will open Aug. 29, and close Oct. 13. The Illinois State Fair will open at Freeport, Sept. 17, closing on the 22d. Iowa State Fair, at Cedar Rapids, Sept. 17 to 22; Wisconsin State Fair, at Janesville, Sept. 10 to 14; Michigan, at Jackson, Sept. 17 to 21; Minnesota, Sept. 3 to 8; Nebraska, at Lincoln, Sept. 24 to 28; St. Louis, Oct. 1 to 6; Ohio, at Columbus, Sept. 10 to 14; Indiana, at Indianapolis, Sept. 24 to 29.... According to the Chicago Times, the casualties resulting from the riots in that city foot up as follows: Eighteen rioters killed, 16 fatally and 16 seriously wounded; 1 policeman killed and 10 wounded.

THE remains of Gen. G. A. Custer and comrades, which Col. Mike Sheridan was sent out to the Yellowstone country to secure, arrived at St. Paul last week, in charge of the United States Express Company. They were closed in neat caskets and directed as follows: Gen. G. A. Custer, West Point; Col. W. W. Cook, Hamilton, Ont.; Lieut. Reilly, Washington, D. C.; Dr. DeWolf, Norwalk, Ohio; and Col. Thomas Custer, Lieut. A. E. Smith, Capt. Yates, and Lieut. McIntosh, Fort Leavenworth.

IN the southern portion of Minnesota large bodies of tramps have been causing people great annoyance and committing numerous depredations. Recently a body of 200 stopped a train near Lyle, in Mower county. Another party entered the village of Leroy, and, entering several stores, carried off such goods and as many as they could.

THE Chicago Tribune says: "From all parts of the West the farmers send words of cheer about the growing crops. Warm, dry weather is rapidly ripening the spring wheat and oats, both grains promising the finest yield for years, and the same favorable conditions are enabling the reapers to put in full time in the rye and barley ready for harvest."

A DISPATCH from Portland, Ore., says: "Gen. Howard is at present at Kamia, awaiting the arrival of Maj. Sanford. As soon as that officer joins him, Howard will take all his available force and push vigorously after Joseph and White Bird, who have already crossed Bitter Root mountain by way of the Lolo trail. He will go through to Missoula as rapidly as his command can move. He will have in the neighborhood of 500 men. Another force under command of Gen. Wheaton will leave Fort Lapwai, and, moving north, pass through the Spokane country and cross over into Montana through Sahon pass. It is confidently believed that this movement will result in the capture of the entire band of hostiles."

EIGHT of the striking employes of the Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw railroad were arraigned before Judge Drummond, of the United States Circuit Court, at Chicago, last week, for obstructing the movement of trains. Most of them confessed the violent conduct alleged, and the proof as to all of them was clear enough; and, after listening to their counsel's presentation of extenuating circumstances, the Judge sentenced the ring-leader, Mack, to four months' imprisonment in jail, and the others to two months each. A fine of $50 was also entered against each of the rioters, the imprisonment to continue until the fines are paid. The Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw road is in the hands of a receiver, and the strikers were warned, during the existence of the troubles, that no interference with the running of trains would be tolerated by the United States authorities.

THE First National Bank of Georgetown, Col., has closed its doors.....The Governor of Illinois has advised the Sheriffs of counties in the State in which riots have lately occurred to arrest all rioters against whom evidence can be obtained, and have their cases presented to the grand juries as soon as possible.

GENERAL.

SITKA, which was recently abandoned by the United States troops, is in sore distress on account of an Indian insurrection somewhere in the icebergs. The San Francisco people protest vigorously against the dispatch of a revenue cutter from that point, fearing another hoodlum raid on the Chinese.

THE thirty-seven Russian Protestants and their children who were recommended by the Czar to emigrate to this country instead of Brazil, where Dom Pedro desired them to go, were shipped to their destination from New York last week. The new colony is to be located near Lincoln, Neb.... Fifty carpenters have just sailed from New York for Liverpool, Eng. They go out under a year's contract with a building firm in Manchester, and are to receive 6 shillings a day.

EX-GOV. NOYES, United States Minister to France, has sailed for Paris....In accordance with a circular issued some time ago by the Northern Railway Company of Canada, the wages of the men on that line in receipt of more than $1 a day have been reduced 10 per cent. The men submit, though dissatisfied.

WASHINGTON.

SECRETARY EVARTS left last week for his farm in Vermont, to be absent a month. He expects the President to visit him in about two weeks.

THE Hon. Joseph Segar, of Virginia, has been appointed arbitrator on the part of the United States before the United States and Spanish commission organized in 1871 by virtue of the agreement of the two Governments for the settlement of certain claims of citizens in this country on account of wrongs and injuries committed by the Spanish authorities in Cuba.

IT is announced through the State Department in Washington, by the United States Minister at Paris, that citizens of this country traveling in Algeria will no longer require passports. Two Americans were recently annoyed at Bona, in Africa, because they had no passports, and the new rule of exemption is the consequence.... A Washington dispatch of the 1st inst. says: "The total popular subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan were $6,519,700; total received by the syndicate, $60,000,000; total subscribed in London reported to date, $10,200,000; making a total of $76,519,700. Against this amount calls have been issued for the redemption of $40,000,000 of 5-20 bonds of 1865, and $5,000,000 of gold has been paid into the treasury for redemption purposes, leaving $31,519,700 of bonds yet to be called."... The President has appointed Henry W. Hilliard, of Georgia, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Brazil.

POLITICAL.

A WASHINGTON telegram says: "A delegation from the Edgefield and Ellenton districts, representing both Republicans and Democrats, have called to lay before the President the proceedings of a mass-meeting of citizens representing all classes therein, at which each side agreed hereafter to live in peace with each other, and where each pledged the other that political difficulties should cease, and that local peace and order should hereafter prevail. In view of this agreement, all parties to it united in asking the President to dismiss the cases tried by Chief Justice Waite, and at the same time stated that the authorities propose to dismiss a number of political suits begun in local courts against colored Republicans as an offset to the arrest of white Democrats. The President expressed much satisfaction at the condition of affairs as reported, and promised to take into consideration the request made."

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

THE French and Italian Consuls at Gallipoli have asked their Governments to send men-of-war to that port for the protection of the Christian population, on account of the fanatical excitement of the Mohammedans.... A Constantinople dispatch says: "Great military activity prevails. Volunteers are everywhere enrolling. Recruiting booths have been established in various quarters of Constantinople. Parties of volunteers with bands and flags are parading the streets."....Suleiman Pasha has been defeated, with the loss of ten guns, and at last accounts was retreating toward Adrianople.... The Russians destroyed six railway bridges between Jamboli and Philippopolis. A LONDON telegram says: "The English fleet is not to enter the Bosphorus, because it is supposed Russia would not be slow in seizing Gallipoli and the Dardanelles forts. Peace thus becomes daily not only more probable but sensibly nearer."....It is said the Turks lost 8,000 killed and wounded at Karabunnar.... Of 150 Bulgarian prisoners recently taken to Constantinople, fifteen were immediately shot.

A CABLE dispatch reports an important engagement near Rustchuk between the Czarowitch and Ahmed Eyoub Pasha. The Turkish corps is reported to have been defeated with a loss of thirty guns, ten standards, and 5,000 prisoners. Later official dispatches confirm the foregoing. The number of Turkish prisoners is now given as 8,000....A correspondent with the Russian troops at Kustendji telegraphs as follows: "Frightful cruelties have been perpetrated by the Circassians in Northern Turkey. Three thousand Bulgarians have just arrived there, half starved and naked. Many are horribly wounded, and have marched three days without food to escape the Circassians and Bashi-Bazouks."

A CORRESPONDENT at Erzeroum announces that another forward movement of the Russians has commenced. The concentration of the army of the Grand Duke Michael to the northward of Kars has evidently been planned. ....A severe battle was fought at Plevna, on the 30th of July. The cannonade lasted two hours. Then a general engagement ensued which lasted until 10 o'clock at night, when, according to Turkish accounts, the Russians retreated. Prisoners say the Russians numbered 60,000 infantry and three regiments of cavalry, and had fifty guns.... A London correspondent telegraphs that communications have recently been passing between the Governments of England and Austria, and it is even asserted that a convention has been entered into by them regarding the mutual defense of Constantinople.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

BISMARCK recently to a deputation of Protestant clergy of Wurtemburg spoke hopefully concerning the ecclesiastical conflict. He said the Government having enacted the necessary laws, quietly stood on the defensive, and could afford to wait for the papacy to accept the situation.... The first stone of the American Episcopal Church at Geneva, Switzerland, was laid by Gen. Grant on the 27th of July.

THE masons of London have struck work for a reduction of hours and increase of wages. ....A Madrid dispatch says that arrangements have been made with the promoters of the last Cuban loan for an advance of $25,000,000 for the expenses of the next campaign. The advance will be guaranteed by the colonial customs.

SAMUEL WARREN, the English author, is dead.....A Jamaica telegram reports a revolution and two-days' conflagration at Port au Prince, Hayti.... A Paris dispatch says the split in the Bonapartist ranks is as complete and wide as the rupture between the Bonapartists and Legitimists.... A dispatch from Vienna states that at a meeting of the Ministerial Council a resolution was adopted virtually ordering the mobilization of the army. The resolution authorizes Count Andrassy to effect the mobilization within limited bounds, should he deem such course necessary.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE.

Progress o the Great Railroad War—Matters Quieting Down.

Dispatches of the 28th report everything quiet in Chicago. There was no more rioting, and no fears of any, the mob being thoroughly cowed. Trains were running on nearly all the roads, there was a general resumption of business and return of workmen to their employments, and a complete subsidence of all excitement. The reports from other points were of the same tenor. All the Eastern roads had resumed the running of trains; even the Pittsburgh mob had been forced by the strong arm of the military, under command of Gen. Brown, to surrender the property of the Pennsylvania road.

TRAINS began moving out of Pittsburgh on the 30th ult. under military guard, and met with no obstruction. The State and Federal troops occupied commanding positions in the city, and many arrests were being made of those concerned in the great riot. At St. Louis, business was beginning to look up, though the scarcity of coal prevented work in some of the manufactories. At Chicago everything was quiet, though large bodies of men still held out on the wages question, and there was much derangement of business in consequence. At San Francisco the mob was under control, and all fears of a general outbreak dispelled. The strikers were still defiant at Columbus, Ohio, Fort Wayne, Ind., and a few other points.

AN eminent French physician says that the decrease of dyspepsia and bilious complaints in Paris is owing to the increased consumption of apples in that city.

CAPT. CRAPO'S CRUISE.

Forty Days Crossing the Atlantic in a Whaleboat—A Hazardous Undertaking Successfully Accomplished.

[From the Boston Globe.]

The arrival of Capt. Crapo and wife in the whaleboat New Bedford at Penzance, after an Atlantic voyage of forty days, has already been chronicled. The boat is a little more than nineteen feet and a half long and six feet and a half wide, built generally after the whaleboat model, but with more "sheer" and broader and deeper than most boats of her class. Her foremast is eighteen feet from the deck, and her mainmast seventeen feet high. She has a foresail, mainsail, and a square-sail and staysail to take advantage of light winds. Of course the little vessel was made in the most substantial manner, so as to ride out the rough seas. There are no bulwarks, and only life-lines were rigged, and in the Atlantic voyage the water often came over the deck. Capt. Crapo steered sitting in the after-hatchway, and was protected by a canvas boot in rough weather. Of course, when the sea was very high the boat was allowed to lie to, with a drag. Three heavy gales were experienced during the passage, and for fifteen days the two passengers were compelled to wait for the violence of the storm to subside. A good deal of their clothing was washed overboard, and much discomfort was endured; but the little craft rode out the storms nobly. Several times the venturesome Captain and his wife were spoken, and there was an agreeable addition to the provisions of the New Bedford at all such meetings. Capt. Crapo kept his longitude regularly by dead reckoning, and did not go far out of the regular course of the transatlantic steamers. His wife was as enthusiastic as himself in carrying out the project, and in the latter part of the voyage did much to help the Captain, whose left hand had become almost useless by constant steering. At 11 o'clock Saturday night the coast of Cornwall was seen by the weary voyagers, and the adventurous Captain and his equally daring wife landed at Penzance Sunday morning. Wind and weather favoring, they proposed to proceed to London yesterday, and doubtless "the merry mariners of England" will give them a hearty welcome to the great metropolis.

Sick Railroads.

Late statistics gathered from the Railroad Age up to July 1 show that the Hospital for Infirm, Diseased and Decrepid Railroads is still kept busy and full. The courts are acting as physicians, receivers as nurses, and the Sheriffs as Coroners and keepers of the morgue. The prevailing disease is general collapse under the effort to carry loads too heavy for the constitution of the chronic invalids. The diagnosis is pretty much the same in all cases, and experience has proved that the heroic treatment is the best. As long as the patients are permitted to totter along feebly under their load with the help of stimulants, they grow weaker and weaker till tonic no longer serves the purpose. The only radical cure that has been found is to throttle the patient, throw him to the ground, strip off his cumbersome harness, put him in a straight jacket for awhile, and then start him out fresh with a load somewhat commensurate with what vitality there is left in him. While this treatment has been found to be disagreeable to those who have to assume part of the burdens which the decrepid and broken-down invalids throw off, it has also been found that the invalids themselves regain compensatory strength, and become able to serve both the public and their new owners.

During the past six months of the current year foreclosures have been made and sales ordered on fifteen roads, with an aggregate capital stock of $46,476,064 and debt of $85,106,500. During the same period receivers have been appointed for sixteen roads, with a capital stock and indebtedness of $169,686,292; and the same six months have seen the actual sale of thirty-two roads, with stock amounting to $49,035,714, and debts amounting to $78,710,214. The total result is that the first half of this year has sufficed to wipe out and reorganize, or at least inaugurate this process, in the case of sixty-three railroads, with a total mileage of 7,225 miles, and invested capital (represented by stocks and bonds and floating debt) of $429,014,884. The railroad mortality for the entire year of 1876 was seventy-six roads, only a few more than during the six months of this year, but the mileage was 11,422 miles, and the represented capital $755,848,000, or nearly double as much.

The benefit of this squeezing process can scarcely be doubted. A large part of the vast railway system of the United States was constructed on the Credit-Mobilier plan. That is, the capital stock represented nil as an investment; and the bonds represented usually double what the roads ought to have cost. Compression is necessary to eliminate this fictitious part of the capital represented by the stock and bonds. There is only one way to get rid of it. The mortgages must be foreclosed when default of payment is absolute and the railroads sold for what they are worth now. They will then become legitimate investments, and the great bulk of the railroads of this country, properly managed, will earn a fair profit on this basis.—Chicago Tribune.

The Hidden Rock in the Pacific.

The wreck of the Pacific Mail steamship City of San Francisco on a submerged rock off what is known as Tartar shoals, on the Mexican coast, recalls an incident which occurred on the Pacific Mail steamship China on the upward passage from Panama previous to the last trip of the ill-fated steamship. The story is told by one of the passengers of the China—a responsible and very intelligent gentleman. He says that during the night previous to the arrival of the China at Acapulco (when she must have been in about the same position as that in which the City of San Francisco was when she came to grief) many of the passengers were awakened by a peculiar thud and grating of the ship's bottom, as if she had struck against something hard. It was his firm belief that the vessel trembled from stem to stern. Next morning, on the arrival of the vessel at Acapulco, he inquired of the officers what was the cause of the peculiar sensation he had experienced in the conduct of the vessel at the time referred to. He was then informed that the vessel had not come into collision with anything, but that the singular phenomenon was due to the fact that the helmsman had lost temporary control of the ship. The China is a wooden vessel, and the amount of friction on a rock which would tear an irreparable rent in the plating of an iron steamship, such as the City of San Francisco, might do her practically no damage. The condition of the tide and other circumstances may have been favorable to the China also. Since that voyage the China has not been in the dry dock, consequently the hull has not been subject to any examination.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Jenny Lind at Fifty-Six.

We translate from a French journal (La Liberte) a curious and interesting letter from Jenny Lind, the Swedish Nightingale, now 56 years of age, written by her at Dresden, where she now lives, to a friend in Paris:

"I want to speak to you of my baby. Well, I must tell you that God has given my dear husband and myself an adorable little girl born on the 31st of March last. She is the perfect image of health and happiness. She laughs and crows in a way to delight all sympathetic hearts. We have given her a little Catharine among her other names, but we call her Jenny, I need not say in honor of whom. Our boy Walter will be 4 years old the 9th of August next. He is an intelligent child—very intelligent, very religious, and, when he has been naughty, it is touching to see the way he prays God to make him good again—poor little chicken. He adores me, obeys me, and I understand the child completely, for he is exactly like myself in nature, very impressionable, active, gay, high-tempered, affectionate, shy, good-natured, quick to learn, remembering all that he learns, preferring to the finest toys a horrible old doll, because it is one with which he has longest played, caring nothing about dress, but preferring to be loved rather than admired. Is he musical? Not the least in the world. That is my great despair. But he is religious, and I think he will be a Christian. As to the baby I cannot say as much. The little creature eats, drinks, laughs, mumbles over her shoes, and I have nothing to say against her character. My husband is now in England looking out for a residence, for we intend on account of the children to settle in that country.

"Yours affectionately,

"JENNY LIND."

As our Paris contemporary observes, this is certainly a very bright and maternal letter from an artist who is well on toward her three-score years.—New York World.

The Labor Question.

In the last number of the North American Review, Mr. David A. Wells has a paper in which he compares the number of persons required at present to produce a given amount of marketable goods as compared with forty years ago. In 1838, 231 operatives were required to do the work in the Boott cotton mill at Lowell, Mass. By working 76¼ hours per week they were enabled to work the machinery to its full capacity. In 1876, by the aid of improved machinery, 90 persons, working 60 hours per week, were able to manufacture a larger number of yards of cloth. In this instance one person does the work of more than three persons, the time being estimated by hours. The same is true of the boot and shoe industry, only one-half as many hands being required to manufacture the boots and shoes used in 1876 as were needed in 1860. In fact, in all lines of manufacturing business, improvements in labor-saving machinery have dispensed with many hands. This in a measure accounts for the number of unemployed persons among the skilled artisans; but offers no solution to the problem of the superabundance of idle laborers. In England, where pauperism is reduced to an exact science, the cause has been traced to the numberless charitable institutions which offer a direct premium to idleness. Within the past years many similar institutions have been endowed in this country, and they doubtless have their effect in the promotion—through ill-management—of pauperism. But, with all unemployed persons to draw from, the farmers are complaining that they have had hard work to secure laborers. Tramps by the hundred line the roads and beg their way from house to house, but, like the lilies, they toil not. Until the the tramp system is broken up by a stringent law of general application the labor question will remain in a great measure unsolved.

Suicide of an Actor.

Thomas Placide, the last of a famous family of actors which was well-known to the theater-goers of America in the early years of the present century, committed suicide recently, at his residence at Tomi River, N. J., by shooting himself through the head. He died a few hours after firing the shot. In a letter addressed by him to an old friend he states that he was driven to desperation by the agonizing tortures which he suffered from cancer in the mouth, caused, it is said, by over-indulgence in smoking. He had been so ill for several weeks that it was not expected that he could survive more then a few days longer. "Tom" Placide, as he was familiarly known, was born in Charleston, in 1808. His father was Alexander Placide, and his mother was known on the stage as Mrs. Lafolle. The famous Harry Placide was his brother. In 1868, when he was 60 years of age, he married a lady with whom he had been in love when in his teens, and whom he had not previously seen for more than forty years. Meanwhile she had been twice married and twice widowed, having children by both her former husbands.—New York Times.

No Agreement Possible.

The Detroit Tribune tells this story: "An interesting scene occurred in the Detroit and Milwaukee depot yesterday, before a small audience of sympathetic and saddened spectators, resulting in the separation of a man named Decosta and his spouse, even while on their travels. Policeman Kinney endeavored to prevail upon them to reconcile their differences and keep on together, and Policeman O'Connor reinforced him with persuasive efforts to soften the asperity of the situation. But they both assured the policemen that it was no use, and both agreed on this brief outline of their marital history:

"Decosta makes wagons, a few miles out from Milwaukee. Two years ago he wooed and won and married Maggie [illegible], a pretty and pouty maid of 19 summers, and she doesn't look older than that now. He is 24. Last fall he gave way to jealousy, and she gave way to wrath, and she went to Syracuse, N. Y., to live with her mother again. Recently he wrote that life was dark to him without her, and he would forget the past and come to her. Her mother said: 'Yes, my daughter, by all means.' So he went to Syracuse, and they started together for Milwaukee. Coming through Canada yesterday, a gentleman on the seat behind her offered her a pictorial to look at. She smiled, and took it. She gazed around on him and said, 'How warm it is;' and he allowed it was very warm. Then he stepped around and raised the window of the seat in front of her, and expressed his solicitude as to the proper amount of atmospheric contact with her fair cheeks, and resumed his seat behind her. All this time Mr. Decosta remained silent and motionless beside her. She again gazed languidly around, smiled, and remarked to the stranger that this was Canada, and he even went so far as to admit that it was Canada. They saw him no more after arriving at Windsor; but the spirit of jealousy swelled supreme in Decosta's bosom till, on entering the depot on this side, it burst from its pent-up agony, and he wailed aloud, 'Frailty thy name is woman!' She told him he lied; that it wasn't her name, and he knew it. The dialogue waxed hot, till she strode around and headed off a man who was just about to buy a ticket to Milwaukee, sold him her coupon, and started straight back for Syracuse, while Mr. Decosta pursued his lonely way to Milwaukee, promising, as they parted again, to send on her feather bed before the nights grew cool. So she went east and he went west, leaving Kinney and O'Connor dismayed, shocked, and saddened at the failure of their missionary labors."

A Postoffice Incident.

A recent incident at the Lawrence postoffice illustrates the ease with which, from want of particularity in direction, a valuable letter may miscarry, with no lack of care on the part of the office, and no less exhibits moral obliquity in some members of the community. On Saturday night a person called for a letter at the general delivery, and on being told there was none to his address stated that one of our city clergymen had deposited for him, a few days previously, a letter containing $2.50 in cash. Upon further inquiry of the sender it appeared that the letter bore no street designation, only the man's name, and of the latter six different men were known at the office and by the carriers. Fortunately, one of the latter remembered recently delivering a drop-letter to one of the six. The letter had not been returned to the office, though the recipient must have known full well that the money was not intended for him. The carrier called upon him and asked the return of the letter. He was refused, the holder claiming that it contained no money, and, beside, how did the carrier know it was not for him? His persistent refusal was followed by calling in a police officer, and only from visions of the station house was the fellow induced to return the money he had wrongfully appropriated, and an hour afterward it was handed to the rightful owner of the same name. The thief—for he was no less than one—may think himself fortunate in escaping prosecution under the United States postal laws.—Lawrence (Mass.) American.

A Diamond With a History.

The papal tiara is sumptuously ornamented with precious stones. The cupola is formed of eight rubies, twenty-four pearls, and an emerald. The cross is composed of twelve brilliants. The lappets are of rubies and pearls. Two golden bands retain it in position when worn. The principal diamond in the tiara has "a strange, eventful history." It was purchased of the Great Mogul by Charles the Bold, of Burgundy, and was abandoned by him at the battle of Granson, 1476. A soldier found it, and was at first going to throw it away, but, deeming it a morsel of crystal, sold it to a cure for a crown. A citizen of Berne bought it from the latter for 3 crowns, and sold it for 5,000 ducats. It was sold again for 7,000, and was bought by the Duke of Milan for 14,500, and subsequently, in the sixteenth century, acquired by Pope Julius II., for 20,000. It is of the size of a small walnut. Of two other diamonds found on the field of Granson, one, valued at $600,000, ornaments the Austrian crown, and another is the famous Sancy, formerly a French crown jewel, and bought in 1865 from Prince Demidoff for $100,000 by Sir C. Jejeebhoy.

Coals for Newcastle.

A return to the land of their fathers in September next is proposed by a number of the colored population of New York. Actuated, no doubt, by the same motives which induced so many of their brethren in the South to emigrate to Africa some time since, a number of the most influential colored families have taken the matter to heart and have inaugurated a movement, which is looked on with favor, to return to the land whence their fathers came. That there is a future for Africa far above the conceptions of unthinking people is the text the inaugurators of the new movement preach from, and there is reason to believe that they will succeed in recruiting a goodly number of emigrants to join in the proposed fall exodus from New York. A public meeting is to be held next week in this city at which the matter will be considered, and Frederick Douglass will be on hand to acquaint his brethren with his views.—New York Herald.

Canadian Annexation.

It is strange that the people of the United States, with all their shrewdness and sagacity, do not realize the fact that the annexation of Canada is altogether out of the question. The sympathies and sentiment of Canadians are against it; their interests are opposed to it; the whole tendency, both of imperial and Canadian policy, has, for some time past, been in quite a contrary direction. Time was when there were Americans who thought that force would accomplish this object. They found out their mistake, and will never again, we imagine, be tempted to resort to such means for securing Canada's absorption into the Union. In later years some of them hoped to starve us into a surrender. But that effort failed, and, if an absurd fiscal policy on their side excites a little grumbling here, it is they who are the chief losers.—Toronto Globe.

A Blind Man's Love.

Last Thursday the Rev. J. D. Biggs officiated at a wedding of romantic interest. For a long time Mr. T. J. Hutchinson has loved Mrs. M. E. Hudson, both of this city, but he is totally blind, and for that reason felt a delicacy in making his love known. About the origin of this love nothing can be said. It could not be called "a love at first sight," but her voice was sweet and gentle, and its mild echoes penetrated to the blind man's heart, weighing him down with all the desponding sadness of hopeless love. In his grief he made a confidant of a lady friend, who divulged the secret to Mrs. Hudson, and carried the glad-tidings back to the melancholy lover that his passion was returned. The joy he felt can never be told. The minor matters were soon arranged, and the happy nuptials were celebrated as mentioned.—Springfield (Mo.) Advertiser.

A Humorist's Home.

Mr. Robert J. Burdette writes to Maj. Pond, of the Redpath Lecture Bureau:

BURLINGTON HAWK-EYE OFFICE, BURLINGTON, IOWA, July 13, 1877—Dear Mr. Pond: Under the best circumstances, I am a poor correspondent, and since your letter was received we have been having even more than our usual share of trouble. Sickness and suffering have never been out of our home for an hour since we had a home, and now the shadow of a greater trouble than all hangs over it. The baby has been and is very ill, and we fear every morning that the evening will find our home without a baby. It has been very hard to attend to business and write fun all this time, and I have had neither time nor energy to do anything more than my work on the paper. The subject of my new lecture is "Home." It is an old subject, but I believe I can say something new about it. Very truly yours,

ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

THE Germanizing of the French army advances apace. Hitherto it has been one of the traditions of the service that spectacles were unsoldierly. But the late war demonstrated, among other things, that men can fight as well with spectacles as without them—in many cases a good deal better. Dr. Perrin has submitted a report on the subject, and the French authorities have legalized the use of lunettes in all branches of the service.

CHICAGO MOBS.

An Account of the Rioting on the 26th of July—Fierce Encounters Between the Police and the Mob.

(From the Chicago Times.)

Daylight had scarce broken upon the town, when deputations began arriving in the vicinity of the Halsted street viaduct. Large crowds of men flocked to the tracks thereabout and cut down a few telegraph poles. Sergts. Butler and Traynor, of the Madison street station, with about thirty of their men, were sent out from the West Twelfth street station, and advanced upon the mob south on Halsted street. By this time there were about 3,000 or 4,000 rioters in the vicinity of the viaduct and on the tracks. They pelted passing wagons with stones, and evidently intended to interrupt traffic and have a row. The policemen went in with a rush, and as usual the crowd scattered before them for the time being. They drove the foremost back across the viaduct, a few steps at a time, in the midst of a shower of sticks, stones, and bullets, using their billies with very good effect. Hereabout they found themselves upon a sudden facing a crowd that must have numbered at least 5,000, for it crowded Halsted street several blocks south, and had a disheartening appearance of solidity. The men found it impossible to drive them far. Those in front, in an irregular, scattering sort of way, stood their ground, and made every demonstration of perfect willingness for a collision. The most annoyance, however, was experienced from the boys—mere children—who threw stones with deplorable vigor and accuracy. The officers soon tired of this, and drawing their revolvers they fired. The boys made a precipitate retreat, but the men stood firm. It became evident that dynamic measures must be resorted to. The officers had but sixteen rounds each, and these they very soon discharged into the mob, with what effect could not be learned, for, although men were seen to drop every minute, the mob dragged or carried them away upon the instant. When almost the last round had been fired, Sergt. Butler gave orders to fire rapidly and retreat.

The officers had gotten about a block away from the viaduct, going toward Twelfth street, when they were met by a squad under Sergt. Ryan, of the Twelfth street station, coming up on a run. Falling behind these, Butler's men wheeled, and the combined force fell with fury upon the foremost, shooting and cudgeling without mercy. The mob did not seem to have observed the arrivals. It seemed to think the same old squad had turned. The briskness of the fire it must have been that undeceived it, for as more rioters fell it began slowly to fall back. One of the leaders, shouting and encouraging the mob, stood ground in the space that was quickly cleared before the officers, and fired a revolver. He fell with a bullet through the base of his uncultivated brain, and lay like a log upon the pavement. This occurrence, in full sight of everybody, had a salutary effect. The mob broke and ran, pursued by the officers, away south on Halsted, scattering as they ran, until only the boldest of them were left, pushing down straight on for Bridgeport. This was evidently a deliberate move, for they kept at a safe distance ahead, and ran with a sort of community of purpose. Their object became clear when they got to the bridge near Archer avenue, for after the officers had beaten them across it another gang appeared and turned it, cutting off retreat. The situation had a very desperate look. There was no way of getting over. The roughs who turned the bridge jumped it and joined the crowd.

The man is usually found when the occasion comes. In this case the man was a boy—a brave little fellow, only 9 years of age, named James O'Niel. The rioters had left him unnoticed on the bridge. He sprung to the bar, pushed it, and, unmindful of the storm of missiles, threats, and pistol-balls that broke upon him, slowly swung the bridge into position. The policemen who were rescued by the little one's pluck cheered and patted him, and threw in a collection of a nickel each for his benefit. It was here that a young fellow named Castleman, a baker, about 30 years of age, was shot in the act of firing a pistol at the police. Three of the barrels of his weapon were found empty when he was picked up. The ball struck the back of his head, and left him not dead but unconscious. He was taken to the West Twelfth street station, where he lay until 3 o'clock, at which hour he died.

This gallant charge of Butler and Traynor's men, with the aid that was rendered them by a squad from the North Side, under command of Lieut. Bishop, and the squad that came up from the Twelfth street station, broke the back bone of the insurrection there for the day.

At 10:30 the mob, swelled to a thousand men, took up their march down Halsted street and kept up a continual yelling and shouting along the line. At every corner their ranks were increased from stragglers, and before arriving at Archer avenue there must have been no less than 1,500 men, as hard a lot of bruisers as could be possibly gathered together in this city. The boys were scarce, and every man at the head of the line brandished his formidable club and threatened dire things to the police if they attempted to resist them. The approach of this mob had been heralded to the police authorities, and a squad of men was sent on to meet and drive them back. On striking the corner of Halsted street and Archer avenue they were reinforced by the mob which had held possession of the vicinity in the morning, and the latter gathered new strength and new spirit. A part of the "bull-whackers" and rioters got over the bridge, where they were confronted by the police and stopped on their northward journey. They were told to disperse and get home, but the mob yelled that they would die rather than retrace their steps. The police fired in the air in hopes of frightening them away, but they did not scare worth a cent. They returned the fire by throwing stones, sticks, and iron at the peelers, and, as it was getting uncomfortably hot, the latter opened fire in real earnest, sending bullets right into the mob. The crowd yelled and continued hurling their missiles as they gradually retreated. On getting back, they endeavored to rally but without success. Some of the Archer avenue mob saw that the situation was desperate, and to properly provide themselves with arms broke into a hardware store. They were dispersed by the prompt arrival of a squad of policemen, numbering twenty men, from the Twenty-second street station, under command of Sergt. Arch, but the main mob continued its fighting. The ringleaders were gamey, and appealed to the rioters to stand up and fight like men.

"Let us give them h—l," "We are enough for them," "They can't stand it long," were frequent expressions, but only a few responded, as most of them had determined to wait until the peelers got on the south side of the bridge, when they proposed to make it warm for them. The policemen were quite a distance north of the bridge, and as the crowd sallied forth to hurl a stone or stick at them or fire a revolver, they would respond with a volley of bullets. At this juncture, the bridge was turned on the fighters by the bridge-tender, and this fact, together with the appearance of the policemen from the Twenty-second street station, completely demoralized the brave bruisers of Bridgeport and the stock-yard butchers. They took to their heels and scampered in every direction. A few jumped over into a lumber yard, a large number struck a lively gait down the railroad tracks, and the majority beat an inglorious retreat down the various streets. For two hours after this precipitate flight, the several by-streets leading to the stock yards were thronged with squads of men bent on getting home at the earliest possible moment. No band of Indians ever returned to the agencies more meekly and subdued than did these men return to the oderiferous town of Lake. They had had enough of gunpowder and were totally crestfallen. Their return was quite in contrast with their departure. The latter was marked with all the pomp of a glorious campaign; the former with all the evidence of a signal and effective defeat. The more boisterous members of the gang were the first to turn tail to fire and slink away to secure a hiding-place. The men they coaxed into the battle line stood their ground well, but were unable to cope with a squad of policemen well-trained and handled. The shots fired by the policemen struck right and left, and, judging from the manner in which men hobbled away, quite a number were wounded. There were three fatally shot. Johnny Weinert, a young boy about 15 years of age, was shot through the breast and instantly killed. He was employed in one of the packing-houses at the stock yards, but lived with his parents at Bridgeport, on the corner of McGregor and Stewart streets. He had no connection with the mob, but was merely looking on. Wallace, a son of James Wallace, of the stock yards, was shot in the body and died before he could be taken to the hospital. Another party, whose name could not be learned, was shot through the lungs. He was taken to No. 653 Archer avenue, and reports had it that he died shortly after being carried home. After the skirmish the street was exceedingly quiet, and no large crowd dared to gather at any one place.

The day's casualties amounted to twelve rioters killed and over twenty wounded, while of officers there were four seriously and many slightly wounded.

The Sutro Tunnel.

A correspondent of the Engineering and Mining Journal declares the Sutro tunnel second to no enterprise in the West. He says, "Its mouth is in the valley of the Carson river, a stream which washes the eastern base of the Washoe range, in which the Comstock lies. It has been driven a total distance of 17,000 feet up to date, and is making progress at the rate of 300 feet per month. Not more than 2,800 feet now intervenes between the breast and the nearest mine on the Comstock, the Savage, so that, if the present rate of progression be maintained, about ten months more will suffice to complete the connection. The lode will be cut at a depth of about 1,800 feet perpendicularly below the surface, and very nearly the center, measuring by the extent of the surface workings. It has been proposed, either by the Sutro Company or by a combination of owners along the vein, to run a drift north and south through each claim until the ends of the veins laterally are reached. This will connect every mine on the vein with the tunnel; will drain the entire workings; and, should these lateral drifts be put under one management and made a common highway, will afford the means of working the entire vein through one opening. It is now eight years since work was first begun at the town of Sutro, on the Carson river. The expense of prosecuting the work has averaged about $1,000 per day, and, when the Comstock is reached, the total cost will have amounted to about $3,000,000."

A Paper-Making Spider.

In the heart of the American continent, where no other paper is manufactured, the spider paper-maker does her quiet work. Back and forth, over a flat surface about an inch and a half square, on the inside wall of a hut, the spider slowly moves in many lines until the square is covered with a pure white paper. Under this she places from forty to fifty eggs; and then, to fasten the square of paper more securely to the wall, she makes a strip of paper about a quarter of an inch broad, and with this glues the square carefully around the edges. When all is done, the spider—which is quite a large one—places herself on the center of the outside of the little flat bag so carefully made, and begins a watch which is to last three weeks without intermission. Apparently, the young spiders would have many dangers to fear did not their anxious mamma wage a fierce war upon the cockroaches and other insects that come near. After three weeks of unremitting watchfulness, the mother-spider leaves her nest in the daytime to hunt food, but see always returns at night, until her young are strong enough to take care of themselves.

A CATAMOUNT, or something tantamount, if not paramount to it, has been killed near New Albany, Ind., measuring three feet.

THE PITTSBURGH MASSACRE.

A Pittsburgh Paper's Picturesque Account of the Battle on the Hillside.

(From the Pittsburgh Post.)

The bloody affray in which over thirty people lost their lives occurred between 5 and 6 o'clock. At the latter hour there was a vast assemblage of men, women and children loitering about the outer depot. The crowd was quiet and orderly, and, as the day had thus far passed without the loss of life, many of the more conservative and thinking spectators indulged the hope that the troubles would be finally settled in peace, without a conflict. But how sad was their disappointment, and how quickly it came! Even while they were indulging in the hope a murmur and cries of "there they come," arose from the multitude. All eyes were turned eagerly toward the Union depot. In the distance was seen marching up in measured time a solid column of soldiers. Their bright bayonets glistened in the rays of the sun. Their weary feet came down in measured tread, and the entire line moved with the regularity and precision of clockwork. Eager to catch a better view of the moving column, this vast multitude surged to and fro till there was imminent danger of helpless women and innocent children being crushed to death. As the troops slowly approached the crowd became more and more excited, and many of the more cautious moved to places of greater safety. Others rushed madly toward the troops, eager to learn their intentions and unconscious of the danger which awaited them. The monotonous tapping of the drum was distinctly heard as the Philadelphians drew near, and Superintendent Pitcairn and Sheriff Fife could be readily recognized at the front of the row. Surrounding the Sheriff was the posse of constables, and officers who had been summoned to his aid to arrest the ringleaders of the strike on the warrants issued by Judge Ewing. Then the crowd began to scatter to make room for the moving column. As the troops drew nearer the silence of the spectators and strikers was broken by a storm of hisses, hoots, yells, and cheers. Steadily, however, the troops marched into the very midst of the crowd, and the next moment the Sheriff and his men had mingled with the surging mass. The Sheriff endeavored to make himself heard, but this was impossible, owing to the confusion, but still the soldiers pushed slowly into the crowd until the order to halt was given. At this time the hillside was literally covered with men, women and children, mostly spectators, who were in a manner penned up. There was no escape in front; there was no escape behind except by scaling a steep hill. The two Philadelphia regiments, drawn up in a double line, began to march backward and forward to clear the tracks, and the crowd gave way before them. Superintendent Pitcairn and Sheriff Fife occupied a prominent position in the front, standing side by side. Several prominent citizens excitedly rushed to the official, and inquired in an eager and excited manner of the programme that had been prepared. With pallid lips Mr. Pitcairn replied that "God only knew what could be done"

In the meantime the cries and yells of the crowd grew louder and fiercer, and the excitement became still more intense. The Jefferson Cavalry were drawn up on the right of the platform, while the Fourteenth and Nineteenth regiments were posted on the hillside, above the tracks, as was Hutchinson's battery, with its two large brass pieces frowning down on the excited throng. The Philadelphia troops, numbering 800 men, now made preparations to disperse the crowd. They were ordered to form a hollow square, and it was intended to place the two Gatling guns with which they came provided in the center. The order was given to this effect, and the jostling and scuffling began. The military were hemmed in on all sides by the strikers and their friends, so that their movements were made with great difficulty. Finally, three sides of the square were formed, one side facing the hill, another facing the east, and thus troops of the third also stood facing the people on the hill, with their backs to Twenty-eighth street. The soldiers were compelled to force the men back in order to form the eastern line, and during the scuffling which followed the civilians grasped the bayonets of the military. "You sympathize with our cause and you wouldn't shoot a working man," cried the daring fellows who thus toyed with the deadly instruments in the hands of the visitors. This rashness encouraged the crowd in the rear; the men there continued yelling and hooting, and many insulting epithets were hurled into the faces of the visiting soldiery, while the shouts of derision were no less exasperating. The local troops on the hillside all the while remained passive. The Light Blues of Philadelphia were here ordered to charge on the crowd. They performed a soldier's duty in obeying the order. Great confusion followed, and the excitement became still more intense. Pressed by the mass of excited people, the militia men fell back. Then an order was issued to the Dark Blues of Philadelphia to charge with fixed bayonets. The Dark Blues responded. The jam was great, however, and the crowds struggled fiercely but ineffectually to make way for the glittering, menacing bayonets. One man was pierced by a bayonet, and when the crowd saw the blood trickling from his face every person became exasperated. The people on the hillside began to scramble toward the top. In the meantime the struggle continued on the platform. Then some malicious boys on the adjacent hill let drive a volley of stones into both the ranks of the militia and the crowd of people. This was the signal for the massacre, and quickly rang out the command to fire in sharp, decisive tones. Who gave the command cannot be ascertained. It was stated that Gen. Pearson was the man, but the story is not to be credited without further substantiation. Perhaps some excited member of the soldiery—perhaps some malicious person in the crowd—gave the order, but the troops understood it to have issued from the officers, and they obeyed the command. Scarcely had the order died away until the firing of a musket resounded in the air. The sharp report was almost instantly followed by a second, and a deadly battle was commenced. The terror of the moment can scarcely be imagined. Before either the soldiers or the civilians could realize the fact, the massacre was in progress. The troops shot direction. The strikers out in ever fled precipitately, but the speed of th musket-ball was swifter, and here and there fell a man or woman mortally wounded. Many who had the presence of mind dropped to the earth uninjured to escape. Others rushed pell-mell into a deep ditch that runs along the hillside. One volley swept the people stationed on the hill. Another volley was sent down Twenty-eighth street. Then the officers of the Philadelphians bent their efforts to prevent further shooting. The soldiers, as well as the people, had been seized with frenzy, and some of them kept firing contrary to the orders of their superiors.

The Sack of the City—Scenes and Incidents of the Pillage.

(From the Pittsburgh Post.)

Professional thieves and, perhaps, thousands who would be indignant at the appellation, plied the vocation of robbery from the time of the commencement of the burning of cars and throughout the whole of Sunday. Everywhere men, women, and children could be seen lugging armfuls of every variety of goods in all directions. In this the colored troops, male and female, labored "nobly." In the presence of the thousands of spectators who lined the hillsides and hilltops, these vultures broke into cars and carried off their contents. Flour, whisky, bacon, cheese, tobacco, and almost every description of goods were thrown out, while hundreds carried them off, the most industrious being women. In many instances men rolled and tugged upon barrels of flour until they reached the top of the long and steep hill overlooking the railroad yards. Many sweated over boxes of cheese, rolls of leather, armfuls of tobacco, etc., while chairs and even unfinished buggy wheels were toted up the incline. During the afternoon the boldness of the thieves became unexampled. Hams, shoulders, sacks of flour, and other articles were carried by innumerable people through the most prominent thoroughfares, and some men stopped to rest with their burdens at City Hall. On Smithfield street men could be seen rolling along barrels of flour, and sitting upon them occasionally to rest with as much unconcern as if they had paid the highest market price for the property. During the burning of the Union Depot there was a grand raid by the thieving brigade—men, women, and children—upon the cars at the Pan-Handle and Adams Express depots, Grant street. From thence they rushed in all directions with many kinds of property. One Irishman emerging with a ham and a sack of flour was heard to remark that this was the "bulliest sthrike he had ever seen." Behind him was a woman struggling with a fresh new box labeled "Irish soap."

Many of the thieves were arrested while pouring along the streets, and the Central station-house this morning presented the appearance of a sutler's establishment in war times. Hams, flitch, soap, butter, eggs, cheese, hardware, bedding, cushions, sleeping-car furniture, whips, highwines, and almost every description of household articles were stolen. One car laden with whips, which was standing in the Pan-Handle yard, at the side of the depot, was broken open, and, for the want of something better to steal, many members of the crowd appropriated the whips to themselves. Different persons inquired why the Mayor did not have the plunderers arrested, and that official promptly replied that the jail would not hold half the number. It was simply impossible to prevent the pillaging, and during the greater part of the entire Lord's day the city was absolutely given over to the plunderers.

Among the myriad instances of plunder was one man who put on six shirts, one over another, and covered the whole by his own somewhat soiled garment; a woman with a sheet pinned together by the four corners had it filled with flour; another was seen with two buckets of ale; still another was rolling a barrel of flour away, and fell over it at full length in the muddy gutter, much to the merriment of the spectators.

Our reporter met a boasting boy of 18. "D'ye see that ball?" handing out a large metallic cartridge with an ounce ball; "that's what these damned Philadelphians are shooting our mothers and sisters with. I fixed one of them, though," he added; "the poor devil got away from his fellows, and wanted to trade suits. So I took him home, gave him an old suit of working clothes, and got his splendid rig, sword and all. But, darn it all, I lost fifteen sacks of flour in the operation. I had them piled up snugly in an alley, and when I went back some infernal thief had taken them all but one. But I got that and a ham, and they'll keep us."

The Newspaper.

Philip Gilbert Hamerton, in his admirable papers on "Intellectual Life," thus talks of the paper: "Newspapers are to the civilized world what the daily house talk is to the members of the family—they keep our daily interest in each other, they save us from the evils of isolation. To live as a member of the great white race that has filled Europe and America and colonized or conquered whatever territory it has been pleased to occupy, to share from day to day its thought, its cares, its inspiration, it is necessary that every man should read his paper. Why are the French peasants so bewildered at sea? It is because they never read a newspaper. And why are the inhabitants of the United States, though scattered over a territory fourteen times the area of France, so much more capable of concerted action, so much more alive and modern, so much more interested in new discoveries of all kinds and capable of selecting and utilizing the best of them? It is because the newspapers penetrate everywhere, and even the lonely dweller on the prairie or the forest is not intellectually isolated from the great currents of public life which flow through the telegraph and press.

ALTHOUGH the Emperor and Empress of Brazil get up so early in the morning, their attendants are not particularly wide awake. When their majesties were leaving Paris for London, a casket of jewels, worth £120,000, was forgotten until the very moment the imperial visitors were getting into the train. Her Majesty happened to think of the casket just in the very nick of time.

THE MONTENEGRINS.

The Black Mountaineers in Battle—Their Terrible Mode of Warfare.

(Constantinople Cor. Philadelphia Press.)

In the campaign of last year the Turks lost almost ten to one against the Montenegrins. From the mountain summits overlooking Podgoritsa and the approaches from Scutari their scouts signalized the advance of the Ottoman army. From peak to peak signal fires by night announced the coming of the foe, while by day mounted troopers sped to every district to rally the people to the defense of the threatened frontier. On they came, men, women and children, every one that could carry a gun, roll rocks on the heads of the enemy, or assist in the building of intrenchments. The Turks were allowed to enter for a certain distance in the passes until they reached the narrow gorges. There they found their progress arrested by massive walls of rock and stone, stretching from side to side, completely blocking up the road, pierced with embrasures for cannon and with musket holes. A halt is called. A council of war determines that retreat is impossible, and that the intrenchments must be carried. At first it is an artillery engagement. Under the smoke of the cannonade an assault is ordered. Forward dash the Turkish troops with the blind fury that characterizes them in the field. The Montenegrin fire having lulled, supposing that it is a sign of yielding, the Turks hurry forward with cries and yells as if sure of their prey. Hardly have they got within twenty feet of the intrenchments, before from every opening in them pours a stream of incessant fire of shell, shot, minie balls and all kinds of deadly missiles. Suddenly the top of the rampart is crowned with sharpshooters, whose steady aim picks off the officers and mows down the heads of the columns. On the overlooking heights armed men, women and children appear. Enfilading volleys tear the shattered ranks from above, and huge bowlders and rocks come rolling down the precipices, crushing into the midst of the serried masses and laying low thousands of combatants. All this while the air is rent with the shouts of the mountaineers; the banner of the Cross is waved defiantly from on high and on the works; priests, with the crucifix displayed on their robes, pointing to it as a sign of hope and victory. After repeated onsets, their ranks broken, their officers, for the most part, slain, the Turks begin to waver. As soon as this is perceived the enthusiasm of the Montenegrins can no longer be restrained. Over the ramparts they leap, and with indescribable fury they charge, bayonet and sword in hand, on the disordered masses before them. For a moment the Turks stand at bay, but as the deafening clamor sounds like a continuous roll of thunder, and in rear and flank they are assailed by unseen enemies that have descended by secret paths from the top of the mountain walls, and in front by the regular troops, they break and run. Then comes the hour of vengeance. For miles the pass is strewn with heaps of Turkish slain. Whoever turns to fight finds himself face to face with a squad of foes who leave him no chance of escape. No quarter is given; blood flows in torrents; it becomes a pitiless massacre; only a remnant is left to tell the tale of disaster and woe, and to carry dismay into the Albanian fastnesses. With thanksgiving to God for the triumph vouchsafed to their arms, the Montenegrins sheath their bloodied swords, and homeward turn loaded with captured arms and precious spoils. This is a picture of the mode of Montenegrin fighting as described to me by a participant in one of the worst defeats the Turks ever encountered at their hands.

Useful Hints for Measuring Land.

Almost every farmer has some way of measuring land, and the most common is to step off five paces for a rod, and call sixty by sixty-five paces an acre. For ordinary purposes this mode will answer, but when the exact measurement of a piece of land is desired it cannot be depended upon as being accurate.

A light pole, just sixteen and a half feet long, is a cheap and convenient measure, but a four-rod tape line is much better.

An exact acre can be found by the following table of distances:

A plot of ground 5 yards wide by 968 yards long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 10 yards wide by 484 yards long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 20 yards wide by 242 yards long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 40 yards wide by 121 yards long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 80 yards wide by 60½ yards long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 70 yards wide by 69 1-7 yards long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 220 feet long by 198 feet wide contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 440 feet long by 99 feet wide contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 110 feet wide by 369 feet long contains 1 acre.

A plot of ground 240 feet long by 181½ feet wide contains 1 acre.

One acre contains 160 square rods; 4,840 square yards; 43,560 square feet.

One rod contains 30.25 square yards, 272.25 square feet.

One square yard contains 9 square feet.

Pennsylvania Coal-Miners' Strike.

News comes from Wilkesbarre, Pa., that a general suspension of coal-mining is imminent, in consequence of the strikes of the miners. The Schuylkill county collieries have mostly shut down; the mines of the Reading Coal and Iron Company are only partially operated; and the Shamokin coal men reduced the miners' wages, causing a strike, in which some three thousand are engaged. This latter strike will most likely result in a "lock-out," as the operatives seem determined to have their terms complied with, which will draw several more thousand workmen to the ranks of the disaffected.

The Wyoming region operators have followed the example set by the Schuylkill county producers, and every day records the closing of some colliery. The prominent companies, the Susquehanna and Lehigh, and Wilkesbarre coal companies have announced a suspension of mining, and by this order some 400 colliery hands are furloughed. The striking colliers are still contesting the reduction of wages with the operators, and, as extensive arrangements are being made by the Miners' Union, it looks very much as if there would be a general and wide-spread strike in the near future. The entire number of unemployed miners and laborers in the coal fields is between 15,000 and 20,000. Hundreds of these men and their families are in a very destitute condition, and it is feared their situation will cause some of the more desperate spirits to attempt a serious and riotous demonstration. Lawlessness has been started at several points, and house and highway robberies are of daily occurrence.

Turkish Love of Water.

A Turk thinks he can do nothing so grateful to God and man as the setting up of a fountain by the roadside or in the streets of the city, where the wayfarer and his animals may appease their thirst and bless the name of him who provided for their wants. Often in my travels in the interior of Turkey, writes a correspondent, I have halted beneath the shade of a wide-spreading plane tree to slack my thirst at the limpid waters of a marble fountain, and to repose from the noonday heat. There is always some edifying distich from the Koran, that "Water is the gift of God, and blessed is he who distributes it," or that "Water is the source of life and health," etc. There is a practical piety in these monuments of charity that speaks well for the benevolent disposition of the Mussulman. The Turks are great consumers of water, and they are good judges of its quality and nice in that they use. The favorite water that is sold at a para a glass in the streets is from Asia; either from Tchamlidja, on the mountain about Scutari, or from Karakoulak, some ten miles up the Bosphorus, several miles inward from Beicos. This is brought to the landing in barrels, on horses' backs, put in barges, and in this way carried to Constantinople before daylight. Notwithstanding the length of the journey, it is as pure as crystal. The venders cry it as "Bows guibi;" "As good as ice." A Pasha will drain two goblets at a swallow. As water is said to have fattening properties, the large draughts they take of it may be the cause, in part, of the obesity to which both sexes of the Turks are subject.

The Barber Escaped.

"Cut my hair," said the customer, as he seated himself in a barber's chair, "and be sure you let it run down the back of my neck," referring, of course, to the particular style of the cut.

The barber was a Western artist, having lately arrived in Oil City from St. Louis.

After clipping away for some time he concluded that perhaps the hair wasn't running down his customer's neck as fast as that individual might desire it—although for the life of him he couldn't see why he should want it to run down at all—and, when a quantity had accumulated inside his shirt-collar, the accommodating barber shoved it down and out of sight with the handle of the brush.

This performance was repeated two or three times, and the customer began to realize what was going on. Henceforward he took a lively interest in the proceedings. He said:

"What, in the name of the bird with the broad and sweeping wing, are you doing?"

"It didn't seem to run down," said the barber, apologetically, "and so I crammed it down with the brush."

The customer acted like a man who had just made the discovery that a rat had built her nest between his shoulder-blades and had kittens there; so he yelled:

"Cram your crammed head to cramnation!" and then, turning a double somersault out of his chair, he kicked at the reflection of the barber in the looking-glass. The barber escaped.—Oil City Derrick.

A Tragic Test.

A singular murder case awaiting trial in India has given rise to much legal discussion as to whether the circumstances justify the charge. A juggler, who alleged that he possessed some power which rendered him "bullet-proof," invited the prisoner in the case to aim at him with a loaded musket, assuring him that he might do so without the slightest fear of producing any painful results. The prisoner accepted the kind invitation, and, with a loaded musket presented to him by the juggler, immediately sent a bullet through his head. It is urged that, as there was no intention on the part of the prisoner to kill the deceased, the charge of murder cannot be maintained. The juggler was thoroughly confident of his own invulnerability, and several of his relations who were to be called as witnesses for the defense were prepared to prove that, although several times shot at before, he was never hurt. A similar case occurred in England a few years ago. A wizard at one of the theaters begged one of the audience as a favor to fire a gun at him. The spectator, thus invited, loaded the gun with a charge of shot he had brought with him for the express purpose of testing crucially the alleged invulnerability of the wizard. The result was painful in the extreme—the wizard's face was peppered with shot, and the spectator who fired the gun was given in the custody of the police. Both narrowly escaped death—one by the gun and the other by the gallows.

An Ill-Starred Youth.

A local paper in Pennsylvania tells of a youth living in the vicinity who has undergone a varied experience in casualties of a character almost sufficient to ruin any accident insurance company in which he might hold a policy. He commenced the world deaf and dumb. After attaining a sufficient growth to engage in the usual sports of childhood, he fell from a swing and received an injury from a splinter, which resulted in the loss of an eye. Subsequently a horse stepped on his face, inflicting serious pain and disfigurement. Venturing too near the railroad, he was knocked down by a train of cars, and considerably bruised and injured thereby. Last Friday, while playing in the road, he was run over by a team and had an arm broken.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, AUG. 9, 1877.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

On last Friday the freight blockade on the Michigan Division of the Lake Shore road was substantialy raised, and at this writing trains are running all along the line.

Three thousand bushels of wheat were moved from the station last Saturday. With the resumption of business on the railroad, the grain market opens with renewed activity.

The Toledo Blade is just now engaged in a vindictive warfare upon Dr. W. W. Jones, the present Mayor of Toledo, for the purpose of making political capital for the looming fortunes of that concern known as the republican party in the Toledo district, that paper gave a garbled report of Mayor Jones' remarks at a citizen's meeting on the occasion of the late strike in that city. The Mayor is classed as a sympathiser with the lawless element that undertook to run things throughout the country at that time, a mobocrat of the first water. Whereas, a true and correct report of his speech, as given to the public through more reliable source, be received other than in the spirit of loyal and patriotism, evincing a desire to preserve order and prevent lawlessness, and to unreservedly discharge his duty as Mayor of the city at that trying time. When we consider that Dr. Jones is a leading democratic politician and that the Blade is a radical paper of the extreme virulent type, that motive of the attack upon the Mayor is too transparent to suggest an explanation.

The number enrolled on the temperance list in Corunna now reaches the creditable sum of 275. Only about 20 adult males included in our village population remain unconverted, unregenerated and unwashed. Of this number there are only a half dozen who are in the habit of using the intoxicating beverage, and they no doubt will eventually sign the pledge. Let us subtract six from twenty and we have fourteen left. Now, fourteen persons in this village, a majority of that number, professed christians, and zealous temperance advocates after a fashion as their own, out of pure cussedness, it seems, for they assign no reason, refuse to come forward and aid the cause. If you are not with us, then you are against us,—and that's what's the matter.

The ladies of the Reform Club gave an ice cream festival last week, which was largely attended by town and adjoining country. The proceeds netted $37.50. The festival was voted an enjoyable affair by all present.

Our valued friend, Abe. Reinoehl, not long since held a red ribbon meeting at a certain place in this county.—Putting forth his best effort Abe. hoped to retire with a happy result. Vain hope, the hard cider and lager beer element happened to predominate in that quarter, and the converts were light and the substantial contributions lighter. Abe. says that the party who took his hat for a holder of the liberal donation of the audience was very kind to return the same, to say nothing of the 72 cents contained therein.

It is rumored that spiritualistic seances are being held in town at the midnight hour when grave yards yawn and ghosts troop forth. We are not advised of the locality where these meetings are carried on, else we should call around and interview the thing.

LOVELAND.

GARRETT.

EDITOR COURIER,—Parker makes inquiry in his last issue of the News "Why don't 'Red Nose' go for the school board at Auburn, who got $700 for building the school house at that place." I have this to say in reply: If "Red Nose" was possessed of the same officious and base disposition that Parker is he would go for them, but he has no disposition to stick his nose into affairs that is none of his business. Now I wish to give this school house, 100 dollar question, a little ventilation. It will be remembered that a year ago last May or June, two of the school trustees of Garrett went to Toledo, Ohio, to engage an architect to draw plans and specifications of a school house for Garrett. Messrs Gibbs and Moser were engaged, plans and specifications were drawn up for a magnificent building and thrown open for inspection at the office of the school trustees. The tax-payers of the town almost unanimously declared that such a building would be too expensive. The school trustees were requested to take into consideration the youth of the town and which was chiefly composed of poor laboring people, also the finincial depression of the country. A remonstrance was sent signed by over fifty of the taxpayers of the town, opposing such an expensive building, and praying that wise and learned body to keep their expense within due bounds. But one of the trustees declared that the people of Garrett did not know what they wanted and that they would give them what they did want. An indignation meeting was called, Parker got up and spouted like a whale and blowed like porpoise. He declared that he would give five dollars a year himself to have such a building just to look at and that he would go out to work in the harvest field to raise the money. The remonstrance was disregarded, the school trustees declared themselves infallible, they went on, received proposals, seperately, on the grading, stone work, brick work, carpenter work, etc The contract for building the school house according to the plans and specifications was let, the contract was drawn up and signed by the contractor and school trustees the school trustees reserving the right to change the plan of said building at any time as they would see fit, which was good evidence that they either had poor confidence in the abilities of the architect whom they had employed or that it was done to form a loop-hole through which fraud could be perpetrated. The building was commenced and soon a demand was made on the town for money, another meeting was held in which a large number of citizens and town trustees met. The school trustees reported that they had paid the architects $337.95 for the plans and specifications and by paying them in advance they had agreed to superintend the building. Mr Prouty said he thought they were good paymasters to pay in advance Parker blew off his equilibrium and declared that he had no right to be criticised.

As the building was commenced and to prevent litigation, the town trustees agreed to issue bonds provided the school trustees would agree to finish the building according to the plans and specifications which was agreed and an agreement drawn to that effect and signed, so the building went on. Now I wish to show how it was completed.

1st. The grading of the basement was not done according to contract and only $50 deducted from the contract for it, and it cannot be graded today for $300.

2nd. The foundation walls were to be of field stone. The inside is filled with soft brick which can be proved, and it is there for inspection. No allowance made for the difference.

3d. There were four stripes of ornamental brick to extend around the outside of the building two brick wide each, composed of Milwaukee white brick, and black glazed brick, which would have cost 5c each at the building. All that is left off, and a soft Ohio sand stone substituted. The contractor was allowed about $500, for the alteration.

4th. There were to be two vestibule doors which would cost from $300 to $400. The are dispensed with, and no credit given.

5th. The stairs are not put up and $30 were paid for plastering over the well-holes. The town will have to pay for taking it out again, if the stairs are ever built.

6th. The roof was to be slate. That was dispensed with and pine shingles being put on, $80 being deducted for the difference. Parker said he had considered the matter over and thought pine shingles would be much the best as slate would be falling down on the childrens heads. The general supposition is here, that Parker knows this by experience as something must have struck him on the head when he was going to school (that is if he ever went to school) but would it not have been a blessing to the tax-payers of Garrett had he only been struck a little harder. I understand they claim it to be a mistake in only deducting $50 for the excavation of the basement, as they didn't know what it was really worth.

What did they pay the architect the $336.95 for? and how in the name of good common sense could it be a mistake when they had received seperate bids on all the work? Here is a question for Parker but I suppose he will be with it, like he is with all other questions, will not have time or space for such matters. Why can he not take some of the space in that large Real Estate Agent's card, and some of the time he spends going to base ball matches as it would be more interesting to the tax-payers of Garrett to have this matter explained. We claim that every change that was made in the plan of that building was done to the interest of the contractor, and to the damage of the building and expense of the town. The building is a disgrace to the men who built it. It will not stand inspection. We want to know why the vestibule doors were not put in? why the smoke stacks were not built according to plan? why the cornice is not made according to plan? why the mansard roof railing was not put on? why the tower was left off? why the roof is not framed according to plans? In fact why did we not get the building that the plans, specifications and contract called for. Over twelve thousand dollars have been paid for that building, and though not built a year, the roof will not now turn the rain. The basement windows were never put in, but boarded up. Our little town is mortgaged heavily for the money thus spent on that building, and for the architects' services, and for two fares to Toledo and back, and this is the way we have been treated. The tax-payers of Garrett demand an investigation of this matter. We have it from good authority that that building could be built as it now stands for $8,000. Then two of them send in a bill of one hundred dollars each, for superintending the building. When they have check enough to ask the town for $100 each, how much should the contractors give them, (if they have not got anything) We would like to know what quality of glass is in the windows, and is it suitable for a building that has cost over twelve thousand dollars, and then only half finished. Some of it looks like an old Yankee washboard, probably it was pressed that way to suit Parker's imaginations. As to the Auburn school house it is a credit to the town and if the school board protected the tax-payers and saw that the contractor gave them what he had contracted to, then they should be paid for their services, but when a contractor agreed to give to the citizens of Garrett a certain building, and is paid for it, and they never got the building, is it just that the people of Garrett should pay the parties who were the cause of them not getting their contract. The town should hold such parties for damages. What right did they have to take the superintending of the building without any experience when they had paid the architects out of the peoples money to superintend it.

From an item in the News of last week, we are constrained to believe that the bluejay of that crum has had a "nose" put on him by one of the strikers.

At Butler, last Saturday, one of our farmer friends told us that he threshed 175 bushels of wheat from a field of six acres, over 29 bushels to the acre. Very good.

DR. G. P. BARNUM,
98 East Columbia St, Ft. Wayne.

The Garrett News has thus early commenced to make mouths at its rival, the Herald. After taking a hasty measure of the Yankee editor, we are of the opinion that he will prove a formidable Joe, and we may expect to see the scalp of the little pill doctor dangling to the belt of the Yankee aforesaid.

This season will produce the heaviest crop of oats known to the farmers of this county for several years. This together with the great wheat crop now being marketed, will revive business in every department of trade and commerce.

On Wednesday morning the strike at this place terminated, and the regular trains were started from this point. The employes commenced work in the railroad shops, and everything is now moving along in its usual manner. It is thought that business will shortly improve on the Baltimore & Ohio, and, in consideration of that fact, our business men begin to wear smiling faces.—Garrett Herald.

It has been suggested that inasmuch as potatoes and beans are likely to become very cheap, railroad hands ought not to grumble at a reduction of their wages. Of course, they don't need anything besides potatoes and beans, unless it be a few coffee sacks wherewith to clothe themselves and their wives and children. Economy must be introduced, you know, in order to pay their presidents from $30,000 to $50,000 per year and strike handsome dividends twice a year.—Ligonier Banner.

Our clever friend, James Anderson, received a dispatch Tuesday evening last from his wife at Colon, Michigan, who had gone there to prevent her child from becoming sick with the disease now prevailing here among the children, which despatch bore the sad intelligence of the death of their daughter. Mr. Anderson left on the first train.

Dr. Harter's liver pills are a safe, certain and mild purge, and by increasing the dose they become very enegetic and sure liver pills, acting especially on the liver, starting and regulating the flow of bile and expelling it from the the body. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Heustis & Hamilton, of Fort Wayne, have sent us a sample of "Jackson's Best," which is nothing less than sweet navy chewing tobacco. As we do not "chew" ourself, we handed it over to the "devil," who is already grinning with great satisfaction over the valuable acquisition to his greatly depleted supply. He says its bully, and if a great consumption of the weed in a given time would constitute a good judge, the "devil's" opinion inclines us to believe it is A. No. 1.

The Garrett News "insinuates" that the party, who went from this place to Garrett at the request of Mr. Gross, got drunk, &c. We understand there was one of the party a little off, but the insinuation charges the whole as guilty. Will Bro. Parker say that the Deputy Sheriff and all those accompaning him were drunk. A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, perhaps from the same authority, says the same thing, by inference. We would like to know, you know, just how it is.

The schoolboys at New Carlisle carry matters with a high hand. They arrested a schoolmate a few days ago, put a rope around his neck, threw it over the limb of a tree, drew him up so his feet would swings clear of the ground, put a pile of leaver under him, set it afire and kept him there till both feet were blistered—and all this purely for mischief, without provocation. But one of the boys got a flogging for this fiendish outrage—the others escaped with appeals to their sense of humanity.

From the Garrett News: "We received a complimentary ticket to attend Cole's circus at Kendallville on the 3d, and Butler on the 4th of August.

The Montgomery Queen show advertised to be at Auburn soon, is a one-horse affair. It is simply a small detachment of Fore Paw's Show. People patronizing it will be hugely bared.

No ticks for the last one. Sour grapes. It shows just how much it will take to buy the good opinion of Bro. Parker.

The Garrett News says we insinuated that the strikers there were raiding groceries, &c., last week. Read that item again, Parker, and notice that we give it as a rumor. Just as we went to press the rumor came here that such was the case, and we gave it as such. If a rumor is an insinuation then we insinuated. But we never insinuate. We are glad to learn of the excellent discretion manifested by the strikers at Garrett and the amicable adjustment of the difficulties.

Pic-nic Excursion.

The H. C. & S. Party and String Band of Waterloo, will give a pic-nic on next Wednesday, August 15th at Pleasant Lake, and invite everybody to attend. Half fare on railroads and no admission to grounds. This will be a select affair and many are expected to be present. So to you who can, if you feel friendly toward and feel disposed to get acquainted with the society of your neighboring towns come sure, and don't forget your baskets; but provisions can be had in the grove at the usual rates.

Mr. Hartsuck, of Kendallville, late Moral Instructor of the Northern Prison is a much disgusted individual. He received his appointment through a Democratic Commissioner, but the new Republican board politely informed Mr. H. that he must step down and out and give place to their favorite. Mr. Hartsock is a well known bugler for the Republican party, and as he was esteemed qualified for the position while the appointee is considered unfit for the place, there must be something rotten in that quarter. And Bro. Hartsuck knaweth a file.

The first number of the Garrett Herald is before us. It is neatly printed tastily arranged and full of local news. We believe Garrett can maintain but one paper, and the future must determine which one will prove worthy of the bulk of the patronage. Mr. Powell, the editor of the Herald, claims an experience of fifteen years in the business, which ought certainly to be of some advantage to him. The Herald is Republican in politics, which makes it appear more of a luxury than a necessity in Democratic Garrett, but the people will patronize a good local paper even to the ignoring of its political complexion. We wish Mr. Powell no bad luck, but we look upon his venture as extra hazardous.

We would in all confidence recommend Dr Harter's Iron Tonic. We would exhort the weak to discard all unmedicated and impure stimulents, and use this—"natures great restorer." It acts on the stomach and bowels, increasing the appetite, assisting digestion, building up the weak, frail, and broken down system. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The Circus.

M. Queen's Circus pitched its tent here Friday. The attendance was not very large, owing no doubt to the hard and busy times. The Menagerie part of the exhibition was not quite so good as it was when here last time, while the circus is somewhat better. We learn from Mr. Queen that he met with terrible bad luck with his animals in Oregon. He lost his great three ton Rhinoceros, his Giraffe, large Lions and many other valuable collections, by the sudden severe warm weather which sometimes visits that clime, but is gathering other rare animals as fast as he can. This is one of the most orderly quiet and well appearing circuses we have ever seen. No side shows, no gambling schemes, no peddling over the seats, a great luxury for those who attend. The performance in the ring was good, equal to, if not better than Barnum's, at Fort Wayne. But the ticket agent with Queen surprised and astonished us. He proved to be a gentleman in ever partecular. He was kind, obliging, accommodating and respectful, and we shall often wonder why there are not more like him.

Truth and "Bile."

When the editor of a newspaper assumes the right as though he were a school board, his effort would create less suspicion as to his identity if he confined himself to the truth; however, when a man has "bile" for his subject it is scarcely a matter of surprise if some statements become billous.

In last week's "Waterloo Press" the dissertation on "bile" contained the statement that the school board of that place had not advertised for scholars until after the normal had commenced. In DeKalb county, at the present time no better advertisement for scholars could be devised than the "mere announcement" that Mr. Barns is going to teach, and such announcement appeard in the "Press" during the week prior to the opening of said school here. The school opened here on the 16th of July. OBSERVER.

We are sure our farmer friends do not know the value of the Nickel Steel Plow now made at Butler, by Leonard & Co. Those who have tried them pronounce them superior to anything yet introduced. We mention this more from the fact that it is an article made at home, and if as good even as those of foreign make, our farmers should give it the preference. Call at Ensley's Agricultural Depot and examine them. You have a chance to try them before you buy, and the prices are as low as on other plows. 6t

A SONG OF SUMMER.

BY PROF. BLACKIE.

[Always in your darkest hour strive to remember your brightest.—J. P. Richter.]

Sing me a song of summer,
  For my heart is wintry sad,
That glorious bright new-comer,
  Who makes all nature glad!
Sing me a song of summer,
  That the dark from the bright may borrow,
And the part in the radiant whole of things
  May drown its little sorrow.

Sing me a song of summer,
  When God walks forth in light,
And spreads His glowing mantle
  O'er the blank and the gray of night;
And where He comes, His quickening touch
  Revives the insensate dead,
And the numbed and frozen pulse of things
  Beats music to His tread.

Sing me a song of summer,
  With his banners of golden bloom,
That glorious bright new-comer,
  Who bears bleak winter's doom,
With banners of gold and of silver,
  And wings of rosy display,
And verduous power in his path,
  When he comes with the pride of the May;

When he comes with his genial sweep
  O'er the barren and bare of the scene,
And makes the still earth to wave
  With an ocean of undulant green;
With flourish of leafy expansion,
  And boast of luxuriant bloom,
And the level of life as it triumphs
  O'er the dust and decay of the tomb.

Sing me a song of summer;
  O God! what a glorious thing
Is the march of this mighty new-comer
  With splendor of life on his wing!
When he quickens the pulse of creation,
  And maketh all feebleness strong,
Till it spread into blossom of beauty,
  And burst into pæans of song!

Sing me a song of summer!
  Though my heart be wintry and sad,
The thought of this blessed new-comer
  Shall foster the germ of the glad,
'Neath the veil of my grief left me cherish
  The joy that shall rush into day,
When the bane of the winter shall perish
  In the pride and the power of the May.

A NIGHT OF HORROR.

I have passed through many a trying scene in my life, scenes wherein danger lurked and death smiled grimly. On water and on land I have stood, as it were, face to face with that dread of the human race. On the mighty ocean, when our fair bark was tossed as if it were a feather, I could gaze upon the surging billows with awe, aye, with veneration—for there amid the roaring of the tempest, the lashing of the waves, I saw the power and might of that Diety.

Death amid the storm and tempest, the flashes of lightning and the roaring of the thunder, had no dread for me. To die thus, amid the war of the elements, would be a glorious triumph over slow death!

Why should I write this sketch? Why describe a night of horror the remembrance of which, although many years have passed away, makes me shudder still? Is it because it lives in memory, like some horrid specter? It may, however, tend to withdraw the mind from that one fearful episode in my life, which, like a dark shadow, keeps out all sunshine. To test theory, I send you this sketch, for the memory of that night of horror.

Like a drop that night and day
Falls cold and ceaseless, wears my heart away.

The State-House clock had struck eight when the clerks left the office. I remained alone, as I had some important business to transact, with which the clerks had nothing to do. I locked the front of the office, and for one hour I was busily employed at my work. In one corner of the counting-house stood my mammoth safe—a huge affair. I prided myself on being the owner of the fixture. I could stand upright in it and arrange my books and papers without stooping. It was a small house or an iron tomb, just as fancy might determine. Near the safe stood an old-fashioned, rickety book-case; a large, ponderous piece of furniture. The safe door, when opened, came within a few inches of it.

It is necessary to mention this book-case, for had it not been there the adventure I am about to relate would never have been written.

I was inside the safe, putting in its place the last book, when there came upon my ear the cry of "fire!" followed by the rush of engines down the street. I listened for a minute, and was in the act of leaving the safe, when—oh, horror!—there came a crash! the book-case had fallen against the door of the safe, and its spring was caught in the intricate workings of the huge lock!

I was thus inclosed in a living tomb, and as the dread sound echoed through the safe I knew it was the knell of my death. For a moment I stood utterly confounded, and when the true state of my situation was realized no tongue can describe nor pen portray the remotest idea of my feelings. Entombed, incased in an iron coffin—all sound dead! The shout I sent forth, as if it could be ever heard, came back in reverberating echoes. Then again all was still—still as death, for my voice was hushed! The few moments that had passed since my incarceration seemed as though many years. How would I die? Raving mad, perhaps, or by immediate suffocation. Already I felt the presence of the condensed air acting on my brain—already I felt the blood rushing in tumultuous waves to my head! To die thus, struggling for life in an iron vault, was awful.

I calculated the hours, the minutes and seconds before the time of the opening the office, and then—then—the key of the safe—great Heavens!—it was in my pocket, and there was no duplicate.

Hours and hours must pass away before the safe could be opened. Opened by whom? The man who made it. I had no partner in the business; my clerks would not suspect that anything had occurred, and they would not attempt the opening of the safe until they had heard from me. How in Heaven's name could that be? Never, never would they hear the sound of my voice again!—I was there—death's prisoner in an iron vault; they knew it not, nor even imagined such a horrible contingency would be attached to my absence. Even if it were so—even when the safe was opened, how would I appear to them? A lifeless corpse, or a raving maniac.

I did not shudder nor groan. All corporeal sensation was lost in that of the brain. I felt that death in some horrible shape was gathering its shroud around me. In my excited state I imagined that all was over with me. How should I meet death? Dash my brains out against the iron-sided prison? No, no; not while reason remained. If I were to lie down with my face pressed to the floor, and remain there quietly, shut my eyes and keep out the oppressive darkness, might I not sleep? I threw myself full length on the floor, for, as I have already said, the safe was a large one, in the hope that sleep or suffocation would end my mental suffering. The density of the atmosphere must naturally produce the latter result. No, no; here was no atmosphere, for that was invisible, elastic fluid, which surrounds the earth, and presses by its weight the assemblage of aeriform vapors. Here was no air—no vapor, no motion, no sound, atmosphere, to produce either of these agents of the universe. No! Death was far away, yet I felt as if the very silence was killing me. The buzzing of a fly, the hum of a bee, or the sound of that mysterious insect whose peculiar imitation of a time-piece gives it the name of the "death watch," even that superstitious pleasure was denied me.

There came a change, sudden as it was alarming. The brain began to throb. The heart beat in unison. I felt its deep pulsations; I heard its deep, heavy thud against my breast. This I say I heard, for it was part of myself. No other sound outside of my own person could have reached me there. I felt a pain in my head and brain; not an ordinary pang, but one that struck at the base of reason. Death was coming! Welcome! And I laughed the wild, unmeaning laugh of the maniac. And yet I was not mad, but so near it that had not reason told me it was approaching apoplexy I would have been raving. Welcome apoplexy! It, however, came not. I rolled over and over in my limited cell; I screamed; I yelled and shouted for help, and yet all the while I was perfectly conscious of what I was doing. Death was playing with me! I prayed, too, but did not curse. No, no; for if I am to die—thus I reasoned—let me die in peace with God. These thoughts, the result of my early religious education, kept my soul intact with Him who had the best right to it.

I endeavored to be calm, strove to reason myself into patience, and wait the coming day. Day! alas! what to me was day? For here all was night. But reason failed. It had no argument to confute facts. Death was here and I had to meet it. But how? Alas! alas! that mystery was yet to be solved. All was so still, so silent, that my faculties were benumbed. I remember wondering if the voice of the Deity could be heard in that dreadful place. Was this blasphemy? Perhaps it was; but I was not then accountable for either my words or actions. I was, for the moment, mad.

I took off my coat and made a pillow of it. Sleep! Oh! if I could only sleep, and, in forgetfulness, escape the horrors of my waking moments. Sleep was impossible. There was a constant buzzing in my ears, acute pain in my head—a vertigo that drove me again to my feet, and I reeled round the limited space in a whirligig for life. I struck my head against the side of the safe. I felt no pain, for there was a madness in my acts, with just sufficient reason to add to the horrors of my situation. What could I do now but rave and yell, calling for help, well knowing there was no help at hand! Why did my senses remain to torture me thus? Why not go mad and commit some fearful act to end my misery? Because I was in the hands of One who has issued his canon against self-slaughter. I trusted to Him. I started to my feet. My head struck the top of the safe, and I was dashed back again to the floor. Again I shouted, again I laid flat on my face and called on death to come and end my woes. The shout was echoed in low, rumbling sounds, which died away, leaving the silence tenfold greater. Like the darkness preceding some greater shock of nature, its intenseness could be felt. I felt—felt it in my heart—felt it in my brain—it was pressing me to death!

Had I nothing else to think of but myself? Reader, I have given my own mental and physical sufferings while entombed. I was not selfish even; I analyzed my own feelings, and seemingly forgot others outside of the tomb. What, describe other sensations—sensations that sprung from pictures I could not bring my mind to contemplate? Pictures of home—of wife and children—friends—all these seemed, in my state, as only adding to my misery, for I was doomed, and they were for the time being happy. I kept those pictures back.

I even magnified my suffering so that memory might be silent. I could not contemplate in my excitement two distinct events. I therefore settled all my thoughts, fixed all my energies on one object—self-preservation. I would strive to live—live for those who were even now wondering why I was not with them. Reader, I strove as hard to forget wife, children and friends as I did to master my dread of the horrible death awaiting me. Understand me. No one placed as I could think of the past, present or future with any degree of calmness. The reasoning faculties succumbed to physical excitement; they became antagonistic, and, although I endeavored to separate the two, I became more confused. I could think of nothing but my own position. Beyond that, if I attempted to go, I foresaw madness. So, to avoid all that, I centered all my thoughts on one purpose—self-preservation. To accomplish this I could not, even in thought, go beyond my prison-house. Why proceed—why even attempt to describe the sufferings I underwent? I raved, I screeched, I fell to the floor, rose again, reeled in maddening fury around my living tomb. I even meditated self-destruction. I argued the point with death. I quoted authorities to prove that suicide was justifiable in some cases, and mine was a case in point. My mind, weakened as it was, hesitated to grasp at this mode of ending life, and there came up, at that moment, a small, childlike voice, saying: "Hope—hope on!" Was it a voice, or was it merely imagination conjuring up sounds to soothe me? "Hope!" I started! a new light seemed to enter my soul, and illuminate the Cimmerian darkness surrounding me. I lost all consciousness, and fell as if dead.

* * * * *

How long I lay thus I had no knowledge, when I came to myself it was to hear a dull sound as if some one was striking the safe. Was help at hand? Then came a grating sound—then a shock—then came a louder sound, as if from the explosion of gunpowder—a flash, as of lightning. It came into the safe and for an instant the whole space was illuminated. What could it mean? Was it a dream? No! no!—reality! The safe-door was thrown open, and as I rolled out on the floor of the counting-house I again became unconscious.

* * * * *

When I came to my senses I was surrounded by four fierce-looking men—one was bathing my head, while another was holding me in his arms. What could it mean? I was saved, but how and by whom?

They were burglars who came for the purpose of plunder. They told me so; and instead of money they found what they took to be a corpse. They stood apart—whispered—seemed to hesitate how to act. The safe was opened; the owner was there at their mercy. Weak as I was, I at once discovered the cause of their hesitation.

"You came," I said, "to rob me, instead of which you saved my life. The amount of money which you would have obtained is no considerable sum; it is there—there in that second drawer from the right. Take it—divide it between yourselves, and take it with my thanks. You see I am very weak—the excitement caused by incarceration."

One of the men approached me and said: "We are robbers; we are in your power, but we are not murderers. We came for money, but——"

I interrupted him.

"No hesitation, sir; it is yours—my free gift—take it."

He then joined his companions, consulted awhile, then came to me and said:

"Suppose, sir, that we were detected? Our entrance may have been observed—the money found upon us—the condition of this safe—thus, you see, upon such evidence we would be convicted at once."

"Will you place that chair before the table and help me to it? I am completely unnerved. Seven hours in that safe nearly killed me."

The chair was placed as ordered—the man who had spoken assisted me to it. I took paper and pen, and, while those four stalwart, desperate men gazed upon me, I wrote the following:

"For valuable services, I pay these four men (for the soul of me I could not write gentlemen) the sum of $1,500. They rescued me from a most horrible death, for which, in addition to this sum, they have my most heartfelt thanks.

[Signed] ——————

"Take that paper, sir, and, if anything should occur, come to me."

Thus was I saved, but it was many weeks before I recovered from the effects of that night of horror.—Hartford Times.

Important Legal Decision.

The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court given by Justice Miller in the case of J. K. Place & Co., of New York, is an instance when law and equity have joined hands to protect the shorn creditors from the wiles and devices of dishonest business men filing voluntary petitions in bankruptcy. Like hundreds of others before him, Place had taken money from his business, had invested it in real estate, and had settled the same upon his wife. Without doubt, both of them had concurred in the idea that it would be a good thing, while business was prosperous and credit was good, to build a nice home, and secure the same against all possible contingencies of the future. The plan was accordingly adopted and carried out, the fine residence was erected on Fifth avenue, properly transferred and secured (as they thought), and then Mr. Place and wife were ready to submit to the inevitable reverses of fortune with a readier grace and a more submissive will. But the over-bold creditors stepped in just here, and very forcibly questioned the right of Place to thus use their money for his own personal purposes without as much as saying, "By your leave." Or, in other words, after Place & Co. had failed, the creditors insisted that the Fifth avenue property should be sold, and the proceeds reckoned in with the other assets of the firm. Whereupon Mrs. Place, through her agents, objected, and the case was carried successively through the local District Court, the Circuit Court, and then up to the United States Supreme Court, from which a decision has been given that said Fifth avenue property, inasmuch as it was purchased with money taken from the business, rightfully belongs to the company's creditors, its transference to the wife in the meantime to the contrary notwithstanding.

This decision, coming as it does from the highest legal tribunal in the land, and therefore final in its nature, becomes very important to the wives of all business men who may be fancying that property thus secured to them by their husbands is safe from all further molestation by legal processes. It is also very important to business men themselves, showing them, as it does, that all such gay and festive schemes to defraud their lawful creditors of that which has been intrusted to their management and care for the time being, will be sure henceforth to "gang aft agley."—Chicago Journal.

A Shrewd Swindle.

One of the latest and shrewdest schemes of swindle lately took place in Cleveland, Ohio. A stranger appeared at a saloon, having in his possession several boxes which he claimed contained valuable jewels which he would like to keep safely for a time. For this purpose he engaged a room and had the boxes placed in it. He occupied the room a day or so, and then left, leaving the things there. In the course of a day or so he returned, saying that he had been detained away by business, but would pay for the room just the same. While he was making this explanation a second stranger, who spoke very broken English, appeared and called for a drink. He had no money but would like to sell the large diamond cross which he wore. The first stranger examined it, and said that as an expert he should regard the cross as worth at least $4,000. The price of the article was $200, and if the saloon keeper would let him have that amount he would at once go to the bank, draw some money, and return him $500 for the favor. The money was furnished, with the exception of $17, and the two strangers departed—never to return. It took their host but a few minutes to see that he had been victimized, and he rusted for the boxes of jewelry, only to find them filled with stones.

THE CIRCASSIANS.

Their Cruel Oppression by the Russian Authorities—Habits and Peculiarities.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The Turkish army contains a small auxiliary force of Circassians, whose valor is almost as well approved as that of the Montenegrins. There is one regiment of Circassians in the First Army Corps, stationed at Constantinople, and scattered squadrons of cavalry in Armenia and the Balkans; but the bulk of their fighting men may be found in the ranks of the Bashi-Bazouks, or irregular volunteers. The circumstances under which the Circassians became faithful allies of the Turks are unusual and romantic. They dwelt in the mountain regions of Caucasus, and were alternately under the dominion of the Turk and the Russian. They were not good subjects to either Government, paying no taxes and recognizing no authority which did not seem to them convenient. In 1829 the Caucasus fell into the hands of Russia for the last time, and thenceforward the hand of that Government pressed upon the Circassians with constantly-increasing weight. They were rebellious, and the mountainous nature of the country which they inhabited made them troublesome enemies to contend with. After thirty-five years' experience of Circassian craft and prowess, the Government of Russia determined to settle the Circassian question, at once and forever, by expelling them from the country which they had so long possessed, and which they cherished with the deepest affection. In 1863 they were ordered to pack up and move off. On their refusal to do so, and the continuance of hostilities, the policy of indiscriminate massacre was adopted by Russia. This last stroke overcame even Circassian contumacy. More than 300,000 emigrated, leaving their homes and their native land to the spoiler. Of the whole number of emigrants about 200,000 settled in Bulgaria, along the coast of the Black sea, and the remainder in Armenia.

The cruel expulsion of the Circassians by the Russian authorities has scarcely a parallel in history. Whole nations have been transported before, but never for such insufficient reasons, and never, it may be said, on so large a scale. The French driven forth from Nova Scotia, whose hardships have been celebrated in verse by our own Longfellow, numbered barely 18,000 souls. The Huguenots of France had at least the alternative of staying in their homes and abandoning their religion. The Moors in Grenada were themselves aliens and invaders, in theory, at least, and were driven away to their own kindred and the land of their faith. Not so with the Circassians. They loved their mountain homes as passionately as the Montenegrin or the Switzer. They imbibed in the clear atmosphere which surrounded them the same unconquerable spirit of freemen. Russian oppression was to them an impossible condition of existence, and they resisted to the last, even when they knew defeat was inevitable. When they yielded, they chose to become subjects of Turkey rather than Russia; and hatred of Russia became for them the controlling principle of their national life. Travellers tell of meeting Circassians in Europe and hearing male children asked by their parents: "How many Russians will you kill when you are a man?" The present war is therefore an opportunity for the Circassians—the first they have had since their expulsion from the Caucasus; and if they do not use it to the full it will not be for want of desire on their part. They are already famous for their exploits in the ranks of the Bashi-Bazouks; and, though their mode of warfare is not, like that of the Montenegrins, always honorable, it is none the less terrible and harassing. In the long run it will produce results of importance; and, in case of a Russian retreat or disaster, the Circassian contingent would be likely to pay off old scores by a frightful vengeance.

The Circassian has some peculiarities which unfit him for becoming an object of European and American sympathy to any large extent. Though not a coward by nature, he prefers to fight in Indian fashion, and to kill his enemy with the least possible risk to his own precious person. Moreover the Circassian scorns to tell the truth when he can possibly avoid it, and theft is with him a cardinal virtue. The Circassian boys are taught to steal by their parents, just as the Lacedemonian youth were; and the celebrities of the nation are the persons who have learned to steal blankets from the sleeping owners thereof, or horses out of stables in which the master peacefully reposes. Obstinacy is another characteristic of the Circassian. They brought their slaves with them into Turkey, and, although often admonished by the Sultan's officers that slavery was contrary to the Koran, they refused to make any proclamation. Many times they fought in defense of what they considered their rights in this respect, and have proved perhaps as troublesome subjects to the Sultan as they were to the Czar. They are good Mussulmans, too, having been converted during the Turkish rule in the Caucasus, from the peace of Bucharest in 1812 until 1829; but, as may be imagined, they do not acknowledge the authority of the Koran in matters of opinion so vital as the slavery question. In like manner, they sell their girls for use in the Turkish harems, esteeming it a high honor to have them there, and being seconded in this respect, it must be confessed, by the young women themselves. In spite of the depletion of numbers and blood from this cause, they remain a rugged and adventurous people. The men are short and slender, but broad across the shoulders, and possessed of wonderful powers of endurance. They are masters of the art of hating, and have the longest memories in the world for an injury. If they do not, in the present war, pay back to Russia at least a part of the ancient grudge they owe, it will be for want of opportunity, not because they lack the disposition.

Composition on the Rabbit.

Rabbits is generally about the size of a cat. They ain't so useful to catch rats as a cat, but they will pull the bark off a grape vine awful quick. I had a rabbit once, and he gnawed the bark off my grandfather's pear tree, and he got mad, and kicked the stuffin' out of him and I skun him. Rabbits' ears is long, so you can pick 'em up easy. A rabbit often has red eyes, but if a girl had red eyes she'd look bad, you bet. Me and another boy done up some hoss-radish in a cabbage leaf and give it to Mr. Hackett's rabbit to eat, and he jumped over a clothes-line and run into the kitchen and upset a bucket of syrup all over his hair, and he was a sick-lookin' rabbit, and don't you forget it. I'd rather be a dog than a rabbit.

The Embroidery of History.

One of the bits of history most familiar to Americans is Jackson's battle of New Orleans, where, from behind his breast-work of cotton bales (a material which the enemy's cannon could not pierce), he repulsed with prodigious slaughter Packenham's veterans, fresh from their European victories. This story of the rampart of cotton, as related in both English and American histories, is, however, purely apocryphal. Its origin seems to have been the fact that, many days before the battle of Jan. 8 (for Jackson's troops had been working steadily at the intrenchments since Christmas), about fifty cotton bales were taken out of a neighboring flat-boat and thrown into a line of earthworks to increase its bulk. About a week before the assault, in a preliminary skirmish, as Walker tells us in his "Jackson and New Orleans," the enemy's balls striking one of these bales knocked it out of the mound, set fire to the cotton, and sent it flying about to the great danger of the ammunition. All the bales were consequently removed. "After this," continues the account, "no cotton-bales were ever used in the breastwork. The mound was composed entirely of earth dug from the canal and the field in the rear. The experiment of using cotton and other articles in raising the embankment had been discarded."

Again, for eighteen years after this battle it was gospel with us that the British officers at dawn "promised their troops a plentiful dinner in New Orleans, and gave them 'booty and beauty' as the parole and countersign of the day." In 1833 Gen. Lambert and four other British officers, who had been engaged in the luckless expedition, denied this story, which accordingly has measurably vanished out of history. The absurd fiction of the "booty and beauty" watchword reappears, however, at intervals in our own civil war, ascribed to Gen. Beauregard and other Confederate officers.

Our ancestors, also, used to enjoy the story of Putnam's exploit at Horseneck, where he escaped from a party of Tyron's troops by forcing his horse down a flight of seventy stone steps (another account swells them to a hundred) that formed the stairway by which the villagers ascended to the church on the brow of the hill. This is the narration in Peters' "History of Connecticut," a book which Dwight calls "a mass of folly and falsehood." The story of the stairway is sheer fabrication, founded on the fact that common stones here and there aided the villagers to ascend the hill; yet there exist pictures of Putnam charging down a long tier of steps, as well-defined and regular as those of the Capitol at Washington, while the discomfited dragoons at the top pour in a volley that does not harm him.

A partial parallel to this exaggeration may be found in the current descriptions of "Sheridan's Ride" at Winchester, a solid exploit, brilliantly touched up in Buchanan Reade's verse, concerning which last the great cavalry General is said to have jocosely remarked that if the bard had seen the horse he never would have written the poem.—Galaxy.

Summer Diet.

Dr. W. H. Vail publishes an article on summer diet, and starts with the following argument: "God, in His providence, has stocked the polar region with the seal, the whale and the bear; all the personification of fat and oil—while vegetation is comparatively unknown. On the other hand, as you approach the tropics, oranges, bananas, lemons, and all our luscious fruits greet you on every hand, and vegetation runs wild. This disposition of providence teaches us—what our appetites confirm—that in cold weather our diet should consist mainly of oily substances, or such food as is converted into fat by the process of digestion; while in the summer we should select such articles of diet as are not convertible into fat." Dr. Vail adds that vegetables, the edible parts of which ripen underground, such as potatoes, carrots and parsnips, are heat-producing, while those that ripen above ground are cooling. The latter, including especially asparagus, lettuce, peas, beans, tomatoes, corn, and all fruits, should be freely eaten. Meat should not be eaten oftener than twice a day, and lean is preferable. He particularly recommends tomatoes.

Japanese Damsel's Toilet.

The toilet preparations of a Japanese damsel are of no light consideration, and to be in good time for the feast she must be up and dressing long before the sun rises from behind Fuji, the great sacred mountain. The long, coarse tresses of black hair must be washed, combed and greased till the head shines like a knob of polished black marble. The cheeks must be rouged to the proper tint, the throat, neck and bosom powdered—carefully leaving, however, on the neck three lines of the brown skin of the owner, in accordance with the rules of Japanese cosmetic art. Then the eyebrows must be carefully rounded and touched with black, the lips reddened with cherry paste, with a patch of gilding in the center. When all this has been done, and she gets together a proper allowance of pocket-handkerchief paper, her tobacco pouch, pipe and fan, she sallies forth.

In Thomasville, Ga., a man who had been suffering with cancer in the mouth, and had been pronounced incurable by his physician, became much depressed, and determined upon suicide. He went about his self-destruction in a very methodical and business-like manner. All his creditors were conferred with, and all paid up, even those to whom the amounts were not due. He proceeded leisurely and deliberately to set his house in order preparatory to taking the fatal step. He even made his own coffin. After completing all necessary arrangements he coolly cut his throat.

Neither Bret Harte nor Albert Rhodes has got his desired foreign appointment, but Secretary Evarts is amusing them, meantime, with such observations as this: "Literary men can get laurels on their brows, but they can't browse on their laurels."

MASKED BATTERIES.

If you'll keep it secret—honor bright—
  I'll tell you a little story, Joe;
Something that happened to me last night
  Here at the masquerade ball, you know.

You may have noticed I've spooned of late
  On Laura Clyde—nothing else to do—
She's rather pretty—at any rate,
  Fond of flirting, and I am, too.

Laura's a friend of my Sister Fan;
  Her room joins mine, and the walls are thin.
So I, by accident, heard them plan
  Their dresses for masquerading in.

The ball was lovely, the costumes fine,
  And either dancing or iced champagne—
Can't say which, but expect the wine—
  Just a little confused my brain.

So meeting Laura—a gypsy maid—
  Knew her at once by her dress, you see—
I took her out for a promenade
  On the piazza alone with me.

"Flirted?" Said I was deep in love,
  Madly worshiped the ground she trod,
Vowed it by all below, above;
  Did she return it?—a word, a nod?

The fair head dropped in assent; and I
  Snatched off the mask—with rapture kissed her
A peal of laughter was my reply,
  By Jove! Old boy, it was my sister.

Laugh at me, Joe! Don't spare my pride!
  Nor mind my feelings—I feel so glad
It was my sister, not Laura Clyde;
  Heavens! What an escape I had

"I should vote for B.; so you may put up the carriage again, and we will both stay at home and pair off our votes."

Upon the announcement of the arrival of Prince Hassan, son of the Khedive, with the Egyptian contingent of 6,500 infantry and 1,000 artillery, the Sultan ordered the sacrifice of 100 sheep at the gates of his palace, in token of his thanks to God. The Prince conformed to the old-fashioned etiquette in presence of the Sultan. He touched both hands to his boots, and carried them to his head, and crossed his arms upon his stomach while reclining his body; but to the high officers of the palace, and other dignitaries, he simply gave a military salute in European style.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Waving of the Corn.

Plowman, whose gnarly hand yet kindly wheeled
Thy plow to ring this solitary tree
With clover, whose round plat, reserved afield,
In cool green radius twice my length may be—
Scanting the corn thy furrows else might yield,
To pleasure August, bees, fair thoughts, and me,
That here come oft together—daily I,
Stretched prone in summer's mortal ecstasy,
Do stir with thanks to thee, as stirs this morn
With waving of the corn.

Unseen, the farmer's boy from round the hill
Whistles a snatch that seeks his soul unsought,
And fills some time with tune, howbeit shrill;
The cricket tells straight on his simple thought—
Nay, 'tis the cricket's way of being still;
The peddler bee drones in, and gossips naught;
Far down the wood, a one-desiring dove
Times me the beating of the heart of love;
And these be all the sounds that mix each morn,
With waving of the corn.

From here to where the louder passions dwell,
Green leagues of hilly separation roll;
Trade ends where yon far clover ridges swell.
Ye terrible towns, ne'er claim the trembling soul
That, craftless all to buy or hoard or sell,
From out your deadly complex quarrel stole
To company with large amiable trees,
Suck honey summer with unjealous bees,
And take Time's strokes as softly as this morn
Takes waving of the corn.

Around the Farm.

J. T. Ellsworth, of Barre, Mass., says: "Experience has taught me that a cow's milk very deficient in butter often fattens a finer calf than that of a first-class butter cow."—Chatauqua Farmer.

My currant bushes have been attacked by the currant worms for the last two years. I sprinkled buttermilk on the leaves of the bushes, and by this means destroyed the worms and saved by bushes.—Farmers' Advocate.

We consider a fowl at its prime at 3 years old. The vitality of the egg is not gone at the end of a month if they can be kept in a temperature of about 50 deg., and if they are occasionally turned at the end of that time they will hatch.—Land and Water.

Currant worms may be effectually destroyed, says Prof. Riley, by sprinkling with solution of white hellebore, one table-spoonful in a bucket of water, or the powder may be sprinkled on while the dew is on the bushes. Hot water has also been successfully used to make the worms drop off without injuring the foliage.

N. B. White gives a simple contrivance to prevent the cut-worm from getting at garden plants. It is a strip of tin two inches wide and about ten inches long, formed into a cylinder and set over the plant. They will last a lifetime, and probably cost half a cent each.—Country Gentleman.

Weeds need constantly to be looked after and taken by the foretop. Remember that every weed that is allowed to go to seed this year will be replaced by hundreds and thousands next year. "One year's seeding" of weeds is said to produce "fifteen years of weeding," and it is not far from the truth.

The most successful fruit-growers, East and West, have decided that there is no better remedy for the coddling moth than to pasture hogs in the orchards, to eat the wormy apples and the worms therein. If the orchards are too large for the number of hogs kept, sheep are turned in. If we will all unite in this system, we shall soon see its good results. There is no doubt about its being effective.—Rural Home.

I have learned that wheat can be hoed with horses as readily as corn, and as fast as it can be drilled, the implement occupying the same space and the number of hoes being the same as a drill; and when hoed it looks as much improved as a cornfield dressed out with a cultivator. It does not destroy any greater percentage of the plants than is done in cultivating corn. Any man that can manage a plow well can manage a wheat hoe as readily. I can't see any reason why it won't help wheat as much to hoe it as any other crop, so as to let in light, heat and fertilizing gases of the atmosphere to give vigor to the plants.—Western Rural.

Good Seed.—Don't put in any but the best seed. This is an important item in successful farming. Good land and hard labor will not produce the best crops from poor seed. Let the best seed be planted, even if it has to be purchased; yet most farmers can generally select good seed from the best of their wheat and other small grain. In harvesting, save out the best bundles, and in corn, by going through the fields and carefully selecting the best-filled ears; then, by an occasional renewing of fresh seed from a distance and exchanging with the neighbors, all our crops may be greatly improved. Liberality in this interest pays handsomely. Procure the best seed at any reasonable amount of labor or expense.—Western Agriculturist.

About the House.

Fan's Cake.—Two cupfuls flour, one and one-half cupfuls sugar, one-half cupful cream, salt, four eggs, cream-tartar, soda.

Baker's Pound Cake.—Two cupfuls sugar, three-fourths cupful butter, three eggs, one cupful milk, salt, three cupfuls flour, nutmeg.

To Cook Soft-Shell Crabs.—They do not require dressing except to wash well in salt water; then fry in plenty of butter; season with pepper just before serving.

In the matter of salt meat, it should be remembered that the brine, if it has been used several times, occasionally becomes an active poison, and very dangerous.

Experience proves that two kinds of coffee mixed make a better beverage than any one quality alone. Thus Java one-half and Mocha one-half mixed make a superior coffee to either singly.

Black Cake.—One cupful butter, one and a half cupfuls sugar, one-half cupful molasses, three eggs, one cupful milk, one nutmeg, one teaspoonful each of cloves and cinnamon, four cupfuls flour, two pounds raisins, one pound currants, one-fourth pound citron.

Charcoal has been discovered to be a sure cure for burns. By laying a piece of cold charcoal upon the burn the pain subsides immediately. By leaving the charcoal on one hour the wound is healed, as has been demonstrated on several occasions.

To Do Up Point Lace.—Fill a goblet or any other glass dish with cold suds, made of the best quality of washing soap; put in your lace and place in a strong sunlight for several hours, often squeezing the lace, and changing the water if it seems necessary; when bleached, rinse gently in three or four waters, and if you wish it ochre or yellowish white, dip it into a weak solution of clear cold coffee liquid; if you desire to stiffen it slightly, dip it into a very thin starch. Provide yourself with a paper of fine needles, recall the form and looks of the lace when first purchased; take a pin-cushion, and arrange your lace in the right form, gently pick it into place, and secure with the needles every point and figure in the pattern as it was when purchased; leave it to dry, and either press between the leaves of a heavy book or lay between two pieces of flannel and pass a heated iron over it. Applique lace can be nicely washed by first sewing it carefully, right side down, to a piece of wolen flannel, washing, stiffening slightly, and pressing before removing from the flannel.

An Engineering Feat.

A remarkable piece of work near Yuma, Arizona, on the Southern Pacific railroad, is known as "The Loop," and many persons come long distances to see it. In laying out the line the engineers found great difficulty in reaching the summit without exceeding the grade to which they have been restricted. They leveled here and there, and found they could only accomplish it by widening a a long distance round, and making several bends in the track. Col. Grey found a way out of the trouble by making the road form a loop or circle upon itself, the first attempt of the kind in railway engineering. The road passes at a certain point into a short tunnel and bends gently to the left, rising steadily; and as gently bending to the left, it goes on and on, till at length, as you look from the rear platform of the train, you find yourself directly over the tunnel, and discover that the track has made a loop around the mountain as perfect as the one you form around your finger with a thread. The desired elevation has been gained, and the train has been headed in the same direction as when it emerged from the tunnel, and almost exactly above the former position. Passengers are on the qui vive to examine this curious bit of engineering, the platforms are crowded, and there is an eruption of heads from the windows of the cars, save and excepting the one which is filled with Chinese. John is never surprised at anything, and takes the world with the utmost serenity. He cares nothing for "The Loop" and its surroundings; it is "allee samee" to him, and he sits as demurely as though in his native village on the banks of the Yang-tse-Kiang.—Boston Globe,

Russian Soldiers.

A noticeable feature in the uniform of the Russian army is the manner in which the several regiments and brigades of a division are distinguished from one another by the color of their facings, etc. The dress of the infantry of the line consists of a single-breasted dark-green tunic, in cut somewhat similar to a blouse, with trousers tucked inside long boots. On the shoulder strap of the tunic is the number of the division to which the man belongs, while his brigade is shown by the color of the strap, this latter being red in all the first brigades of division and light blue in all the second brigades. The order of the regiments in a division is indicated by the color of the collar, both of the tunic and of the cloak. In the first regiment of a division the collars are red, in the second light blue, in the third white, and in the fourth dark green. The head-dress of the line is a chapka, with the number of the regiment on it. In the fortress battalions the color of the shoulder strap is always red, having marked on it the initial letter of the fortress to which the battalion belongs. Men belonging to the field artillery also wear a dark-green tunic, with red collar and shoulder straps, on which is marked the number of the brigade. The regiments of the guard wear a double-breasted tunic, and are likewise distinguished from one another by the color of their facings. The head-dress is a helmet, excepting in the Paul regiment, the men of which wear the grenadier cap.

Why the Baltimore and Ohio Employes Struck.

The chief grievance of the striking firemen on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad is that in the last two years their wages have been reduced 50 per cent. They complain that the extra Sunday wages have ceased, that they do not get return passes, where they have no engine to work back, but have to board several days at Martinsburg waiting for a job. A rather severe grievance is thus stated by the Baltimore American:

"About 7 p. m. possibly a dozen freight trains, all close together, will arrive at Baltimore, and the first man in will have to take the first train out, generally without rest or meals, and without being able to see his family. Thus it often happens that a fireman is on his engine two days at a stretch without any sleep, and with no food except what he takes in his bucket. As regards earnings it is asserted that about one-half of the firemen in the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for a long time past, owing to small wages and the method of moving trains, after paying expenses at Martinsburg, have not averaged $10 per month for the support of their families. In consequence many of them have had to move outside of the city, not being able even to pay room-rent."

Number of Our Family.

The most trustworthy estimate of the number of our family for the year 1876, as furnished by statisticians, is 1,423,917,000. The majority live in Asia. About four-sevenths of the human race, or 825,548,590, is Asiatic. Europe comes next with over a fifth, or 309,178,300; Africa with about a seventh, or 199,921,000; America with less then a sixteenth, or 85,519,800; and finally Australia and Polynesia, with the very small fraction of 4,748,600 people. Europe is the most densely populated, having eighty-two persons to the square mile; Asia, forty-eight to the square mile; Africa, seventeen and a half, America and Australia five and a half and one and a quarter respectively.

There may come a time when everything bad of Brigham Young will be forgotten, and he will be remembered as the great philanthropist who buried twenty-seven mothers-in-law in a dozen years.

Permission is to be given to French soldiers in future to wear spectacles, as in the German army. Medical men have urged upon the Government that good glasses greatly ease sight, and even strengthen it.

Last year in France, out of 306,000 young men drafted for the army, there were but from 500 to 600 who did not respond. In Germany, during the same year, out of 406,000 drafted, 40,000 neglected to respond.

Bob Ingersoll, when he went through the 1,600-foot level of the Ophir mine, struck a heated current of air with a temperature of 140 degrees, and remarked piously and perspiringly that if there was any place hotter than that, he would be, etc., if he didn't join the church.

Lady (aspiring to secure an office by a civil-service examination): "Pray, Mr. Professor, what is a periphrasis?" Professor: "Madam, it is simply a circumlocutory cycle of oratorical sonorosity, circumscribing an atom of ideality, lost in verbal profundity." Lady "Thank you, sir."

During the past year more than 60,000 applications have been made to the British Postoffice for missing letters, most of which contained property, and largely remittances in some shape or another. In about 20,000 cases the inquiry and search made for these letters proved successful, leaving, however, more than 40,000 letters unaccounted for.

The champion servant-gal lives in Brooklyn. The family, returning after a short absence, found her tied to a chair, and the house robbed of money and jewelry worth about $500. Her story was that some men had bound and gagged her, but the detectives suspected the girl herself. A search of the house revealed the stolen treasures hid in the coal cellar. She was locked up.

There are irregular tides in the great lakes. One day not long ago there was a sudden fall of one foot in the level of Lake Ontario, the cause of which is unknown. These tides occur at all hours of the day, and have been known to occasion accidents to boats in shallow water, the sudden receding of the water leaving the boat on rocks where a few moments before there had been an abundance of water.

The Southern gold mines are rising again to prominence, the product of North Carolina for the fiscal year 1875-6 amounting to $10,335,000, that of Georgia to $7,379,000, and that of South Carolina to $1,381,000—a total of $10,096,000. The product for the year just closed is supposed to be much greater. Eleven stamp-mills are now running near Dahlonega, Ga., and Boston capital is the dominant interest. Labor is 75 cents a day, and wood $1 a cord.

It is proposed next year to celebrate, at Penzance or Truro, in Cornwall, the centenary of the death of the Cornish language. According to general belief the last person who could speak Cornu-British fluently died in 1778. It is recorded that she used the language chiefly for swearing purposes. The celebration will probably take the form of a Congress of Celtic scholars, and it is expected that this reunion will be followed by the publication of a number of Cornish manuscripts.

What Can Be Cured

Need not be endured, although what can't must be. Among the bodily ills susceptible of complete removal by that benign tonic and alterative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, are general debility, malarial fevers, constipation, dyspepsia, liver disorder, and nervousness. Its remedial capabilities are, however, by no means limited to these maladies. Its properties as a blood depurent render it extremely serviceable in expelling the acrid impurities which produce those painful disorders, rheumatism and gout, and its invigorating and mildly stimulating effect upon the kidneys and bladder constitute it a useful medicine for impelling those organs to a complete performance of their functions when they are weak and inactive. In fact, there is scarcely any disease of which weakness is an accompaniment in which this admirable medicine cannot be used with advantage.

Light, Well-Raised Biscuits, Bread, Cakes, and pastry digest easily and conduce to good health. Good health makes labor of all kinds easier, and prolongs life. Dooley's Yeast Powder will always make all these productions light and wholesome. It is warranted to make better, lighter, sweeter, more toothsome, and nutritious, biscuits, cake, bread, etc., than any other baking powder.

Thirty years' experience proves the Graefenberg Vegetable Pills to be the mildest and most effective medicine ever known for the complete cure of headache, biliousness, liver complaints, nervousness, fevers, and diseases of digestion. Sold everywhere; price 25 cents per box. Send for almanacs. Graefenberg Co., New York.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, Complexion and General Health.

CONSTIPATION!

SHOULD not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache; for the relief of which, Take Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

THE SUN.
1877. NEW YORK. 1877.

The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.
The price of the Daily SUN is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.
The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.
The Weekly Sun, eight pages of 56 broad columns, is furnished at $1 a year, postpaid.
Special Notice.—In order to introduce The Sun more widely to the public, we will send THE WEEKLY edition for the remainder of the year, to Jan. 1, 1878, postpaid, for Half a Dollar. Try it.
Address THE SUN, N. Y. City.

Our Tea Trade

Is constantly increasing. We now sell more in a day than we used to in a week—now sell a good tea at 25 cents a pound. Those who prefer a fancy article we have it up to the very finest article 60 and 90 cents per pound. No middlemen between us and our customers. We purchase direct of the importers and sell direct to the consumers, thereby saving them the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale dealer. All of these have to have their profits which adds 20 to 30 cents per pound to the tea before it reaches the consumer. This is the only secret of our success, doing away with the middlemen.

Young Hyson Tea,	25, 40, 50, best 90 cents per pound
Gunpowder Tea,	40, 60, best 90 cents per pound
Imperial Tea,	30 70, best 90 cepts per pound

A Few Words of Wisdom.

For all who are seeking new homes in the West. If you are going to change your location, by all means you should keep on about the same latitude as where you formerly lived for in this way you will escape the severe climatic changes in the weather incident to the extreme North or South, having none of these things to contend with, yourself and family are healthy and you become a producer at once, consequently soon independent; on the other hand should you listen to the many glowing accounts of the sunny South, or the mild climate of the North, and thus be induced to try your fortunes there, you will find the reality is not all your fancy painted it. If you go South it usually takes about two years to get acclimated to the climate, during which time, not being able to work, yourself and family are consumers, besides being constantly exposed to the malarial fevers which abound there, and the experience of many is that they return discouraged, leaving not a few loved ones beneath the sod in the sunny South. Therefore, in going West keep on about the same latitude which will insure health and happiness. There are most excellent lands in Northern Missouri on the line of the Hannibal & St. Jo. R. R. and in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, "just as cheap and good as the sun ever shown upon," why not accept a certainty rather than run the risk of losing all? Through day and sleeping cars are run from Toledo, Ohio, via the Wabash R'y and Quincy to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas city, and from Chicago via Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., whereby all arre furnished firstclass accomodations.

We are sure our farmer friends do not know the value of the Nickel Steel Plow now made at Butler, by Leonard & Co. Those who have tried them pronounce them superior to anything yet introduced. We mention this more from the fact that it is an article made at home, and if as good even as those of foreign make, our farmers should give it the preference. Call at Ensley's Agricultural Depot and examine them. You have a chance to try them before you buy, and the prices are as low as on other plows.

Major McFadin's Last Epistle for the Present.

LAKE MANITOU, OCT. 1839.

The morning came bright and clear with a good prospect for fishing and hunting. The Indians were up early and ready for the day's sport. I dressed the little Indian's arm that was broken when the ponies ran off, and bathed it in cold water, and it mended finely. We caught some fine bass and pike through the day, but the main thing was to get ready for the night's fishing with spears. We had one large canoe that the Indians had made with their tomahawks, out of a big tree some time before. As there was no hickory-bark in the neighborhood for torches, we had to make a light with an iron pan full of coon oil, with a wick made out of the lining of my breeches, placed on the bow of the canoe, which made a good light. At night we started out and I paddled and pushed the canoe through the shallow places, where the fish go to feed after night, and the two Indians held the spears, and oh, such fishing. That night we got about forty big buffalo fish and pike, none of them weighing less than fifteen or twenty pounds. We had to make several trips for them. The little Indians made a fire on the shore as a guide for us. That day the Indians had also killed a deer. I enjoyed that night's fishing hugely, and never got tired of it. The next day we were busy in cutting up the fish and drying and smoking them, and jerking the venison, which is done by cutting up the meat into strips and drying it on a scaffold. We lived almost entirely on fish and venison, and I firmly believe that fish is good brain food, as it made me very gassy and I talked the Indians almost to death, and could beat my friend Judge Biddle all hollow making and grinding out poetry, and the Indians told me if I did not quit talking and making so much fuss that they could not catch any fish or kill any game, so I had to dry up and quit eating fish, as it made me too smart.

It was grand to paddle around among the islands in the lake and wander along its grand old banks and study the beauties of nature and see the hand of the Creator in everything. As it

"Warms in the sun,
Refreshes in the breeze,
Glows in the stars,
And blossoms in the trees."

One day the Indians asked me again about the life that is to come, and I told them of the beautiful words of the Saviour: "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." And the spirit says come, and let whosoever will say come and drink of the water of life freely, and that all who would obey the commands of the Saviour and live a good life would be saved, without money and without price. But it costs a good deal now-a days to go to Heaven by the way of some of our fashionable churches. And it also says, "That he who giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." But few are willing to take him for security They would rather make a sure thing and take a big interest off of some poor man who was in distress and needed help in this world, and go to hell afterwards, than to trust in the promise of the Lord who had no place to lay his head. I wish the Saviour would come again and drive the money changers out of some of our churches and temples of worship. There are many good Christians, but there are some who are stealing the livery of Heaven to serve the devil in, and every day are straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. I told them that it was appointed unto man once to die, and after this the judgment, and how when Queen Elizabeth came to die, she begged for one moment of time to make her peace with God for murdering Mary Queen of Scotts. But she was too late and had to die unrepented, unforgiven and unsaved. But she will not receive her punishment until the great day of judgment, when the books of life shall be opened, and every one judged according to their works. The doctrine that the soul of the good and the soul of the wicked goes straight to heaven or hell as soon as they die, is all a farce and the Bible does not teach it. I am a firm believer in the day of judgment, and if in the Bible. If the former doctrine is true, the judgment day would also be a that is not true, there is nothing true mere farce in calling them out of heaven and hell to judge them over again. But the book does not teach it, and the man who preaches it knows better or is an ignoramus. One day a trapper, who believed that all were going through on the broad track, came along and we had a little talk on the subject. I told him that if he believed that every rascal was going to be saved for him to go on if he thought there was no hereafter, and that when he came to die to die game and no sniffling and crying, and that the only persons who were afraid to die were the old sinners who had trampled the laws of God and man under foot all their lives, and that it was only the good and humble followers of Christ who were not afraid to die and travel through the dark valley of the shadow of death and fear no evil and face the great hereafter. One of the great proofs to me of the immortality of the soul is that I never knew of a little child that was afraid to die. But they die happy, and at the great day of judgment they will all have reserved seats, and next to them will come the hundred and forty and four thousand—those who were washed white in the blood of the lamb; those who had suffered martyrdom and died at the stake for the cause of Christ. And the fact of a great, big, ugly worm weaving itself up in a silky cone or nest, fastened to a bush or limb, and remain there through all the winter's cold and storm, when all outside nature is frozen solid, and still live, and then, when the warm sun and rain comes in the spring time, it comes out the most beautiful butterfly you ever saw. That is as much a miracle to me as that the body shall come forth and the sea give up its dead. It is such men as Dives who are afraid to die and meet their God. It is not safe to risk that broad road. There are so many deadfalls and smashups on it that we had better take that safe but narrow track to the happy hunting grounds.

But here I am off on theology again and must get back to my story, or you will never forgive me for wearying you so much about the salvation of your souls and taking you through kingdom come on the right road.

I told you once that I had seen a glass or joint snake, and I had been wanting all my life to see a hoopsnake. One day, when out in the sand-ridges hunting for coon and bee trees, I heard a noise in the leaves behind me, and looking around I saw something like a hoop coming toward me very fast and jumped to one side and it ran up against a tree, and before it could recuperate I killed it with a club, and sure enough it was a hoop-snake. I have heard that if they strike a person or tree with their sharp tail it is death to the tree or man.

I had often wanted to know if snakes could charm birds or animals. One day while out hunting I heard a wild turkey kind of clucking and slipped up to see what was the matter. I beheld a turkey gobbler in a clear place going round and round in a circle, and looking a little closer, saw a tremendous black snake coiled up and his eyes glistening like fire. The gobbler got closer and closer, and when it had got up to within four or five feet, and the snake was about to go for it, I fired and killed the snake. The gobbler was so far gone that he tumbled over and it was some time before he came to. I let him go, as hunters never take advantage of an animal in distress. He was the largest turkey I ever saw, and had a beard eleven inches long. That settled the matter with me as to snake charming. As a matter of course he could not have swallowed the turkey, and I must leave you to infer the reason he charmed it.

While I am on the subject of snakes I will say that I had often heard that snakes swallowed their young ones, and I wished to know if such was the case. One day I saw a very large bull snake, that makes a noise like a goose, lying in the sun. Approaching it, it made a kind of hissing noise, and the first thing I knew here came thirty or forty little snakes and ran down the old one's throat. I killed it and the young ones came out and ran away, and that settled me on that question.

You have often heard it said that animals and birds are guided by instinct only, but I believe that they have sense and can think. One day I was standing on the edge of a prairie and saw a quail coming straight for me as swift as an arrow and dropped right at my feet, and right behind it was a little hawk, coming so close and fast that if I had not dodged it would have hit me in the face. That little quail had never seen me before nor I it, but it had confidence in me, and I saved it from the hawk that lit in the top of a dry tree to wait until I left. I drew a bead and took off one of its wings. A great moral question then agitated my mind, whether I had done right or not, as the hawk was only carrying out the laws of getting something to eat in that way and manner for which it was created.

The beautiful little fawn, when born, is the most helpless of all animals, and a weasel or hawk could kill it. It lays perfectly still in the bush or grass and never moves, and the doe or mother stays away from it entirely until night approaches, and then comes quietly and easily and gives a soft, peculiar bleat, and hunts it up and protects and suckles it all night and leaves it again early in the morning for the whole day, knowing full well that if seen about where it is in its helpless condition it would soon be found by or on account of her presence. If found when so young you can pick it up and carry it a short distance and set it down and it will follow you home like a dog. I have read that the young of the buffalo will do the same thing. But before I leave this let me tell you what a kind Providence does to protect the little fawn while it is so young and helpless. While in that condition there is no scent or smell arising from it, so that a dog or animal cannot track or find it the same as they find other animals by the scent. It remains that way until it is old and strong enough to run and take care of itself, and then it can be tracked from its scent like any other wild animal. That is the second strongest case of special Providence in favor of helpless animals that I ever knew; but my story is getting too long and I must wind it up. Suffice it to say that we stayed about a week at the lake, had a splendid time and got plenty of fish and game, and one morning we loaded up the traps, little Indians, etc., on the ponies and started for the Tippecanoe, and arrived at the camp in the evening and found the Indians that we had left there all right, except Kilkomic, who had got homesick and wanted to go home. He had got so round and fat that when he laid down his head it would and could not touch the ground, and it had to be propped up with a chunk of wood. Kilkomic wanted me to go home with him to the Mississinewa, and said if I would that he would send me home from there, so we got ready to start the next morning. We got a good sleep and rose early and prepared to leave. I hated to leave them, and they wished me to stay with them, particularly the little Indian, whose arm had got broken and was about well, and if it had not been for my mother, whom I had promised that I would come home again, I would have stayed with the Indians.

And with the Indians stood,
A bunch of feathers on my head,
With honey, fish and coon for food,
And venison for bread.

After a good deal of pow-wowing and saying how! how! all around, Kilkomic and me left. He was so short-legged that I had to hold him on his pony part of the time. After some hard traveling and crossing the Wabash below Peru, we arrived at Kilkomic's home on the Mississinewa, about eight miles from Peru. I stayed all night with him and he treated me so kindly that I hated to part with him. The next morning he sent me with Jim Godfrey, a son of Chief Godfrey, an old friend of my father, and another Indian, in a canoe to Logansport. The first night we reached and camped out on Cedar Island, in the Wabash. The next day we arrived at Logansport all right, and they returned home and I went out to David Corbet's now dead, who then lived on the farm now owed by Mr. Ross, in Noble township, where we first landed when we came to this county. Mr. Corbet, who was an old friend, sent me home on horseback, where I arrived safe and sound, and found the folks all well and glad to see me. And now, my dear girls and boys, I must close and bid you good bye until Jack Frost comes, and then, if I am not nipped in in the bud by an early frost, I will tell you this winter what became of those poor Indians who had treated me so kindly, and how they lingered and stayed around the the graves and camp fires of their fathers, who once owned all this part of the country for hundreds of years back and lived happy until the cruel white man came. It is too much like work writing this hot weather, and work and I fell out when I was quite young, and we have never made up since. In conclusion, let me say that if I do not change my mind I am going to run for Congress, and when I go to Washington every child shall have a book. We will now close by singing Old Hundred and Hold the Fort.

Art Publishing.

Few people are aware of the wonderful progress that Art has made in the country during the last quarter of a century. It is but a few decades since, that those who desired to beautify and adorn their homes, were obliged to depend almost entirely on foreign artists. But such a state of affairs in this age of progress and improvement could not last long with the great American people. Genius from the East to the West, from the North to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, answered the demand for beauty, taste and refinement, and today our leading artists are not surpassed by the leading moderen masters in Europe.

Great Art publishing establishments have sprung up, and by various processes the finest and most expensive paintings are reproduced in all their elegance and beauty, and at a price within the means of the masses. So that no one need be without the refining influences of beautiful pictures at home.

Among the progressive leading Art publishing firms of the country, we take pleasure in mentioning George Stinson & Co., of Portland Main; they were among the first in the business, and we can only understand the colossal proportions their trade has assumed by remembering that this is a great and mighty Nation of nearly fifty million people. We cannot better illustrate the magnitude of their business than to state the amount of money paid by them for postage stamps during the year 1876; we have the figures direct from the firm or we should think there was some mistake. They paid for postage stamps for the year 1876, thirty-three thousand one hundred and four dollars and ninety-two cents ($33,104 92) and, in connection with this it should be remembered that only the small orders were sent by mail, the larger going by express and freight George Stinson & Co's., agents are to be found in every State in the Union and Dominion of Canada, and in every country without scarcely an exception.

Long since this enterprising firm recognized the value of printer's ink judiciously used in advertising, and they inform us that without it could never have extended their business as it is today, in three times the number of years. A short time since they paid in a single day twenty-four thousand dollars ($24,000.00) on a contract for newspaper advertising. They evidently long since found the road to success and have neither turned to the right nor the left. Three things are necessary for eminet success in business. First, standard honest goods that the people generally need and and desire,—let them be the best, whatever the line of business. Second let your prices be reasonable—as low as possible. Third, and presistent advertising, and you will find low prices, made known and proved, will bring trade that will give a larger income than can be made any other way.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE bulls and bears of the New York Stock Exchange enjoyed a genuine sensation the other day. A stock-gambler named Selover, who had been engaged in some combination with Jay Gould, became possessed with the idea that the latter was betraying him. They met on the street, and without ceremony Selover attacked Gould, striking him right and left. After giving the great stock speculator a sound trouncing he picked him up in his hands and dropped him down a basement area. It was not a very heroic deed, for, while Gould is a mere stripling in size and strength, Selover is a giant weighing 240 pounds.

A SHOCKING accident occurred at Pittsburgh, Pa., a few days ago. Seven men engaged in lining a furnace were on a scaffold, supported by ropes. These took fire from the furnace and the scaffold fell, precipitating the men into the furnace. Julius Harden and Michael Cassick were taken out dead, and the five others so badly burned that they are not expected to live.... William B. Ogden, one of the early pioneers and the first Mayor of Chicago, and a very wealthy man, died recently at his home in the suburbs of New York city.

AT Scranton, Pa., a few days ago, a mob of striking coal-miners, numbering upward of 5,000, visited the railroad premises and forced the workmen to quit their occupations assaulting and injuring some of those who protested against their interference. A company of local volunteers, after a fierce assault from the mob, fired into the crowd, killing four men and wounding many others. The mob then dispersed. This strike of the coal-miners promises to be a more serious affair than that of the railroad men. Dispatches from Wilkesbarre state that the Wyoming coal region is one vast military camp, about 5,000 State troops being scattered through the valley. Many of the trains bearing soldiers were attacked and stoned by the rioters, and hundreds of the latter were being arrested. Gov. Hartranft assumed personal command of the troops. Several companies of United States soldiers were also sent to the scene of the troubles.

TWELVE companies of United States troops have been stationed in the Wyoming coal region of Pennsylvania for the suppression of any outbreak on the part of the striking miners. The State troops have been relieved and sent home.

HENRY MAXWELL, a well-known New York merchant, has been arrested on a charge of forging acceptances to the amount of $33,000. ....A man named Coffroth, editor of a Somerset (Pa.) paper, while riding in a carriage in Pittsburgh, was asked by the driver if he would allow two strangers to ride with him, and consented. The men suddenly pinioned his arms behind him, placed a revolver at his head, and robbed him of money and valuables to the extent of $400.

THE WEST.

A FRIGHTFUL calamity occurred at Cincinnati last week. A cigar-box factory in which a number of boys and girls were employed, took fire and was consumed. The building was five stories high, and the employes were in the upper story. The flames cut off all means of exit before the alarm was fairly sounded, and four of the unfortunate girls, together with two men, who bravely attempted their rescue, were burned to death. Three boys and two girls were badly injured and sent to the hospital.... The funeral of five of the brave officers who fell with Gen. Custer at his last fight took place, on the 3d inst., at Fort Leavenworth, and the remains were interred in the National Cemetery.

A WHOLE family, consisting of Lewis Spear and his four children, consisting of two daughters, aged 15 and 17, and two sons, aged 11 and 13, were recently murdered and robbed by unknown assassins in Clark county, Mo. The murderers made the attack when the victims were asleep, dealing heavy blows upon their heads with an ax. Mr. Spencer was Township Trustee, and had in his possession $1,000. The object of the murder was to secure this money.

ELEVEN more riotous railroad strikers have been sentenced by Judge Treat, of the United States District Court, at Springfield, Ill., to three months' imprisonment, for interfering with the running of trains on roads under the jurisdiction of that court.

WHILE Mr. Charles Belden and family, of Gibson, Knox county, Ill., were absent at church last Sunday, their residence was broken open by a tramp. Search was made for the scoundrel, and he was found in a cornfield near by. He immediately opened fire with a revolver, instantly killing Mr. Belden, mortally wounding Mr. Charles M. Cower, and wounding Mr. James Packerel in the leg. Also a boy named Keeler in the foot, which will have to be amputated. He killed two horses and a dog, and then made good his escape.

PIKE, the long-haired Spiritualist, who some time ago shot and killed S. S. Jones, the editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, in Chicago, has been tried and acquitted on the ground of insanity. The murderer was not released, however, but has been confined in the Jacksonville Insane Asylum as a lunatic.

JOHN E. DAILY, a San Francisco stock broker, was recently shot and killed in the streets of that city by Leslie C. Hauks, Consul General for Guatemala. The latter subsequently committed suicide at his cell in the jail, by shooting himself through the breast with a Springfield rifle....Dr. J. B. Armstrong, a prominent physician of Terre Haute, Ind., was recently shot and killed by an unknown assassin, while returning from a visit to a sick patient in the suburbs of the city.

SOUTH.

A BLOODY shooting affray recently took place at Hopewell, Greenup county, Ky., between David Floyd, his two sons, and Dick Floyd, an old man aged 80, on the one side, and Joseph A. Martin and two sons on the other. David Floyd was shot through the bowels, and Dick Floyd shot in the forehead. The Floyd boys were both shot, one it is thought fatally.

GENERAL.

TWENTY-SIX rioters, arrested at Urbana, for obstructing the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western railroad at that place, was tried before United States Judge Treat at Springfield, Ill., and each of them was sent to jail for ninety days. The road in question is being managed by a receiver appointed by the court, and the strikers were guilty of "contempt of court." ....At Chicago, forty-eight rioters have been held for trial in the Criminal Court in bail ranging from $500 to $1,000. A large number have been committed for trial at Harrisburg, Pa. A large number of the St. Louis rioters have been committed for trial in default of bonds for $3,000 each. Fifteen men, charged with interfering with trains on the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western, the Logansport, Crawfordsville and Southwestern, the Ohio and Mississippi and the Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Lafayette roads (all of which are in the hands of receivers), were tried before United States Judge Drummond and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

THE insurance adjusters have completed settlements of the losses of the St. John (N. B.) fire. The total amount to be paid by insurance companies is $6,736,000. Of this, English companies will pay $4,822,000; Canadian, $1,469,000, and American, $445,000, divided between the Ætna, of Hartford, $240,000; Hartford, of Hartford, $140,000, and Phenix of New York, $65,000....On the night of the 4th inst. a fire broke out in the poor-house on the Norfolk county industrial farm, near Simcoe, Ontario. It was a huge wooden pile, and by midnight the whole structure was destroyed. The water supply was defective and the brigade from the town could effect little. The poor-house contained forty-three male and eighteen female inmates, paupers of the county. Desperate exertions were made to save life, but so quickly did the flames extend that seventeen of them were caught and burned to death, six women and eleven men. These were principally bed-ridden old people who could not move without aid, and in the face of the roaring flames aid could not reach them. Five men were burned severely in attempting to rescue the paupers.

BURNED: The St. Boniface Hospital in St. Louis, loss $40,000; the Indiana Fertilizing Company's works at Indianapolis, loss $15,000; the Morton House stables, thirty-six horses and a large number of carriages at Indian Harbor, Conn., loss $40,000; the main building of the Wesleyan Female College at Murfreesboro, N. C., loss $75,000.

BUSINESS failures: R. G. Dun & Co., wholesale merchants, Montreal, liabilities $650,000; Charles G. Martin, stock broker, New York, liabilities $80,000; the Citizens' Fire Insurance Company, of Newark, N. J., and the Columbia Life Insurance Company, of St. Louis....Maj. Buffington, the ordnance officer at Pittsburgh during the riots, has asked that his conduct be made a matter of court inquiry. The War Department does not consider it necessary. He says, in his letter, that he was supposed to know his responsibility, and believes that the result justifies the wisdom of his course. The Secretary of War approves it.

A WASHINGTON correspondent states that "a good portion of the President's message upon the reassembling of Congress will be devoted to a consideration of the labor question. It is known that at numerous Cabinet meetings held within the past two weeks this subject has in several instances been discussed to the exclusion of all other matters. Several members of the Cabinet are known to favor the passage of a law providing for the organization of a commission which shall have due regard for the interest of all concerned—producers, merchants, railroad employes and capitalists—so that on any question a fair compromise may be effected."

PRESIDENT HAYES has issued a general order prohibiting the sale of arms and ammunition to the Indians, and revoking all licenses to trade with them in such articles....Some of the treasury officials think that had the strike continued for two or three days more there would have been a serious panic in the country, as it has been ascertained that the New York banks had decided to refuse to loan any money upon collaterals. As this resolution was made at the very end of the strike, it did not become necessary for the banks to put it into effect.

POLITICAL.

THE Republican State Convention of Ohio met at Cleveland on the 1st inst., and nominated the following ticket: Governor, W. H. West; Lieutenant Governor, Ferd. Vogeler; Supreme Judge, W. H. Johnson; Attorney General, George K. Nash; Clerk of the Supreme Court, Dwight C. Rowell; School Commissioner, J. T. Lukens; Board of Public Works, A. W. Luckey. The following platform was adopted:

Resolved, That we reaffirm and adopt the platform and resolutions of the National Convention of the Republican party adopted in the convention at Cincinnati in June, 1876.

2. That the Republicans of Ohio reaffirm their unfaltering confidence in Rutherford B. Hayes as a statesman, patriot and Republican, and cordially approve and support his efforts for the pacification of the country and the establishment of its civil service upon a basis of purity and efficiency.

3. That we reaffirm it as the unalterable purpose of the Republican party to maintain and enforce the provisions of the recent amendments to the Federal constitution guaranteeing the equal rights of all citizens before the law, irrespective of race or color, and to insist on the full and effectual performance by the Federal Government, in the execution of all its powers, of its constitutional obligations in that behalf.

4. That we are in favor of both silver and gold as money; that both shall be a legal-tender for the payment of all debts, except where otherwise specially provided by law, with coinage and valuation so regulated that our people shall not be placed at a disadvantage in our trade with foreign nations, and that both metals shall be kept in circulation as the money of the nation, as contemplated by the constitution, and we therefore demand the remonetization of silver.

5. That we are opposed to any further grants of public lands, or money subsidies, or the extension of the public credit of the General Government to aid in the construction of railroads.

6. That we are opposed to the renewal of patents by act of Congress which are burdensome and oppressive to the masses of the people, and especially to the laboring classes.

7. That we view with alarm the present disturbed condition of the country as evidenced by the extensive strikes of the workingmen, and followed by the destruction of life and property in different parts of the country, and while we deprecate each and every resort to violence and disorder, and cordially approve the action of our national and State authorities in their efforts to enforce the supremacy of the law, yet we do most heartily sympathize with the condition of the honest and industrious laborers who are willing to work but remain unemployed, or are employed at wages inadequate to comfort and independence, and as an earnest of our desire to find a remedy for their condition we recommend—first, that Congress establish a National Bureau of Industry; second, that Congress exert its authority over all national highways of trade by prescribing and enforcing such reasonable regulations as will tend to promote the safety of travel, secure fair returns for the capital invested, and fair wages to the employes, preventing mismanagement, improper discriminations, and the aggrandizement of officials at the expense of stockholders, shippers, and employes; third, that provision be made for statutory arbitrations between employers and employes, to adjust controversies, reconcile interests, and establish justice and equity between them.

THE Democrats of Mississippi met in State Convention at Jackson on the 1st inst., and nominated Gov. Stone for re-election as Governor, W. H. Sims for Lieutenant Governor, W. L. Hemingway for Treasurer, S. L. Gwinn for Auditor, T. C. Catching for Attorney General, and J. A. Smith for Superintendent of Public Education. The convention adopted the following platform:

Fidelity to the constitution of the United States.

Home rule and preservation of State governments, with all their reserved and guaranteed rights unimpaired.

No interference by military power with the freedom of elections and with the civil and political rights of citizens of the United States.

Protection and equal rights of all classes.

No discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude or birthplace, and no special legislation for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many.

Strict adherence in the selection of public agents to the time-honored Jeffersonian standard: "Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he true to the constitution?"

Continuation of the policy of retrenchment and reform so signally inaugurated by the Democratic party.

Reduction of the burdens of taxation to the lowest point compatible with the efficient execution of the laws.

Corporations of every description supervisable within constitutional limits by State authority, and subordinate to State legislation in the interest and for the protection of the people.

As the perpetuity of free government depends upon the virtue and intelligence of the people, we pledge ourselves to the maintenance of the State system of free schools.

We favor granting such aid as may be extended without violation of the constitution of the United States or departing from the established usages of the Government, to the Texas Pacific railroad, and for rebuilding and keeping in repair the levees of the Mississippi river.

THE Maine Republican Convention met at Augusta on the 9th inst., and was called to order by Senator James G. Blaine. Joseph Drummond, of Portland, was made President of the convention. Gov. Connor was nominated by acclamation for re-election to the Governorship. The Committee on Resolutions made their report. The resolutions declare it to be the imperative duty of the National Government, by the exercise of every constitutional power, to extend its protection to every citizen, native and naturalized, white and colored, whether men tied by tyranny abroad, or by political persecution, now shielded under the heresy of States rights at home. That the Republicans of Maine view with solicitude and alarm the complete consolidation of all political power in sixteen Southern States in the hands of those who precipitated the rebellion, while the Union men are persecuted into silence or banishment, and the entire colored race so practically disfranchised by force and fear that in Congressional districts where they have more than two-thirds of the voters they are unable to elect one of their race or a white man in sympathy with their interests. Thirty-five representatives in Congress, and thirty-five electoral votes appropriated to the Southern States by reason of their colored population are thus invested to the sole aggrandizement of Confederate power in the National Government, and late rebel soldiers in Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana are thus enabled to exert in the administration of the Government more than double the political power of Union soldiers in any Northern State. That the action of the Democrats of the House of Representatives, in refusing appropriations for the army, except upon conditions that deprived the Commander-in-Chief of the discretion vested in him by the constitution, was wholly unjustifiable, dangerous and revolutionary, and it is a striking commentary on this evil and perilous course that two of the States whose entire representation in Congress aided in defeating the Army bill have been since compelled, under pressure and violence of mob law, to call on the National Government for such aid as only the army can render. That a sound currency, based on coin and redeemable in coin, is essential to the prosperity of the people, and we therefore demand that, in the resumption of specie payment, the promise of the National Government be kept in an honest, straightforward manner, and that no backward or sideway step be taken. The resolutions oppose any further land grants or subsidies for railroads by the General Government; favor such incidental protection and development of the country as the wisest system of revenue may rightfully and properly afford: also favor wise and salutary measures tending to the purification, integrity, and independence of the civil service, and declare that non-sectarian education must be continued. Charles J. Talbot moved the adoption of the resolutions, and moved the previous question. A scene of confusion ensued, and the previous question was not seconded. Gen. J. S. Chamberlain moved an amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That we reaffirm unshaken confidence in the integrity, patriotism, and statesmanship of Rutherford B. Hayes, and we cordially approve his efforts to carry out in good faith the principles enunciated by the Cincinnati Convention.

Gov. Chamberlain spoke in favor of his amendment, and his remarks were received with great applause. C. A. Boutell, of Bangor, moved the following amendment, and advocated its adoption:

Resolved, That this convention declares its belief that Gov. Packard, of Louisiana, and Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, were entitled to their respective offices by the same votes which elected Rutherford B. Hayes President of the United States, and that both Governors were clearly entitled to recognition by the National Government, and by failure to recognize them placed the National Government in the humiliating attitude of surrendering to rebels threatening with arms in their hands to resist its legitimate authority.

Mr. Blaine took the floor, and said he was opposed to both resolutions, and in favor of peace. He moved that the resolutions be tabled, and made a speech in support of his motion, in which he said: "I do not rise to speak for an indorsement of the administration or against it, for the Southern policy or in opposition to it. A difference is existing in the Republican party. What shall be done about it? Shall one man be compelled to swallow the opinions of another, or shall not each have liberty to cherish his own? I am opposed to both these resolutions. I am known by perhaps every member of this convention to entertain very decided views on the Southern question, but I am just as ready to vote against the resolution condemning the President's policy as I am to vote against one approving. We cannot take action either way without offending good men, and creating needless heartburnings and dissensions. We can all unite on a strong platform, embracing the issues which we hold in common. We can rally as one man to the support of Gov. Connor. We can be tolerant of each other's opinions. We can all remember and adapt the old theological maxim which teaches, 'In essentials there should be unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity.'" A. G. Lebroke made a violent speech against the administration, which was greeted with cheers and hisses. After other speeches Aaron H. Morrill said he wanted peace, but there was no peace in opposition to the national administration, and he desired to say this to his friends who had preceded him. He proceeded to address the convention amid a scene of great confusion, being greeted with cheers and hisses. Mr. Blaine's motion to lay both resolutions on the table prevailed.... A meeting of disaffected Ohio Republicans met at Columbus last week, and was presided over by Gen. John Beatty, former member of Congress. Resolutions were adopted bitterly denouncing the Southern policy of President Hayes....A. B. Cornell, Naval officer of New York, and Chairman of the Republican State Committee, says he will not resign either office, but proposes to hold on to both until retired.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

THERE is no doubting the fact that the Russian arms have met with a severe reverse north of the Balkans, and that the onward march to Constantinople has received a serious check. The Russian forces engaged in the battle, or series of battles, near Plevna, are variously estimated at from 40,000 to 100,000—probably the first figure is nearly correct. The Turks numbered about 50,000, and were strongly fortified. The Russians made repeated assaults upon the Turkish lines, and were in each instance repulsed with great slaughter. They were finally forced to withdraw, and retreated in the direction of Sistova. Some details of the fighting will be found in another column....A correspondent at Vienna telegraphs that the Russian defeat at Plevna was owing to their being flanked and attacked in the rear by a Turkish division, the artillery of which mowed down the Muscovites by hundreds. The Russians were completely routed, but managed to save their cannon. Osman Pasha admits that both sides lost enormously. The military authorities in the Austrian capital ascribed the victory partly to the superiority of the Henry-Martini rifle used by the Turkish troops over the inferior order of gun used by the Russians.

THE Russian Minister of War directs all army corps not yet mobilized to furnish a division each to the fighting army, to be at once dispatched to the Danube....A dispatch from Erzeroum says: "The Russian center, reinforced by fourteen battalions of infantry and three field batteries, has resumed the offensive. There has been continuous fighting on the advanced lines before Kars. Gen. Tergukassoff has also been reinforced by five battalions of infantry, one battery, and a regiment of dragoons. The Russian right is marching on Persk."

THE London Times' war correspondent with the Russian camp before Plevna telegraphs that "strong reinforcements have already reached Gen. Krudener's corps, which is able to resist any offensive movement of Osman Pasha, should one be attempted, which is not very probable. The Russians have suffered a disastrous check, but that is all. It is hardly probable any renewal of the attack will be made for the next ten days, as the Russians need time to bring up reinforcements. The second pontoon bridge at Simnitza is nearly completed and will be ready for use in a few days. The old bridge is still in good order." ....A St. Petersburg dispatch says "a ukase has been issued ordering the immediate mobilization of the entire corps of the Imperial Guard and several other divisions. The major portion of the Imperial Guard and some of the divisions are to join the army in Bulgaria without delay; the remainder go to reinforce the army of the Caucasus. Another ukase, signed by the Czar at Biela, orders a levy of 188,600 of the landwehr. The levies meet with general enthusiasm."

A DISPATCH from Sistova says that Gens. Schackoskoy and Krudener have retaken the positions held by them previous to the disastrous battle at Plevna. They are daily receiving large reinforcements. The Russians are straining every nerve to retrieve their late disaster, and to deliver a crushing blow before the Turks have time to reap all the advantages which might result from their chance success. The Russians admit a loss of 5,000 men at Plevna....The Turkish Generals continue to report Russian massacres of Mohammedans, while the Russians report Turkish massacres of Christians. Both reports are no doubt true. There is every evidence that this is the most barbarous war since the Dark Ages....A camp of 70,000 men is being formed for the protection of Constantinople.

THE Porte has issued a circular recounting the horrible massacres perpetrated by the Cossacks and Bulgarians. These include the burning alive of seventy Mussulmans of the village of Ayaklemi and the cold-blooded massacre of forty others, as well as women and children. The circular declares the English military attache has ascertained the truth of the allegations....A dispatch from Vienna says that the formation of the Russian landwehr has been found to be difficult, owing to a great want of organization....Hobart Pasha's fleet attacked seven Russian gunboats in the Sulina mouth of the Danube, the other day, and after a sharp engagement destroyed two of them.

A DISPATCH from Bucharest says the Russian troops around Plevna have been reinforced, and now number 70,000. The Roumanian army, numbering 25,000, now passing continually to Nikopolis, will form the extreme right of this force....There seems no reason to doubt that the Russians have not only evacuated Kezanlik, but all their positions south of the Balkans, and that Gen. Gourka is retreating through the Shipka pass upon Tirnova.

A CABLE dispatch, describing the battle of Vladine, where Osman Pasha was intrenched, says: "Under cover of the roar and smoke of the guns, a movement was made by the Russians on the flanks and the center of the Turkish position. The Russian infantry poured in masses on the Turkish works, and were received with the dogged resistance that has always characterized the Turks behind intrenchments. A firm and bitter fire was kept on the assailants, under which they recoiled, and at last fell back repulsed, leaving the ground in front of the Turkish works covered with dead and wounded. The repulse was only temporary, however, for the Russians, with splendid gallantry, reformed, and charged again and again upon the obstinate defenders, but with the same unavailing and dreadfully fatal results as in the first onset. All the day this fearful fight went on, the Russians hurling themselves with a desperate courage on the intrenchments of the Turks, and as steadily being repulsed, every assault leaving its ghastly contribution to the dead and wounded. Only at the close of the day, when the Russian line staggered before the Turkish fire, did Osman Pasha give the signal to attack, and, from a firm and steady defense, the Turks assumed the offensive, rushing upon their foes with overwhelming force and audacity, and at night Osman Pasha was victorious along the entire line of battle. The losses on both sides were heavy."

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

LATE cable advices note the manifestation of a growing hostility toward England in the organs of public opinion in Germany. It is even declared in some quarters that Germany will not permit England to occupy any commanding position on the Dardanelles or to assume control of the outlet of the Black sea. ....An imperial order has just been issued at Constantinople reducing the salaries of all Turkish officials 50 per cent. until the restoration of peace....It is stated in a London dispatch that Russia, discouraged by the result of the war, is laboring to secure intervention by some third power, and that Austria, instigated by Germany, will lend her influence toward aiding Russia to secure desirable peace.

GEN. MARTINEZ CAMPOS, the commander of the Spanish troops in the island of Cuba, has sent dispatches to the King of Spain explaining the situation of the campaign, and stating that the insurgents are so well supplied with information by spies, and their facilities for disbanding when pursued are such that it takes 500 soldiers to look after ten insurgents. Gen. Campos, therefore, requires 50,000 more troops to crush the insurrection. Campos further says the insurgents will only surrender on receiving their independence, and recommends the Spanish Government to adopt one proposition or the other.

ADVICES from India report a distressing state of affairs in the famine-inflicted districts, and the British public has been appealed to for assistance.

LIEUT. BULLIS, with a company of United States troops, recently crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico, recaptured five stolen horses, and returned without being molested....The first installment of reinforcements for Cuba, 1,000 men, have sailed from Spain....A cable dispatch says "an American named Biggar has been arrested by a police spy in the South of France for having called MacMahon an ass at a table d'hote. The United States Charge d'Affaires has sent counsel to see fair play and to send a report if the charge is untrue."....The Bosnia insurrection is at an end. The insurgents are crossing into Dalmatia, and are being interned on the islands in the Adriatic.

ADVICES from Hayti state that the revolution has again broken out in that republic. Port au Prince is declared in a state of siege. A large portion of the city was fired, and the conflagration continued for two days, and had not been extinguished when the mail steamer left....Jovellar has been removed from the Captain Generalship of Cuba, and Blanco appointed in his place.

Kars.

A correspondent of the London Standard at Kars expresses his astonishment on entering the city after the long and furious bombardment to find it not in ruins, as he had expected, but comparatively unharmed, and the inhabitants exhibiting none of the anticipated signs of starvation. Though the bombardment was indeed terrible—at least 40,000 shells, it is said, having been fired by the Russians at the town and fortifications in the course of the twenty-two days—but few actually fell in the inhabited parts of the town itself. Kars is so thoroughly protected by its zone of forts that it was only those shells which were fired with an extreme elevation which fell in the place itself, and only two or three houses were burned, and three women, four children and two old men were killed.

GEORGE W. MATSELL, whose death was recently reported from New York, was the proprietor of a low sporting newspaper, but it is generally admitted by the obituary-writers that he deserves the credit of the present efficient organization of the police force of New York city.

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE Baltimore and Ohio road has given $50 to each of the men who led the break in the strike and took the trains through.

THE Pennsylvania railroad has notified the Baltimore merchants of the destruction of 60,000 bushels of wheat in the Pittsburgh riots.

THE remains of the late Gen. Custer have been deposited in a vault at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., until fall, when they will be transplanted to West Point.

A NEW Republican daily paper is to be started at Washington, under the management of Mr. Lynch, of Maine. It will support the administration.

THE Constitutional Convention of Georgia has adopted an amendment providing for the election of Supreme and Superior Court Judges by the Legislature.

ORDERS have been issued for the concentration of a considerable force at Fort Clark, near the Rio Grande, in Texas, where the troops will be held in readiness for any movement that may be necessary for the suppression and punishment of cattle-stealing, according to the new policy of the administration.

AT the time of the evacuation of Richmond by the Confederates certain State officials divided the contents of the treasury, some $25,000 in gold. Judge Hughes, of the United States Circuit Court, has decided that the money belonged to the National Government, and that the avaricious officials must shell out.

C. S. BELL, who obtained considerable notoriety as a detective in the Babcock trial at St. Louis, and subsequently as a witness in the whisky-ring investigations of last winter, was arrested at Washington last week under a requisition from the Governor of Texas. Bell is charged with having committed three murders in Texas in 1869.

WASHINGTON telegram: "Postmaster General Key says that Edward H. East, the Chancellor of Tennessee, and a loyal man during the war, will be appointed Judge of the Sixth Circuit, embracing Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. It was thought that Judge Cooley, of Michigan, would get the appointment, as Judge Emmons was from that State."

FOR the first time in twenty years the Pennsylvania railroad has passed a dividend. The resolutions making the announcement are in the following words: "In view of the heavy losses recently sustained by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in the destruction of its property in the city of Pittsburgh by mob violence, and in further losses sustained in revenue through prolonged interruption in traffic from the same cause on various points of its own and connecting lines, and in view also of the imperative duty of the company to provide for the immediate restoration of rolling stock and of such buildings as are absolutely necessary for the transaction of its business; therefore, resolved, that it is inexpedient at this time to declare a dividend upon the capital stock of this company."

THE latest returns received at the Agricultural Department, at Washington, show that the winter wheat crop, already safely harvested, is the largest produced in this country for many years. The spring wheat is also in excellent condition, and an unprecedented yield is anticipated. The cotton prospects are also more favorable than last year at this time, the product now being estimated at upward of 4,500,000 bales. The wheat crop of last year was 260,000,000 bushels. This year it will be more than 325,000,000 bushels. The average export for five years has been 61,500,000 bushels. The largest amount ever exported in one year was 90,000,000 bushels. Of this year's crop not less than 100,000,000 bushels may be sent abroad.

THE steamer Florence, the advance guard of Howgate's expedition—which is to establish a temporary colony as far north as possible on Smith's sound, and endeavor to reach the pole whenever a favorable season occurs—sailed from New London, Ct., on the 2d inst., under command of Tyson, who was one of Capt. Hall's companions on the Polaris. The expectation is that the Howgate colony will find an opportunity within two or three years to push northward over the ice or by launches on the open sea, and thus solve the vexatious mystery of the pole.

IT is stated by a Washington correspondent that "a prominent officer of the Government, in conversation the other day with a man who has the best means of information on the subject, was informed that the late stike had begun prematurely. It was the intention of the managers of the strike on the principal railroads of the country to organize a simultaneous war against all transportation companies about the 1st of October. But the firemen and brakemen on the Baltimore & Ohio road were so angry at the reduction made by that company that they were unwilling to wait until the appointed time. The result was very fortunate for the country, for, had the strike occurred in October, instead of July, it would probably have been so fully organized that its suppression would have been much more difficult, and the restoration of peace and resumption of traffic much longer postponed."

Trade Unions.

The number of trade organizations in the United States are comparatively few. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who figure so prominently in the present great railroad revolt, was organized in 1863, and has a membership of about 14,000, and nearly 200 branches. Candidates for admission to the Brotherhood must be white men, not less than 21 years old, able to read and write, of temperate habits and good moral character, and with at least one year's experience as an engineer. The following is a list of the societies with branches in different States:

	Established.	Branches.	Membership.
International Typographical Union	1852	178	10,950
Machinists and blacksmiths	1859	164	8,000
Iron Molders' Association	1859	152	7,500
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers	1863	192	14,000
Journeymen Tailors' National Trade Union	1865	40	2,800
Coopers' International Union	1870	68	5,000
Cigar Makers' Union	1871	109	5,000
Miners' National Union	1873	347	35,315
United Sons of Vulcan	1874	...	4,000

The Miners' Union comprises organizations which existed for years in different States—Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Missouri, Kansas, Tennessee and West Virginia. The society of the United Sons of Vulcan comprises iron puddlers and other workers in metals. The local unions are called "forges." In addition to the above, there are the Bricklayers' National Union, the United Order of American Plasterers, the House Painters' Union, the Hat Finishers' Association, the Knights of St. Crispin (shoemakers), the Order of Morocco Dressers, the Journeyman Horseshoers' Union, the Society of Locomotive Firemen, and the Mule Spinners of Cotton Factories.—New York Herald.

Labor and Machinery.

In our recent review of the new volume of the Massachusetts census on manufactures, we called attention to the remarkable effects disclosed regarding the influence of machinery in reducing the number of hands employed in certain manufactures. We only spoke of the boot and shoe manufacture, but other industries in which machinery plays a large part afford results equally striking; that is, they show an increase in production entirely disproportioned to the number of laborers employed. The following table will illustrate this:

		Produc'n.	Emply's.
Boots and shoes, pairs	1855	45,066,826	77,827
	1865	31,870,581	52,821
	1875	59,762,866	48,090
Carpetings, yards	1865	2,124,915	1,734
	1875	5,607,285	3,119
Clothing, value	1865	$34,233,862	29,914
	1875	39,340,902	19,702
Cotton goods, yards	1865	175,876,000	24,181
	1875	874,780,000	60,176
Metallic goods, value	1855	$18,707,681	10,789
	1865	35,797,632	15,820
	1875	37,894,873	17,563
Paper, value	1865	$4,431,783	3,578
	1875	15,602,590	6,420
Woolen goods, yards	1865	46,008,141	19,753
	1875	90,309,260	19,036

The average value of the boots and shoes produced in 1845 was 70 cents a pair, in 1855 80 cents, in 1865 $1.80, and in 1875 $1.50. It is impossible to say how far this represents also fluctuations in the quality of the goods, but it is probable that the cheapening of labor and the introduction of machinery have together reduced the price in the last decade. The value of the carpetings was $2 per yard in 1865, and less than 73 cents per yard in 1875—which shows the source of the immense supply of dollar carpetings. The great reduction in the number of employes in the clothing business shows to what an extent the sewing-machine, the machine-shear and more careful gradations of "ready-made" have superseded the need of the tailor and the needle-woman. In this line of goods, also, the great public has been compensated by the increased cheapness of clothing. The average value of the cotton cloth manufactured was 8 cents per yard in 1855, 31 cents in 1865, and nearly 9 cents in 1875, since which probably it has been considerably reduced. Metallic works and paper manufacturing show a pretty stable relation between the value of the product and the number of laborers required. Woolen manufactures, on the other hand, like cotton, show a much greater increase in yards than in operatives. The woolen product was valued at 46 cents per yard in 1855, and $1 per yard in 1865, and 44 cents per yard in 1875. Our entire production of textiles in Massachusetts in 1875 was 992,000,000 yards, or, if we regard the earth as a spool on which to wind it, would pass around our planet nearly twenty-three times, a yard wide.—Springfield Republican.

Exportation of Skilled Labor.

Much interest has been manifested in the departure from New York of fifty skilled mechanics for Manchester, Eng., it being something new for England to send out for skilled labor. The Manchester firm to whose shops those fifty carpenters have gone is simply protecting itself from threatened strikes on the part of its employes by importing foreigners to fill the places of the disaffected. Many of the men who sailed in the Montana left weeping wives and children on the piers. The men say they would not go if they could make a living here, but the labor market is glutted, and they have despaired of getting through another winter here. J. N. Abbott, who took over 150 American masons to Glasgow last year, says the new arrivals are prosperous and happy, and satisfied with the exchange between the New World and the Old, and are putting money in the savings banks over and above living expenses, while workmen here are drawing it.—New York Tribune.

NOTHING NEW IN INSURRECTION.

Parallels for the Present Labor Outbreak.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

There is nothing new under the sun, not even in insurrections. The immediate grievance of the strikers is the reduction of their wages. The general grievances upon which sympathy is sought for the strikers and other workingmen just now are the widespread distresses incident to the times, the unreasonable share which it is said the workingmen are compelled to bear, the alleged better condition of persons who are not workingmen, the selfishness, greed, and mismanagement which are charged upon classes of men who control the use of money and superintend the affairs of great business firms and corporations. These grievances are not to be made light of. There is no disposition to make light of them. Men of the largest intelligence would regard it as the worthiest object of ambition to redress these grievances. There is no magical plan for doing it. The evils may be mitigated by conformity to universal and eternal economic laws; by a return to the principles from which the country has so disastrously departed. The rest is the work of time.

What concerns us chiefly now, however, is the futility of some of the plans of curing these evils, or rather of one plan, the most ineffectual of all—the remedy by insurrection. As we have said, there is nothing new in this. There are two familiar events in the early history of the country which may be profitably recalled. One, Shays' rebellion in Massachusetts, occurred in 1786. The other, the whisky insurrection in Pennsylvania, occurred in 1794. The situation was not unlike that which we have just described as furnishing the strikers and their sympathizers with grievances. The people had come out of the Revolutionary war with flying colors, but their condition in many respects was cause for anything but rejoicing and self-congratulation. They were not sure, at first, whether they had a government, or what kind of a one it was; and when they did get a clearer view of those questions they were yet uncertain how their political theory would work in practice, and whether their government would be able to put down even the internal disorders which were often threatened, and which in two cases took shape in formidable outbreaks. But this was, in one sense, the least of their troubles. They were suffering from prolonged business derangement and depression. They had passed through the horrors of paper money, and were not yet recovered from the debauch. They were loaded with debts, private, State, and Federal, and there did not seem to be a way to pay any of them. They found it hard to secure even "starvation wages," and when they did get work it was likely to be paid for in a currency which, instead of performing the proper function of a measure of value, served only to remind them of their impoverishment. Their affairs were in the worst possible state, and they were at a loss how to mend them. Some of them tried insurrection.

There is a parallel between their times and ours in another particular. There is nothing new in the ridiculous Communists. The country then was partly entertained and partly frightened by wild and absurd talk about the rights of man—not the rights of man in the just meaning of the term, but the rights of man run mad. There were men who doubted whether there ought to be any property at all. There were other men who insisted that what property there was ought to be divided equally. There were advocates of liberty who refused to concede to any body the right to get on well in life. If he made himself comfortable by industry and thrift, he was regarded as an upstart; and these thrifty and industrious upstarts constituted a class of "aristocrats" who ought to be put down unceremoniously. Of course the great majority of people estimated this chaotic philosopher at its true value; but we suspect that the philosophers of its school were then as strong in numbers as the Communists are here and now.

The Government made an effort to pay its debts, and to this end taxes were levied by the several States. The measure created a good deal of dissatisfaction throughout the country. In Massachusetts occasion was found to make the dissatisfaction known by open rebellion. Some of the grievances, no doubt, were well founded, and some were mere pretexts. Not only were the taxes too heavy, but the salaries of public officers were too high; there was a flavor of aristocracy in the Senate, and the meeting of the Legislature in Boston was looked upon as in some way fraught with danger to the liberties of the people. Beside, the party of malcontents demanded an issue of paper money! Here, again, is proof that there is nothing new. Ninety years later a depreciated currency and plenty of it are advocated as the sovereign remedy for all the ills of the body politic. The men concerned in Shays' rebellion tried insurrection and failed in it. The militia of Massachusetts put the rebel army to flight after three of the rebels had been killed and one wounded. Some of the leaders were tried and sentenced to death, but they were not hanged, and Shays himself was afterward pardoned, because the people of Massachusetts were supposed to be in sympathy with the insurgents. Here, we believe, the parallel fails. There is no considerable sympathy with the strike rioters, even among the class of persons in whose interest they pretend to have acted.

In 1794 the Government of the country had taken shape, but the country itself had not entirely recovered from its distress; and even the Government was yet to be tested in respect to its power to enforce its authority and execute its laws. In Pennsylvania the pretext was the Federal imposition of a duty on distilled liquors; but resistance to an unpopular excise law was the means by which a good deal of general discontent was shown. The advance of the French Revolution had given a fresh impulse to agitation by the theorists who held that free government meant no government at all. Some unthinking persons were induced to believe that the Government, by paying its honest debts and collecting money by taxes to do so, was made itself responsible for the hard times; that, by increasing the price of every glass of spirits which passed the lips of a patriot, the Government deliberately tried to effect the overthrow of the liberties of the people; and that such tyranny must be resisted to the death. There was not much resistance to the death, however, and the whisky-insurrection, in its turn, failed.

Observations on Potato Bugs.

The importance of destroying potato bugs should not be underestimated. The bugs have done little damage as yet, but that they are destined to do much is true. The present high price of potatoes has nothing to do with bug activity, but the scarcity which it is believed will follow bears on the question. As showing what time is likely to develop, a farmer one day last week picked from a single row of potatoes 1,163 bugs. He set out to pick bugs from an entire acre, but, as there were eighty rows in the acre, he gave up the job as a bad one. Now let us speculate a little on what may happen if no bugs are picked or destroyed: Eighty rows of potatoes, with 1,163 bugs to the row, yields at the first picking 93,000 bugs. The potato-growing season lasts about thirty days longer, and it is believed the number of bugs mentioned can be picked at least twenty times before the end of the season—an aggregate of 1,860,000 bugs. As there are about 300 acres in town planted with potatoes, we have the sum of 558,000,000 bugs for Westport alone. It is fair to say that the 160 towns in the State have planted an average this year of 300 acres, which multiplied into the figures as above gives for Connecticut the enormous aggregate of 89,280,000,000. To bring this insect product down where we can see it, we will suppose a quart measure holds 8,000 bugs—a liberal estimate—and we have 11,160,000 quarts. At 32 quarts to the bushel, we have 348,750 bushels, enough to load many large-sized ships. New England yielded last year 24,000,000 bushels of potatoes. Connecticut's proportion was, at a rough guess, 4,000,000 bushels, or at the rate of 85 bushels to the acre. If these bugs are permitted to do their deadly work, many and many an acre will yield 10 and 15 bushels instead of 85, and it will be fair to reckon the loss occasioned by bugs at fully one-half the crop, or 2,000,000. As the ruling price will be about $1 per bushel, the loss we are likely to experience can be readily figured.—Norwalk (Conn.) Gazette.

How Families Are Broken Up.

There is no denying that a good deal of the financial trouble that culminates in bankruptcy comes from extravagant living. Sometimes it is the man himself that paves the way for the Sheriff, but quite often it is his family. A case in point as to the latter occurred not very long ago. A New Yorker happened to meet, down town, an acquaintance from a neighboring city and dropped into conversation with him. After a few casual remarks the New Yorker asked about his friend's family, expressing a hope that they were well.

"Oh, I suppose they are," said Mr. J., rather indifferently.

"How is that?" asked the New Yorker, "I hope nothing has happened."

"Well, yes, something has happened," replied Mr. J. "The fact of the matter is I haven't seen my family in six months. You know I was doing a pretty good business in B——, and the folks at home got to living way up. Nothing would satisfy them but the best. As long as I could afford it, I let them have money right and left, but presently times got hard, business fell off and I found that I was going behind. I didn't want to alarm my family, but I hinted that a little economy was desirable. But they paid no attention. The demands for money went on just the same. Then I told them they must economize, that I was absolutely unable to support them in such extravagance. It was no use, though; if I didn't give them cash they got credit and the bills came to me. I stood it as long as I could, and I then said, 'Here, if you won't live on what I can give you out of my business, take the business itself,' so I just made over the whole place to them and left. They ran it a few months, and then the Sheriff stepped in, and I haven't seen any of my family since. I tried hard to provide for them, but they wouldn't let me, and that is the result. I can hardly take care of myself now, and it is all on account of the extravagance at home."—Hartford Times New York Letter.

Detecting Counterfeits.

A pamphlet recently issued offers some useful suggestions for the detection of counterfeits. The greenbacks and national-bank notes are printed from plates which have a common characteristic; every plate has four notes, which only differ from each other in being designated by the letters A, B, C, or D. When the counterfeiter makes a note, it has only one of these letters upon it. Consequently, if the note A has been counterfeited, the notes B, C, and D can be safely taken; if C has been counterfeited, A, B, and D are still good. Hence, with a list of counterfeits at hand that mentions the letter of the spurious notes, the number of notes that there is a risk about is reduced by three-fourths. Even a perfect knowledge of engraving, which would enable a person to ascertain, upon merely looking at a note, as to whether it was or was not a counterfeit, may not confer immunity against loss without examining the list of fraudulent notes. For it happens that there are notes engraved from genuine plates, which have been stolen. Such notes have every appearance of genuineness except that the signatures are forged. The Government will not redeem them for fear of encouraging such stealing in future. A loser by such a note would probably find in it an argument against the Government performing the whole work of printing and engraving at Washington, for it is not alleged that any stealing of notes or plates took place when the business of manufacturing the currency was divided among the bank-note companies, and they were held responsible for the honesty of their performance.

BLOODY WORK.

The Struggle Between Russ and Turk—Details of the Terrible Fighting Near Plevna—Frightful Slaughter on Both Sides.

[Bucharest Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

The blow struck at the Ninth corps by Osman Pasha at Plevna on the 19th of July was so severe that the Eleventh corps, which had reached the River Lom on the outskirts of Rustchuk, was compelled to countermarch and to move as rapidly as possible seventy miles west, where they were reinforced by the beaten divisions south of Nikopolis. Meanwhile the Roumanian division was sent to garrison Nikopolis, thus setting free Gen. Schilder's troops. It was not until yesterday that the Russians were fully prepared to renew the engagement. At that time the entire force of the Russians consisted of about 65,000, embracing the Ninth and Eleventh corps. They were drawn up in three columns, on the plain beside the River Vid, where the troops were exhorted by Gen. Krudener to be brave and retrieve their previous losses. The order was then given to advance on Softcha, where Osman Pasha, with 50,000 men, was intrenched behind hastily thrown up earthworks, having rejoined the division under Adil Pasha at that place. The correspondent says: "I accompanied Gen. Schilder, commanding the Ninth division. Rain was dropping dismally upon the already wet roads, and great embarrassment was caused by the tardiness of the artillery train, which could only be dragged through the mud with the greatest difficulty. A halt was made on the heights overlooking Softcha, and, riding out upon the spur jutting out from the ridge, one could see the white tents of the Turkish army herded by the river side beyond the town, while long, black, low-lying streaks marked the recently-constructed defenses. Certainly not a pleasant-looking position to attack, and, indeed, that opinion was expressed by Gen. Krudener when he came galloping up where I was standing, followed by Don Carlos, Col. Manzoff, and Gen. Schilder. But the attack was decided on at all hazards, and the artillery was brought into position. The first roar of cannon was promptly echoed from the Turkish intrenchments. Then began the most furious artillery duel, from which our troops did not escape unharmed, for the Seventeenth and Eighteenth regiments of infantry of the Avant Garde were swept through and through by iron missiles, piling dead and wounded in sickening heaps together. In the midst of this the order was given to storm the positions, in accordance with the usual Russian tactics. Gallantly the Solmas Cossacks of the Ninth corps rushed to the attack, speeding down the road under shelter of a cloud of smoke. For some time I was unable to distinguish anything in the direction of the town save the white minarets upon the hill. Our infantry advanced with a solid front, and volleys of musketry were added to the noise of the cannon, making deafening and continual thunder. The fighting was for a long time almost hand to hand, the Turks making frequent sorties from behind the shelter of the red cross. The attendants were unable to carry off the wounded, so fearful was the slaughter. When at last the order was given to retire, and the Russian guns gradually ceased firing, I watched the men marching past as grimly and steadily backward as they had marched into the conflict. It is wonderful what nerve these Russian men-of-line possessed, considering the awful decimation of their ranks. The Turks did not follow up their success, evidently expecting a renewal of the attack on the morrow. We have camped in a hollow between three hills for the night.

The second day's fighting began at half-past 9. Gen. Skobeloff led on a brigade of Cossacks across the plain before Loftcha, which here widens so as to form a natural fighting ground. A strong division of Turkish infantry, emboldened by the success of the previous day, came out to meet them, and a hand-to-hand combat raged with great violence for about three hours, when the Turks were driven back to their intrenchments. Meantime Gen. Krudener was engaging the Turkish center, and heavy artillery was used effectively upon Osman Pasha's force at Garinea, while Gen. Schackoffsky attacked the positions back of the river Vid.

All these operations were going on at once, and covering a territory from ten to fifteen miles in length. Just in the rear of the Russian center a broken range of hills terminated in a single crag, whose rocky face was shattered and furrowed with shot and shell. Here, unmindful of the iron hail, Gen. Krudener surveyed the battle and issued orders. Looking down the valley, there was seen in the distance thick rolling clouds from Gen. Schackoffsky's guns. But their voices were drowned in the louder thunder of the artillery in front.

The Turks from their earthworks kept up a tremendous cannonade, and all efforts to drive them back were unavailing. Again and again the whole columns of brave men rushed to the charge, but when they returned their ranks were terribly depleted, and told the stubbornness with which the Turks will fight when put to the test. The Third and Ninth battalions suffered most. After a single sally scarcely one-third of the men came back.

Gen. Schackoffsky's division succeeded about noon in advancing their batteries across the neck of land to a ridge recently occupied by the Turks, and captured the village of Radisova. From this point the tide of battle turned in favor of the Turks, who were apparently tireless in their ferocity. They began a series of sorties, falling neck and heels upon the enemy everywhere along the lines. Utterly reckless of their own life, they plunged at the Russian infantry, sabering them and using even the butts of their muskets. As if drunken with the taste of blood, there was no power that could stop their mad onslaught, and the Russians, wearied with fighting all day on the offensive, were forced gradually back, fighting courageously to the last.

As the gloom began to settle upon the landscape the blazing fires of the cannon died away, and the flower of the Russian army, which had so boastfully marched into Bulgaria with the flying banners of conquerors, melted into the darkness defeated and disheartened.

The defeat inflicted upon Gen. Krudener's army, which formed about one-sixth of the Russian forces south of the Danube, is most momentous. It will be noticed that this was not a battle in the open field. The Turks chose a position naturally strong, and wisely fortified it with defensive works of every kind, so that their troops fought under shelter. Under these circumstances there could be no maneuvering. The Russians were led on to attack them where they were protected in their trenches, and fell by thousands. The latest authentic report places the total of killed at 6,000; the wounded not yet computed.

By thus attacking a strongly-defended position Gen. Krudener has repeated the error of Gen. Heiman at Zewin. The losses of an infantry force which attacks troops under shelter and armed with the Martini-Henry rifle must always be enormous.

Nice Stories About Russian Hospitals.

Riding yesterday—where and on what road I shall not tell—I stayed at a wine shop to rest. Presently came in two young soldiers, wearied out, quite penniless, but cheerful. They bowed to me, and sat upon the bench with the air of men too tired to unharness, too feverish to sleep. I sent them a glass of wine each, and began to talk through my interpreter. I asked how the health account stood in their regiment, and they answered significantly that many were ill, but few in hospital. Then the fairer and younger fellow, smiling rather painfully, added: "The doctors were fooled yesterday; one of our company died, and they carried him to the hospital. The doctor came out with his whip and declared he was not dead, so he cut him, of course, over the legs, making great stripes. But the poor chap was really gone, so everybody laughed at the doctor." I said, through my interpreter, that the joke was not a bad one, but that they should be careful in talking thus to strangers. "Some might believe you serious," I added. "It is serious, as God knows," they both answered. "The doctors always flog a man before letting him into the hospital, and many times he will die under the whip." As they spoke, a melancholy wretch tottered round the corner of the inn. His face was waxy and bloodless, his eyes swollen; his white shirt clung to him as though soaked with rain. He dropped upon the bench, letting the rifle fall. "Surely this object is not being sent to duty?" I exclaimed, in horror. "It is only his feet amiss," the others answered, more in disgust, I thought, than pity. "He prefers to go on"—rather than ask the tender mercy of the hospital, I suppose.—Alexandrei Cor. London Standard.

A Superlative Horror.

This morning, about 9 o'clock, a terrible accident happened at the steam saw-mill of M. C. Hamilton, north of the city, resulting in the instant death of William Knowlton, an employe of the mill.

He was engaged at the time in running the circular saw, which is about three feet in diameter, and which was in full motion. It appears that he went to go around the saw, in close proximity to it, to pick up a belt that had been broken, and one of his feet slipped on the lumber, which caused him to lose his balance. He threw out his left hand to recover his equilibrium, and in doing so it came in contact with the saw, which cut off his little finger and mangled the hand in a terrible manner, hacking it into shreds. To save himself he now threw out his right arm, which was also struck by the saw, and the hand was instantly severed from the arm just above the wrist. The unfortunate man then lost all control of himself and fell headlong against the saw, striking the same with his head. The victim dropped upon the floor a lifeless and almost headless man. More than one-half of his head had disappeared. The right half of his head, from the back through to the nose, including the right cheek and the right half of the chin, and from the top of the head to the neck, had been sawed off and his brains had been scattered all through the mill. What remained of his skull was scooped out, and nothing but the half-shell was left.—Omaha (Neb.) Bee.

Interesting Trade Facts.

The activity in the grain trade is an encouraging feature. Canal boats are unloaded as soon as they reach this port, and the canal trade will be assisted by the present strike. The export of fresh mutton and beef, and also of live stock, from the United States to Great Britain, has rapidly grown to immense proportions. This is shown by contrasting the value of shipments during the first six months of 1876 with those of the same time in 1877. The first amounts to a little less than $2,000,000, while the latter is equal to nearly $6,000,000. This is an increase of nearly three-fold in one year. The number of sheep thus exported this season was 6,000, while the neat cattle number one-quarter more. Last week 40,000 packages of cheese were shipped to British ports and also 3,500 packages of butter, in refrigerators. Such shipments as these are worthy of note, as they show how much the Old World depends on us for the necessaries of life. The weight of fresh beef exported during the six months just closed is 5,500 tons. This has a large sound, but the statement is supported by figures carefully put together.—New York Letter.

A Sad Story.

A very heartrending story comes from Nantes, twenty-nine miles northwest of Paris. Victorine Voisin, a young girl of 19, was last May elected Rosiere, or the most virtuous girl of the place, and was engaged to be married on the 14th of this month; but, meanwhile, some miscreant spread reports injurious to her character, and even wrote an anonymous letter containing these charges to her lover. He sent his brother to speak to her about these statements, and the latter, after a long conversation, during which the poor girl grew terribly excited, showed her the letter. She read it, burst from him, and plunged into the Seine. A post mortem examination conducted in presence of the municipal authorities proved that there was not a shadow of foundation for the vile scandals.

A big telescope is being made at Cambridge for Yale College. It will cost $50,000, $6,000 having already been paid for the flint with which to make the object glass.

How Some Philadelphia Soldiers Returned.

The officer who returned yesterday from the front, and when asked how he got back replied, "in an envelope," gives the following description of the return of such of the Philadelphia soger boys as have been heard from:

An effort was made by one or two inventive individuals to climb into their muskets, but as this was found to be impracticable, not for the reason that the muskets were too narrow, but that the men were too long, the ruse was abandoned. In the excitement of the moment a terrified Brigadier General offered to ship on a passenger train as a man before the "mast," and, being refused, wanted to know whether he couldn't go through as an invoice to the stuffed department of the Permanent Exhibition. In despair several veterans pinned postal cards to their shirts and threw themselves by the track, determined to trust to luck and some conscientious mail agent to pass them through. To add to the terror of these unfortunate men, they couldn't get anything to eat that was palatable, and as the crows knew this they hovered above the emaciated soldiers, and cawed in joyous anticipation of a big Quaker City lunch.

Happily for aching breasts at home the boys began straggling into the city yesterday evening. One gallant Major was attired in military boots, a brakeman's pants, no coat worth mentioning, and a telegraph operator's cap. His friends met him at the depot and greeted him with cheers. Though travel-stained and weary, he told the story of his heroic charge upon the enemy with the modesty becoming so great a man. He reviewed his course briefly, merely touching here and there upon the number of rioters he had strangled and otherwise put to death, and remarked that if somebody didn't hurry back to Blairsville with some sandwiches and beer for the First Division, somebody would starve to death. It was his impression also that the strike was over, so far as the West was concerned, at least, as the great majority of the strikers had chased him all the way home.—Philadelphia Times.

Medical Uses of Glycerine.

Among the various uses for which glycerine has been found specially valuable as a medicinal agent, is that of food for infants. When raised by hand they can be kept comparatively free, it is said, from many of the ills to which they are liable by the substitution of from four to six drachms of glycerine for the amount of sugar usually added to the cream, milk or water constituting their diet. In cases of deafness, too, of adults, from deficiency, accumulation or hardness of the cerumen, glycerine is alleged to be one of the best remedial agents—introduced into the canal by means of raw cotton saturated with it. It is also claimed to be the only known agent which will preserve vaccine lymph for any considerable time without deterioration. It has been found extremely useful in numerous skin diseases, and its serviceableness has been satisfactorily proved in connection with all the various substances used locally in diseases of the eyes, except nitrate of silver, which latter it decomposes.

The Stones of the Pyramids.

The immense stones used in the erection of the Pyramids of Egypt were obtained from the quarries in the Arabian hills, and were carried to the river and over a bridge of boats. They were then brought forward by means of a causeway, which is said to have been a fine work, with its polished stones and figures of animals engraved upon them. One hundred thousand men were employed at a time, and these were relieved by the same number at the end of three months. A long time was spent in the leveling of the rock on which the edifice stands, and twenty years for the erection of the pyramid itself. The stones were raised step by step by means of a machine made of short pieces of wood, and, last of all, commencing from the top, the stones were cemented together with a layer of cement not thicker than a piece of paper, the strength of which is proved by the age of these enormous memorials.

Woman's Congress.

The fifth annual Congress of Women is called to meet at Cleveland, in Case Hall, Oct. 10, 11 and 12. Papers by well-known leaders of the sex are announced under the heads of science, literature, education, industries, charities and art. The organization by which these annual meetings are held contains a large proportion of the best minds among American women, who interest themselves in opening new kinds of employment for women, and raising the standards in those to which they are accustomed. It is pleasant to observe that, instead of wasting their time upon suffrage agitation and in the advocacy of empirical schemes of impracticable sentimental "reform" out of morals, the chief end of these Congresses is to distribute among women in their homes practical information upon useful arts, hygiene, the clothing and food of children, etc.

Western Cattle.

The English influence on the cattle culture of our Western plains is strong and growing. Recent travelers report the cattle ranges actively prospected by Englishmen and Irishmen with an eye to becoming herdsmen, and improving the cattle by the introduction of thoroughbreds, and the Edinburgh Scotsman has an agricultural reporter in the region. Albert Crane, a Chicago Englishman, whose Colorado farm covers only 10,000 acres, and George Grant, whose 25,000-acre farm lies off Victoria on the Kansas Pacific, are making the country blossom with high-bred Scotch bulls, $25,000 cows, and stock of all kinds of aristocratic pedigree. These things promise well for the future meat supply of the country. Mr. Grant says his wheat crop this year averages thirty bushels to the acre, worth $1.44 at Kansas City.

A Civilized African Ruler.

The King of Kaboon, the oldest native Prince on the African coast, died about the beginning of May at the advanced age of 100 years, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Andaunte, who at once broke up his father's harem and cashiered the women to the number of 120, liberated all the decease King's slaves, and abolished the sacrifice of human beings at religious rites. He has also informed the traders on the Gaboon river that he will take immediate steps to facilitate and open up the trade of the river and the roads leading to the interior.

California's grape crop promises to be the largest she ever produced.

In India bats are called flying foxes, and generally measure six feet from tip to tip.

The cost of the Paris Exposition of 1878 is estimated at 35,813,000 francs, or about $7,062,600.

On July 10, a fine specimen of the Colorado beetle was recognized crawling along a rope in the vicinity of the Liverpool docks, Dublin. It was the first specimen seen in Ireland.

An American palace car has been placed on the railroad between Brussels and Gand, in Belgium, and receives abundant custom. The dining-room accommodates twenty at table.

Bailly, an authority, maintains, from Oriental records, that astronomy was cultivated in Egypt and Chaldea 2,800 B. C.; in Persia, 3,209 B. C.; in India, 3,101 B. C., and in China, 2,952 B. C.

"Prompt and vigorous measures with the tramps," are demanded by the Paterson (N. J.) Press, which says "the tramp is fast changing from a beggarly and disgusting object to a dangerous brigand."

In Durango, Mexico, there is a tin-bearing district more than twenty miles in extent, which has 600 veins and 300 drifts of steam tin. The supply is so great that "metallic tin can be produced at a cost of 2 cents a pound."

According to the Chairman of the Grand Trunk railway that road has lost $4,750,000 in two and a quarter years from competition, and railways in America have lost $47,000,000 in the same time from the same cause.

A bill of indictment recently found against a Chattanooga (Tenn.) Councilman for bribe-taking was quashed the other day, because "it is not a crime against the State for an Alderman of the city to accept a bribe for his vote."

Tortoises are known to be very long-lived, and there is, at this time, one in the possession of Mrs. Jago, of Hammersmith, London, which, by testimony which would bear even the scrutiny of Mr. Thorne, is 118 years old. His present owner has had him thirty-six years.

Every newspaper correspondent in the Eastern war is compelled to wear a numbered medal, on the reverse of which is a photograph of the wearer, in order to put the question of identity beyond dispute. The Russians and Turks have each their corps of photographers.

A number of Icelanders from the island, as also all the Icelanders at present in the United States, are expected to proceed this season to the settlement on Lake Winnipeg. Sites have been chosen for the two new towns, and the colony boasts of a weekly paper in the Icelandic language.

The house Gen. Grant occupied in St. Louis before the war still stands on Barton street in that city. It is a tiny wooden structure, a story and a half high, and contains two rooms. Residents thereabouts are well aware of its history, and speak of it as "a little house atween two big uns."

Col. Kyle Douglas, in the Philadelphia Times, says Stonewall Jackson was for twenty years a severe sufferer from dyspepsia, and was compelled to forego eating and drinking most things he liked. He once declared that he was fonder of whisky than any other man in his army, yet he never tasted it.

A young lady in Newton county, Ga., is possessed by a strange monomania. She fancies herself a baby, and has not spoken a word in three years, although her powers of conversation used to be of an order higher than the average. Notwithstanding this absurd hallucination, she is inconsistent enough to read and write letters.

The ground for a building to be occupied by Colorado College was broken at Colorado Springs on the 4th of July. Four pounds of butter given to the building fund by a lady were sold on the occasion at auction, and sold again, until they brought $180, or $45 a pound. Ten thousand dollars has also been subscribed by citizens of Colorado Springs.

THE SECRET.

She gayly plucked a rose from out the flowers,
  And fastened it with deftness on my breast;
I, stooping, thanked her 'mid the hawthorn bowers—
    I may not tell the rest.

My love trilled out an airy, lightsome tune,
  Sang sweetly, as her fancy did suggest;
Perhaps I interrupted her too soon—
    I may not tell the rest.

The, laughing low, said ne'er a word to me,
  But upward held her face to be caressed;
She little birds that chirruped in the tree—
    Perchance may tell the rest!

While digging in his cellar the other day, a Baltimore man discovered a deposit of more than twelve dozen pint bottles of pale ale, which, upon examination, proved to be in prime order and condition, and of choice quality. They must have been placed where they were found nearly twenty years ago. The bottles are of stone, and the ale of the description known as Scotch pale ale.

Dr. James Bryce, of Edinburgh, the geologist, has fallen a martyr to the pursuit of his favorite science. While making his annual geological tour in the Highlands, he set off alone, hammer in hand, to examine the rocks in the Bass of Inverfarigaig, and was not again seen alive. About three hours after his departure his body was found by two gamekeepers at the foot of a precipice, dreadfully crushed. It is supposed that while he was climbing the rocks a mass gave way under his feet, and that other fragments had fallen above him.

The steamer Eten, went down on July 16th, near Valparaiso, and one hundred persons perished.

Senator Grover, of Oregon, comes out all right. The committee headed by Morton, which met there a few weeks ago, did not discover that money had been used by him for his election.

Gen. Gibson had a fight with the Indians last week, in which about twenty five soldiers were killed and forty wounded. Forty Indians were known to be killed. Gen. Howard is in pursuit.

The Defiance Democrat just over the border speaks flatteringly of the political prospects in that state this fall. It says: "We never had a better state ticket; never had a better platform, and we never had better prospects of carrying the State by a large majority.

We regret to learn of the untimely decease of the Toledo Daily News, last week, at the head of which stood our excellent friend Mr. Conover. But what is Toledo's loss is Fort Wayne's gain. The News at the latter place will be sprightly again, and there will be spice extracted from the late experience, that will make it sarcastically brilliant.

While we do not endorse we have this to say of the fellow who edits the Indianapolis Sentinel. He is persistent in his defense of what he calls the laborer's interest, and has made a valient fight, believing he was in the right. There is no milk and water about what he says. It is written in clear, decisive, not to be misconstrued English, and we like to see a journalist fearless and unflinching. And, to a great extent, his conclusions are correct.

The reports from Bulgaria of the suffering of the people are appalling. Thousands of women and children are without homes and are perishing for want of food and shelter. Grim visaged war has prevented a harvesting of the crops, and no preparation is being made for the winter. Terrible outrages have been committed by both armies, and the killing of children and women seems a pastime with these semi barbarous nations.

Indiana is somewhat behind adjoining states in fine stock. It is amazing to see with what persistence many farmers stick to scrub stock. A short horned bull worth $1000 would be regarded as a wonder yet in many large districts of Indiana. The "Louse" breed of hogs, noted for length of head and snout, and race-horse characteristics, has yet many friends who will argue in dead earnest with you in favor of the superior merits of a breeds that need no care at all. Notwithstanding the fact that Indiana is a great hog and corn state, it is yet a surprising fact that in many districts the improved breeds of stock hogs are not to be found. The old slouchy style of allowing the hogs to run wild in the woods, paying no attention to breeding at all, yet obtains in many localities.

Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, as soon as he reached home after the strike issued a ringing proclamation and notified the strikers that his headquarters would be in the cars on the Pennsylvania road, until it was opened for business. It was opened at once. Such a Governor in Indiana would have settled the Fort Wayne hash ere this.—Lagrange Standard.

Perhaps. There was no riot at Fort Wayne, and Gov. Hartranft would hardly have been fool enough to bring on one by a pompous display of the military. Had Gov. Williams so minded he could have had Fort Wayne mostly in ashes and many more widows and orphans in that city than there is to-day A few republicans know all about it now, but Gov. Williams, did what was necessary and not a life was lost nor a house burned in the State. That is a better record than followed the brilliant military chieftain of Pennsylvania. Unless the opponents of Governor Williams can advance some better argument than the above they had best abandon their attack, and learn by the result which was the best way to accomplish the most good.

We are glad to learn that Weamer is not a supporter of John Sherman and his financial policy. We have laid awake o' nights, fearing he would throw his influence in the balance and carry the day with the resumption humbug. We would like to see him come a little stronger and demand that his party administration make a change as to the Secretaryship of the Treasury. If he is after the peoples interest, and Sherman's resumption scheme is a humbug, there should be a change in that department. But Weamer is not so clear as to the protection of buildings by lightning rods. If these rods will protect a building in good times, how is it that they will not answer the same purpose in hard times. If any of the county buildings had been destroyed by fire from a lightning stroke, such a howl would have went up from the Republican paper against the commissioners as would have done credit to a band of Camanches. And now that they have suppled this protection, Weamer cackles about hard times. So let the Commissioners act either way on any public question, they get a growl from their political opponents for their pains.

Hayes is coming west soon. We hope the Town Board will extend the freedom of the city to our Chief Executive. There are a few Republicans here who want looking after. Their utterances are not strictly loyal. Murmurings of discontent are becoming rather frequent.

Some of the Republican journals and one or two would be Democratic journals of this State, are very much annoyed at Governor Williams because he did not call for troops from the Government to put down the strikers, and for what they call his indifference and neglect of duty. We are glad the Governor acted as he did. Not a single life was lost, not a house or car burned in the entire State, and all because he did not assume a military aspect, and cavort around over the State, breathing vengeance on those who had no intention of destroying property. Let these papers rail, the Governor done right.

It is stated that Daniel W. Voorhees is to lecture on Thomas Jefferson. Why stir up this political dead beat; he did mischief enough in his day—he ought to be forgotten by posterity.—Fort Wayne Gazette.

The astute editor of the Gazette has got so far along in a brief career as an editor, that such great minds as Jefferson's, when he compares them with his mighty self, sink into insignificance. A little vanity is pardonable, but where it exists as the only one quality that makes up the whole, at the expense of brains and everything else, it becomes disgusting.

EDITOR COURIER,—Will you please insert in the COURIER a copy of the enclosed article, it being pertinent to the interests of every farming community, whose people can see no injustice in compelling farmers to build and keep in repairs hundreds of rods of fence, in order to secure pasturage to the afore said near-sighted people, to which they have not the least right, either moral or legal. Respectfully,

SMITHFIELD FARMER.

FENCES AND FENCE LAWS.

Judging from the discusions of our farm clubs we may suppose that farmers are beginning to realize that the true office of outside fences, and in fact of all fences, is not to keep out the stock of a neighbor, but to restrain our own. As a result of this idea we see that laws preventing stock of any kind from running at large in the highways are gaining in form, and the area over which they extend is every year increasing. It is a mistake to suppose, as many do, that the fruit and grass growing between the fences of a public highway of right belongs to the public. The public have only the right of pas over the ground, but have no right to its products, which belong to the owner of the adjoining farm. As soon as the traveler or the stock of the farm diverge on either side of the legal limits of the road, they become trespassers to the full extent of the term. In strict equity it is no excuse that there was no fence, for as before stated, fences are to keep the proprietor's stock within bounds, and not to keep the others out. It takes a long time for us to get rid of the idea that "a legal fence" must be "horse high, bull proof, and hog tight." Sooner or later we will arrive at a point when every farmer will be the judge of the quality of his own fences, or in fact whether he will fence at all.

Much has been said of the injustice and cruelty of a law which prevents the poor man from turning his cow out in the public road. The time spent in hunting her when she fails to come home, and the loss from not being milked at the proper time, will usually pay for her keep in much better pasture. Of all fence breakers, the road cow is probably the most efficient and active, and, independent of her own efforts, her presence leads the farm stock, otherwise quiet, to break out and cause trouble. When cows were allowed to run at large, it was impossible to keep a bull more than two or three years, for he became so unruly as to be a nuisance to his owner. By the laws excluding stock from the roads this trouble is avoided.—Philadelphia Times.

Queen Esther at Waterloo.

We had the pleasure of witnessing the representation of Queen Esther at Waterloo last Thursday evening. It was admirably rendered by the local talent of that place, and no one had reason to be other than pleased at the success attained. Miss McClellan acted the beautiful Queen with excellent taste. With a little more volume of voice and facial expression, she would be perfect in that part. The king sang in good voice, but lacked animation. Mr. Haines' Mordecai was splendid, and though a difficult part he filled every part with a fine conception of the character. His well sustained tone and almost perfect time, show him to be more than an ordinary artiste. Mr. Peterson's Haman was well performed, barring the hanging scene, which slightly approached the burlesque. It should be omitted. The other solos by Zerish and others were all well sang, and the choruses were full of harmoney and animation. The attendance was small, Butler and Auburn comprising more than half the number present. An occasion like this is worthy of a more liberal patronage. We were glad to see this fraternization of the citizens of the different towns. Mr. Littlefield presided at the organ with his usual grace and ability.

When a lady of Warsaw breaks an earring, she instantly says, "Quick, the Jeweler," and she is not generally in a hurry about it, either. From the Republican we learn that Quick is his name.

The Warsaw Union says, the Hon. William Williams, formerly M. C., for this district, is, we understand, again to become a resident of this city before long, and in all probability engage in some business.

Angola has a crow, and the Republican thinks he will rival the famous Grip, in Dickens' story of Barnaby Rudge. Grip used to say, "I'm a devil," but we judge from association that Angola can beat that.

The Garrett News says Mr. Chris. Taylor will organize a minstrel troupe at that place. We have known a great many local organizations of that kind fail, and though Chris. is above the average, he will find it up hill work.

It is rumored that a most disgraceful affair occurred at Garrett, the other day A mob hung a man until he was nearly dead for the supposed stealing of a watch, which was not stolen at all. We give this as a rumor, and Bro. Parker will take notice accordingly, and correct it if it is not so.

The Butler Record, of last week, contained the valedictory of Prof. D. D. Luke, who had editorial charge of that paper. He generally put his subjects down to such an extent, that they never dared show their heads again.

GARRETT, IND., August 11, 1877.
J. C. STCLAIR, Sheriff, DeKalb Co., Auburn, Ind., Dear Sir:—Please accept our sincere thanks for the ready response you gave, when asked for assistance to rescue our property from the strikers, and to start our trains; and for the prompt and efficient services rendered by your Deputy, Mr. Thomas D. Gross, through whose management the blockade at this point was raised, without loss of life or property. Assuring you of our appreciation and gratitude, I am, Very Truly Yours,

H. S. MORSE, Ass't M. of T.

P. S. Was very sorry to see in some of the papers derogatory reports of Mr. Gross' conduct here on a certain Wednesday night. I am assured by our men on duty that night that such reports were entirely without foundation and too absurb to need contradiction.

H. S. MORSE.

It is estimated by some that Noble county will sell one million dollars' worth of wheat this season. That's a pretty big sum, and if not estimated too high ought to put our citizens in good shape financially.—Banner.

It strikes us that is a very high estimate. We put DeKalb down at 500,000 and feel assured Noble cannot double that.

The editor of the Columbia City Post was charged with selling beer on the 4th of July. We treated the charge as unworthy of a single thought, and now it has been demonstrated that it was a malicious lie. A good name is invulnerable to such attacks, and Mr. Brown may congratulate himself on the confusion of his enemies.

We noticed a large invoice of new goods unloaded in front of Schaab, Beugnot & Co's. clothing store. Soon a large fine assortment of ready made clothing was displayed, the best we have seen here for a long time. They also received a splendid lot of fur hats and Gents furnishing goods, and marked the prices down very low.

Still Another.

The Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad will give another excursion to Detroit, to-morrow, Friday, leaving here at 6:54, Waterloo 7:07, Summit 7:24 Pleasant Lake 7:36. This will give everybody a chance to see the National Regatta, at Detroit, on the 17th and 18th Fare for round trip only $2.50. You will never have another such a chance.

The following is said to be a cure for hog cholera. It might be tested. "Gamboge, ginger, lime, coal, salt, resin, copperas, sulphur, wormwood, saltpetre, alum, one ounce of each to one gallon of good wood ashes, sifted. Mix well, and give three teaspoonsful once a day to each, in slop. Do not wait for the hogs to get sick, but feed it to them occasionally in slop, and the disease will not trouble you."

M. F. Long & Co., still continue to sell the Kimball Orchestra Organ They are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The orchestral set of reeds are the best ever placed in any organ—the effect of which is most charming and soul stirring, while its imitation of the human voice is superb. They are selling those instruments at extremely low prices for cash, or part down and the remainder in monthly payments.

We agree with Weamer that the surroundings of the M. E. Parsonage are such as to produce disease, but we see no necessity to sell it to better the condition of things. If the town authorities will have the terrible filth in the rear of the brick block removed, and disinfectants used, the M. E. Parsonage will be as healthy as any other locality. Filth in its most revolting hideous form holds high carnival back of the brick stores, and we hope the marshal will see that the nuisance is atonce abated.

The Ligonier Banner says the hog cholera is sweeping away hundreds of swine in Noble county. We have not yet heard of any loss in this county this season from this cause. It is to be hoped that the great sacrifice we made last fall in this direction will suffice to appease the wrath of the god who watches over his porkship. We fervently hope a similar one will not be meted out to us again this year. DeKalb county lost thousands of dollars last year, and it would be a terrible infliction to have it repeated.

Waterloo Press. The insinuation in the last Garrett News that Queen's circus was "one-horse," just because it didn't go to Garrett, was badly worthy of the Doctor. At one time the papers, and some of the citizens, of a town which shall now be nameless, used to take delight in reporting waterloo shows "one-horse," and that the small-pox was prevalent here on the occasion of public gatherings. This course never hurt anyone but them selves, and we have the best reason for knowing they are now ashamed of it. The Doctor will repent it.

Luther Benson, the popular temperance lecturer, gave us a call last Tuesday. He lectured at the M. E. church in the evening, and why it was not more generally advertised we can't imagine. Mr. Benson is a remarkable man, and will fairly cope with Gough as a lecturer. He has suffered more than death in his love for intoxication and is a subject well calculated to warn others to avoid the flowing bowl. He promises to come back again in a few weeks. He pleased everybody with his wit and eloquence, and we promise him a large audience on his return.

Columbia City Post. On Friday evening as the bands were returning from the Fair Ground, while marching along Van Buren street, a little son of Mr. and Mr. John T. Gates, ran under a team the horses kicking him over, the front wheel of the loaded two horse wagon passed over his right leg about the ankle. The driver in his fright backed the wagon a second time over the limb, but strange to say no bones were broken. He sustained some injuries about the head, but beyond this escape unharmed. It was a miraculous escape.

Our boys ask us to mildly protest against the misrepresentation of the Waterloo Press in regard to the base ball game here between the Junior nines a few days ago. There was one in each club who had played before with their respective senior nines, and that was all, no more. The mildest protest that we can offer is, that Charley reminds us of a pirate, in the one essential of his existence—that of mistating facts. Now, don't infer that we mean that he lies, for nothing is farther from our intention,—it would do no good.

Father Lanham, our good old farmer friend, has laid on our table a copy of the Caledonian Argus, published at his former home in Ohio. It is a neat, well printed paper, and sparkles with an abundance of local news. We judge the place to be a live, enterprising one, as in its columns are represented a large number of its business men. Mr. Lanham speaks flatteringly of Caledonia, and its surroundings, but then he does not go back on his hoosier home. He has raised big crops this year and is doing remarkably well for the aged gentleman that he is. He is one of our most intelligent, enterprising farmers.

We always believed there was an official courtesy existing between officials of different counties. If so it was not shown by one or two officials of Allen county, in the case of Martin who was first arrested in that county for forgery. Bail was furnished and parties here interested in the prosecution came home supposing everything was all right. The sureties becoming shaky, surrendered their man, he was sent to jail and by quick manipulations he was taken therefrom on a writ of habeas corpus and discharged before the parties here knew a word about it. It was not exactly a square deal.

We are in receipt of the Sunday Journal published at Fort Wayne. The paper has improved wonderfully under the management of Major Fairbank and is very popoular with the people.

A Depot for Buggies, Carriages, &c.

The extensive carriage manufactory of Tiffin, Ohio, under the management of Messrs. Van Nest & Son, have established a depot here for the sale of their vehicles. Their reputation as first-class builders in their line, is known far and near, and their name is a guarantee of good work and reasonable prices. They have now on hand here a number of carriages and buggies which they ask the public to examine and inspect. We notice a shifting top carriage that eclipses anything that we have ever seen. In a moment's time it can be made into a two seated rig, and as quickly changed into a single top buggy. You can see the excellence of their workmanship in every feature. They have manufactured so long and adhered so faithfully to good, honest work, that it is impossible to find a flaw in any article they produce. Mr. F. D. Ryan has been put in charge of the depot, and will be pleased to give any information as to prices, etc., that may be desired. He will be found at the depot in Ensley's building, just south of the jail, where these buggies are now on exhibition.

Henry Martin, living in the south part of the county, presented a check, it is charged, at the First National Bank of this place, for $800 purporting to be signed by Samuel and William Shutt, of Spencerville. The cashier paid over the money and when due he notified the Messrs. Shutt of the fact. They replied they had given no such check, and then it was discovered to be a forgery. Martin was arrested at Fort Wayne, at Barnum's show, and was afterwards discharged. He was again arrested in this county and taken before Justice Walborn and waiving an examination gave bail for his appearance at court. The chances for his indenfication in this transaction are very strong.

It is said the game of ball played at Waterloo Tuesday, between the junior clubs, was the best yet witnessed. A tie on the 9th inning two more had to be played to decide, and a bad throw gave our neighbors the victory. Four new members, it is said, were added to the Waterloo club since the last game. There ought to be a limit on both sides, as to new recruits when a series has once been commenced. The score stood 16 to 18, which is very good. We would like to see another series played by the same clubs.

THE FIRST CLIENT.

BY IRWIN RUSSELL.

John Smith, a young attorney, just admitted to the bar,
Was solemn and sagacious as—as young attorneys are;
And a frown of deep abstraction held the estate of his face—
The result of contemplation of the rules in Shelley's case.

One day in term-time Mr. Smith was sitting in the court,
When some good men and true of the body of the county did on their oath report,
That heretofore, to-wit: upon the second day of May,
A. D. 1877, about the hour of noon, in the county and State aforesaid, one Joseph Scroggs, late of said county, did then and there feloniously take, steal and carry away

One bay horse, of the value of fifty dollars, more or less,
The same then and there being the property, goods and chattels of one Hezekiah Ross;
Contrary to the statute in such case expressly made
And provided; and against the peace and dignity of the State wherein the venue had been laid.

The prisoner, Joseph Scroggs, was then arraigned upon the charge,
And plead not guilty, and of this he threw himself upon the country at large;
And, said Joseph being poor, the Court did graciously appoint
Mr. Smith to defend him—much on the same principle that obtains in every charity hospital, where a young medical student is often set to rectify a serious injury to an organ or a joint.

The witnesses seemed prejudiced against poor Mr. Scroggs;
And the District Attorney made a thrilling speech, in which he told the jury that, if they didn't find for the State, he reckoned he'd have to "walk their logs";
Then Mr. Smith arose and made his speech for the defense,
Wherein he quoted Shakespeare, Blackstone, Chitty, Archbold, Joaquin Miller, Story, Kent, Tupper, Smedes and Marshall, and many other writers; and everybody said they "never heered such a bust of eloquence."

And he said: "On this hypothesis, my client must go free;"
And: "Again, on this hypothesis, it's morally impossible that he could be guilty, don't you see?"
And: "Then, on this hypothesis, you really can't convict;"
And so on, with forty-six more hypotheses, upon none of which, Mr. Smith ably demonstrated, could Scroggs be derelict.

But the jury, never stirring from the box wherein they sat,
Returned a verdict of "guilty;" and his Honor straightway sentenced Scroggs to a three-year term in the penitentiary and a heavy fine, and the costs on top of that;
And the prisoner, in wild delight, got up and danced and sung;
And, when they asked him the reason of this strange behavior, he said: "It's because I got off so easy—for, if there'd ha' been a few more of them darned hypotheses, I should certainly have been hung!"

LULU'S PRESENT.

Everybody declared that Uncle Timpkins would be ruined by his generosity. But this declaration had now been made for a number of years, and still he continued prosperous.

But Uncle Timpkins had just perpetrated an act, the enormity of which disturbed his domestic peace for a long while, and sometimes it seemed doubtful if the sky ever would be cleared. He suddenly took it into his head to look up the widow of a brother who had been dead several years, and, knowing that poor John "never had possessed a knack for acquiring worldly goods," he resolved to inquire into the condition of the family. Without telling Aunt Mollie of his plans, he went off very quietly by himself, but he returned not as he went.

Aunt Mollie prophesied that no good would come of this journey; but when Uncle Samuel opened the hall door, and she saw her husband enter with a little girl, she could hardly believe her own eyes.

"This is my little pet, Mollie, I have brought her home to keep me company," said Uncle Samuel. "Her name is Lulu." Aunt Mollie looked coldly upon Lulu, who shrank back into herself, and eyed her husband severely, then turning indignantly from them, she exclaimed: "To think that after raising a family of eight children, and getting them well off her hands, Samuel should go and bring home such a pest as that! It was too much for flesh and blood to stand!"

But Uncle Timpkins had gained his point; Lulu was regularly established in the house, and, if not noticed by her aunt, she soon became a great favorite with her uncle. And not only with him, but with all who came to the house; for she was a sunny-tempered little thing, making life and gladness where she went.

It was almost breakfast time, and, punctual as the clock, the lean, wiry figure of Ephraim Doolittle strode into the kitchen, and sank into the accustomed seat by the chimney-corner.

Of all Timpkins' proteges this was the one with whom Aunt Mollie had the least patience. For five years he had not missed a morning unless detained by illness, and yet he always came in with the same observation, that "as he happened to be passing by he thought that he would just drop in."

He always went to Uncle Timpkins' to breakfast, but upon being invited into the dining-room invariably observed that "there was no occasion, wife would be expecting him home," etc. This was a regular part of the performance, and it required considerable exertion to dislodge him from the chimney-corner.

It was in the morning after Lulu's arrival, and her uncle desired her to inform Mr. Doolittle that breakfast was ready. This she did very sweetly, and Ephraim, making a feint of rising, replied:

"I was just going, my dear—time that I was off, long ago. Stop to breakfast! O, no, thank you—my wife will be waiting for me."

Lulu returned to the dining-room and innocently repeated what she supposed to be Mr. Doolittle's refusal. To her great surprise her uncle laughed out, and her aunt had a very queer expression about the mouth. "Waiting what?" she exclaimed, in a tone of cutting sarcasm; "maybe they're going to have fritters for breakfast, and they'll be spoiled—he'd better go!"

Uncle Timpkins, however, not wishing to be undone, dispatched Lulu to the kitchen with an imperative summons to Mr. Doolittle. She soon returned with the answer:

"He said there was no occasion."

Laughing more heartily than ever at Lulu's innocence and perplexed look, Uncle Timpkins went to the kitchen, as he had done for five years, and marched Ephraim Doolittle in to breakfast. Lulu was astonished at the rapid disappearance of the viands; but Ephraim had taken quite a fancy to the child, and regarded her very benignly.

As he went home that morning he began revolving in his own mind a plan for her benefit. Samuel Timpkins was a good sort of a fellow, and, as he had now taken breakfast there several times, he believed that he would make the child a present, by way of testing his gratitude.

At the wonted hour Ephraim made his appearance with a covered basket and therein a Maltese kitten. Lulu was enraptured—was delighted; her heart fairly overflowed with love of all sorts of pets, and the kitten was a perfect beauty; just the right size to be graceful; it was plump and sleek and the very color to wear a blue ribbon around its neck. After gratefully thanking Mr. Doolittle, Lulu displayed her treasure in triumph; but, at the sight of the kitten, Aunt Mollie's cup of wrath was overflowing. She couldn't bear the sight of a cat—she detested cats; it would always be putting its dirty little nose in the milk and cream, and it was just exactly like Ephraim to give a present that would soon eat its own head off!

* * * * * * *

One beautiful evening in March I was entering the room, where it seems my uncle and aunt were engaged in serious conversation regarding their financial prospects, when the latter exclaimed: "Well, Charlie! I hope your uncle is satisfied now! He is ruined! I told you that it would come to this, and I'm only surprised that it did not come long ago!"

This was poor consolation for a man who had just been confiding to his wife the story of his misfortunes, and Uncle Timpkins looked into the fire and sighed. But all the attempts at consolation, unless they came in the shape of bank bills, would have proved unavailing; for Uncle Timpkins, led away by his enormous heart, had indorsed largely for a neighbor in distress, and the neighbor had gone down, dragging his benefactor with him; and the friend of so many unfortunates saw himself threatened with a Sheriff's sale, and he and his wife driven forth in old age from the home which sheltered them for so many years.

"It is strange," said Uncle Timpkins, musing, "that father left no more money. There was little besides stock, and everybody was surprised at it. He was always so saving and had plenty of cash."

It was a delightful evening, and Lulu, accompanied by her kitten, had gone to the old garret, whose mysterious nooks she loved to explore; and there she could have a romp with kitty, in the full enjoyment of being beyond the reach of Aunt Mollie's reprimand.

Uncle Samuel had been very grave of late; and, half anticipating something dreadful, she scarcely knew what, Lulu leaned against the rough beams, and watched the gambols of the Maltese kitten, which seemed challenging her to participate in the fun.

The kitten was making a terrible scratching against the boards, and Lulu endeavored to call her off. She really believed that she had discovered a mouse—it would be horrible to see her kill it and eat it, like other cats; she should not love her a bit after that—and Lulu tried to pull her away. But kitty was very busy scratching something from under a board, and, having put in one velvet paw, she succeeded in dislodging a dark-colored roll that certainly was not a mouse, nor anything else alive. Lulu examined it with trembling fingers, and found bank-bills to the amount of $5,000. With glowing cheeks sparkling with excitement, she rushed into the room where her uncle sat buried in his gloomy thoughts; and, paying no attention to her aunt's exclamation of "Lulu Timkins, go back this instant and shut the door! you impudent little scapegrace!" she placed the soiled and crumpled notes in his listless hands.

"Where did you get these?" said he, so calmly that Lulu feared he cared very little about them.

But when the story was told, Lulu and her pet were both lifted in Uncle Samuel's arms, and his tears rained down upon the bright curls, as he whispered:

"Lulu, do you know that you and kitty have saved your old uncle from being turned upon the world? Mollie," said he, looking reproachfully at his wife.

It was foreign to Aunt Mollie's nature, but she gave way for once, and folded Lulu in the first embrace that she ever had bestowed upon her.

"I wish that Ephraim Doolittle was here," said Uncle Timpkins. "Had it not been for his somewhat unwelcome present, this money would still have been idle. I should really like to see him."

"Can't you wait till to-morrow morning?" said Aunt Mollie, so drily that it extorted from her husband the first hearty laugh he had indulged in for a long while.

The house, of course, was not sold; and the very singular manner in which it had been preserved traveled about like wildfire, and Lulu and her kitten became objects of the greatest curiosity. Ephraim now began coming to dinner, on the strength of his gift; and if he had taken up his residence there altogether Uncle Timpkins would doubtless have made him welcome.

* * * * * *

Time sped on, the kitten had grown into a cat, and Lulu had become a young lady. Her cousins laughingly declared that she had entirely superseded them in the affections of their parents; and a stranger would certainly have supposed that she was the pet daughter of the house.

One day an advertisement to the following effect appeared in a paper published in the city:

"Lost, on Thursday evening, the 4th ult., a Maltese cat, with a blue ribbon around its neck. On returning it to No. —— Camp street the finder will be suitably rewarded."

The following day the paper contained the following answer:

"The finder of the Maltese cat, advertised in yesterday's paper, is extremely anxious to retain it. What would the owner consider a sufficient inducement for parting with the cat?"

Lulu was perfectly indignant, both at the insult and at being separated from her pet, so she sat down and wrote: "If the finder of the Maltese cat does not restore her to her rightful owner, he or she will be searched out and exposed before the community."

When the paper containing this threat appeared, it brought a reply from the culprit in person. Aunt Mollie was looking forth from the sitting-room window, when she suddenly exclaimed:

"What on earth is that handsome stranger coming here for? I declare," she continued, "if he hasn't got Fortuna in his arms!" This was the name the kitten had received on that memorable day when it saved Uncle Timpkin' house.

"Run, Lulu," continued Aunt Mollie, "and take him into the parlor."

Lulu opened the door with a heightened color, and a somewhat elevated head, for the offer of buying her favorite was still fresh in her mind. The visitor, a handsome man of 30, with an air of foreign travel, doffed his hat with a low obeisance to the beautiful apparition before him, and perhaps he too felt conscious of his misdemeanor, for he was decidedly embarrassed as he followed Lulu into the parlor.

"I hope," said he with a smile that disarmed all Lulu's indignation, in spite of herself, "that you will pardon me my unintentional rudeness? I expected to find in the owner of the cat some indigent old lady or thoughtless boy, to whom a few dollars would prove an irresistable allurement, and, as I had taken a great fancy to the animal, I concluded to try the experiment."

"And I," replied Lulu frankly, "expected to see, in the finder of Fortuna, a disagreeable, purse-proud individual—but whether lady or gentleman I could not decide."

The half compliment conveyed in this answer, brought a look of gratitude from the visitor that made Lulu wish she had not said it; but, just as an awkward crisis was approaching, Uncle Timkins entered the room, and politely saluted the gentleman, whom he had recognized as the senior partner of an influential firm.

The visitor introduced himself as Mr. Chadwick, and at once entered into an easy and agreeable conversation with the master of the house. The story of the kitten was told and commented upon, and the gentleman learned, by adroit questions, that Uncle Timkins' circumstances were by no means flourishing. He immediately expressed his want of an agent to oversee his plantation, which he pronounced to be sorely neglected, and acknowledged Uncle Timpkins' qualifications for the office. He did not lose sight of Lulu's speaking eye, which rested upon her uncle almost beseechingly. This was just the thing for him, it would require so little labor; but Uncle Samuel was not the one to recommend himself, and Mr. Chadwick was obliged to ask him point blank.

After a while it was all arranged, and the handsome Mr. Chadwick departed, with a warm invitation to renew his visit.

"Fortune again!" exclaimed Uncle Timpkins, as he related to his wife this piece of luck. But Aunt Mollie glanced at Lulu in a very significant manner, and looked little disposed to give the cat much credit this time.

"If Ephraim were here now, I could almost give him a hug," continued the old man.

"He will be here to-morrow morning," replied Aunt Mollie, as dryly as ever.

Uncle Timpkins entered at once upon the "agency," which turned out to be very little beyond a name and a salary; and Mr. Chadwick availed himself to the fullest extent of the invitation to renew his visit.

"Miss Lulu," said he, quite suddenly, one evening, "do you remember that, when advertising your cat, you promised that the finder would be suitably rewarded."

Lulu looked surprised at this address, and endeavored to escape from the window.

"I left it altogether to your generosity," continued Mr. Chadwick, gravely, "but I have as yet received nothing."

Lulu stammered out something about not wishing to insult him, but he replied very coolly that it was not too late to make reparation.

The next moment Lulu's hand was imprisoned in both of his; and, as she did not withdraw it, he acknowledged himself "suitably rewarded."

A Remarkable Dog.

A Milwaukee paper relates the following: Mr. Nelson Strong, living on First avenue, between Orchard and Mitchell streets, has a black-and-tan dog that is just now engaged in a domestic enterprise worthy of record. The dog is a female, and a number of months ago gave birth to a litter of pups that were reared and weaned by her. A short time ago Mr. Strong brought home a pup and placed it with his dog. She took to the strange pup kindly and allowed it to nurse. Her full flow of milk was brought back, and suddenly she was missed from home. Search was made and the dog was found in a neighboring alley with a large litter of kittens nursing her. She had placed the kittens upon a large sheet of brown paper and kept them on it, apparently for safety. Near by was the dead body of the mother of the kittens, probably killed by the dog, who has always manifested great hatred for cats. The dog, with the kittens, was removed to Mr. Strong's residence, and they are now there to be wondered at by the visitors who go in to see for themselves the strange sight of a black-and-tan dog nursing a litter of rapidly-growing felines. The case attracts a great deal of interest here, and will be something for the curious to wonder at.

Life a Failure.

Charles F. Locke, a native of Boston, shot himself at his residence in San Francisco a few days ago, after repeatedly and affectionately kissing his wife. He left a note addressed to his brother, as follows: "I am sick of life, and I am going to make away with myself; so kiss your children and your wife and sister-in-law for me, and so forth. What is the use of living? Life is a failure, especially with me, and always was since I have been 8 years old. We were raised well, and had all that money could procure. We had too much then and too little now; but, nevertheless, by night this 9th day of July I will be either in heaven or the other place. Good-by, Ed."

Coal Area of the United States.

There are only 450 square miles of anthracite coal in the whole United States. The Reading Company owns no less than one-third of the whole. Of bituminous coal land there are now in America 200,000 square miles, and 8,000 square miles in Great Britain.

THE Isthmus of Panama is 70 miles wide and 350 long.

GROWING PLUMP.

Certain Indications that the Typical American Woman is Taking on Flesh.

[Harper's Bazar.]

Europeans generally concede that our American women are handsome, though they say they are so fragile, that they early lose their freshness, and with it much of their beauty. They particularly remark the tendency of our women to grow thin with years, while we remark the tendency of their women to the accumulation of flesh as soon as they have passed their youth, and often even before that period. While we must allow that our women are, for the most part, lacking in roundness, there are few of us, we imagine, who would not infinitely prefer the New World slenderness to the Old World stoutness. A medium between the two might be the standard of the becoming, and this medium we seem to be approaching, slowly perhaps, but steadily. The opinion of the thinness of the feminine part of the nation is based rather on what has been than on what is. The majority of our women are still too thin for beauty, but they are far less lean than they were twenty-five or even fifteen years ago.

This fact—for fact it unquestionably is—can scarcely have escaped observation. It is noticeable everywhere, particularly in large towns and cities, and is due to different causes, all of which are easily recognized. The fleshiness of a people depends largely on the age and development of their country. Where everything is new, and, in a certain sense, raw, as is this land, their is very little leisure or repose. Our entire energies are directed to our advancement; our minds are absorbed by thought of the future and what it promises. We hardly take time to get flesh; we think and fret off that which we have acquired, instead of acquiring more. Our women do not perform so much physical labor as our men, but they work longer in their way, and worry more; and anxiety or any other form of mental disturbance insures meagerness as nothing else does. These live too much through the mind to live quite comfortably through the body, and the body suffers in consequence. In the Old World everything is fixed. The future is not likely to be different from the present; there is small occasion for wistfulness or solicitude. Material conditions are not usually so favorable as here, but they are permanent, and by their permanence, especially by the clear understanding that they are so, they beget content, whence adipose matter. American women neither work nor worry as they used. The republic is more developed, things are more settled, somewhat of the European feeling is creeping into the national mind, and less thinness is the result.

American women take vastly better care of themselves than formerly. They have more acquaintance with hygienic laws, and hold them in far higher esteem. The days when they exposed themselves to dampness and wintry cold in thin slippers and silk stockings; when they abstained from flannels next the skin; when they pinched their waists to semi-suffocation; when they sacrificed comfort and health to what they conceived to be their appearances—those foolish and unhappy days are gone forever, have barely been known to the rising generation. Our women now have no mawkish, morbid notions as to themselves; they no longer think that to be unhealthy is to be attractive; that individualism and interestingness are synonymous; that pale faces and compressed lungs are tokens of beauty. They dress seasonably; they wear thick boots and warm clothes in bad and cold weather; they allow themselves to breathe freely, and they find their looks improved, not injured, by the wholesome change. There are exceptions, many of them, doubtless, but the rule is as we have described, and the exceptions are constantly diminishing. It may be safely said that sensible women are becoming, if they have not become, converts to nature, and that they heed her behests, recognizing the great principle that what is not natural cannot be beautiful.

Little more than a quarter of a century ago young American women were ashamed to show a hearty appetite in public. They were affected with the Byronic philosophy; they wanted to be spiritual—as if all true spirituality did not rest on sound physical conditions—and to look elegantly wretched. Many of them had half their wish; they looked wretched, but not elegant. They were charged with drinking vinegar, eating slate-pencils, and committing other monstrous absurdities. They may have been unjustly accused, but their theories warrant the accusation. All such nonsense belongs to the past. American women to-day eat as much as they want, and more wholesome food than they once ate; they walk more, court the open air, cultivate their bodies as well as their minds, believe in perfect digestion, unbroken sleep, the glow and glory of unblemished health. No wonder their proportions are fuller, their cheeks more blooming, their eyes brighter, their steps more elastic. The growth of the country and their common sense are serving them generously.

The scrawny, sallow, peaked woman, if she be educated and fairly placed, will ere long cease to be the type of the middle-aged American woman. With the steady growth of the republic, the increased ease of circumstances, and their complete health, American women will be comelier and rounder than they have been. External and internal conditions assure this. They are not likely to become gross, as so many of their European sisters are; the character of the country, its institutions and its atmosphere, with their own temperament, will preserve them from that.

An Eccentric Family.

A singular family, named Kunkel, lives near Wernersville. It consists of four brothers and one sister—the oldest (the sister) being 70, and the brothers ranging from 50 to 65, and they are all over six feet tall. Neither of them is married, they being an anti-marrying set. They own the property on which they reside, a fine farm, do all their own work, and are quite wealthy. A sister married some years ago, and they paid her share of the estate to her and discarded her, not having spoken to her since. Neither of the five has ever been out of the county. The farm has been handed down for more than 100 years, and was acquired by their ancestors over a century ago. Their house was erected more than 100 years ago, after the style of the first settlers—split logs for a floor, filled up with clay.—Lancaster (Pa.) New Era.

A PITTSBURGH INCIDENT.

Death of Henry Shaw, of the Philadelphia Fencibles.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

Henry Shaw, a private in the State Fencibles, who, it has already been stated, was wounded in the Pittsburgh riots, has died from the effects of his injuries. Lieut. Charlton, of the Sixth regiment, tells the following story of his friend's death: "It was during the march of the First division, when they were going up Butler street and nearing the bridge which crosses the Alleghany below Sharpsburg, when poor Shaw received a terrible gunshot wound in the groin. He staggered across the street, and into the door of St. Philomena's Catholic Church. Service was going on, but the officiating priest at once dismissed the congregation, and, taking the wounded man, hid him in a place of safety near the altar. In another moment the mob entered in a search for its victim, but were foiled in their attempt to discover him. After comparative silence had been restored the priest procured a carriage, and, placing Shaw inside, drove him toward the hospital. The carriage on the way was surrounded by the mob, who, learning that a Philadelphia soldier was inside, clamored for his delivery into their hands. The priest stood up, and, finding persuasion of no avail, threatened them with vengeance if they should attempt to lay a hand on the wounded man. He was successful in getting him from the hands of the bloodthirsty scoundrels." A Pittsburgh paper gives the conclusion of the story: "Poor Shaw was afterward taken to the West Point Hospital, and, after surgical treatment, was in a few hours pronounced in a fair way to recover, and information to that effect was telegraphed to his mother in Philadelphia. But night before last inflammation unexpectedly set in, when it became apparent that he could not live much longer, and he was anointed by the reverend father who ministered to him when the wound was received. He died about midnight. He has a mother and five sisters in Philadelphia."

Results of the Strike.

The damage done to the material interests of the country by the riots cannot yet be estimated with anything like exactitude; but it is clearly within the limit to say that the people of the United States are $30,000,000 poorer to-day than they were when the railroad strike at Martinsburg commenced. Ten million dollars is not too high a figure to put on the railroad property destroyed or damaged; $5,000,000 will not cover the railroad earnings that have been lost; $5,000,000 more would not compensate the business men and farmers of the country for what they have suffered, and $10,000,000 is not too much to claim for the enforced idleness. These are the elements of direct damage. It is too soon to estimate the indirect loss. For more than a week past there have been over 50,000 men under arms. Let each man's earnings be called $2 a day, and we have a loss of $100,000 a day by calling them away from their employment. To put them under arms and keep them in readiness for action has cost the public at least $2 a day for each man, or an aggregate of $100,000 a day. In other words, the military demonstration has at the least cost the country $200,000 a day, which in ten days amounts to $2,000,000. Nobody can tell how much capital has been driven out of active work, but those who think the amount is small know very little of the average capitalist. To these features we must add the danger that the riots will be held by a majority of our more influential citizens to require a considerable increase in the standing army of the country—an increase costing not less, probably, than $15,000,000 per annum. It would, we think, as a matter of money, have been better for the workingmen of the United States to have paid $100,000,000 than to have had this trouble occur. In our estimate we must include the lives lost and the bodies maimed. According to the record as it now stands there have been over 150 persons killed, and at least 500 wounded. It used to be estimated that every able-bodied man in the United States was worth $800 to the country. Worse than the actual loss of life and limbs is the certainty that the criminal classes must be largely augmented by recruits from the ranks of labor—men being now outlaws who two weeks ago belonged to the law-abiding class.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Colorado Beetle.

The Cologne Gazette states that, from careful observations and inquiries made since the burning of a potato field in the neighborhood of Cologne, it is evident that the object of that destructive process has been completely attained. There is no further trace visible either of Colorado beetles or of larvæ, neither above the soil nor in the same. There is reason to believe that not one beetle has escaped. The Government has given strict directions to all who may find beetles, larvæ, or parts of the same, to give them up without delay to the authorities. The Reichsanzeiger, in an official paragraph, states that it is not known by what means the beetle was first imported into Germany. The Swedish Government has, in consequence of its appearance, prohibited the importation of potatoes from Western Germany.—London Morning Post.

THE British House of Commons recently had a most remarkable session, lasting twenty-six consecutive hours. The House was in Committee of the Whole on the South African Confederation bill, to which there had been, at every stage, long and persistent objections by the leaders of the opposition. The struggle lasted through an entire day and night, and led to numerous exciting scenes and incidents. Within recent history there has been no parallel to this sitting.

DROPPING CORN.

BY MAURICE THOMPSON.

Pretty Phœbe Lane and I,
In the soft May weather,
Barefoot down the furrows went
Dropping corn together.

Side by side across the field
Back and forth we hurried;
All the golden grains we dropped
Soon the plowshare buried.

Bluebirds on the hedges sat
Chirping low and billing;
"Why," thought I, "not follow suit,
If the maid is willing?"

So I whispered, "Phœbe, dear,
Kiss me"—"Keep on dropping!"
Called her father from his plow,
"There's no time for stopping!"

The cord was loosed—the moment sped,
The golden charm was broken,
Never more between us two
Word of love was spoken.

What a little slip, sometimes,
All our hopes releases!
How the merest breath of chance
Breaks our joy to pieces!

Sorrow's cup, though often drained,
Never lacks for filling;
And we can't get Fortune's kiss
When the maid is willing.

Deadwood City.

The Daily Champion, published at Deadwood, in the Black Hills, complains of the misrepresentations of correspondents of Eastern newspapers. Deadwood, it says, is no such place as they represent it to be. There is not, on the contrary, "a quieter, more peaceful, well-regulated, and orderly community in the whole Western country." The local columns of the Champion contain an account of the robbery of the passengers of a stage coach near the city, and an attempt to throw the County Treasurer out of the window of his office. Barring these and other trifling incidents of local disorders, Deadwood appears to be orderly enough for a small town.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

The feeding roots of trees come near the surface; therefore, plant no deeper than necessary to keep the tree in the soil. If there is danger of its blowing over, stake it, but don't plant deep.

The Rural World suggests a simple means of protecting young fruit trees against rabbits, which is to place a few cornstalks about the stem with the lower ends tied near the ground, and the other end tied as high as the protection is needed. This application is found as good as paper, and more likely to be ready at hand for farmers.

I would rather have forty acres of land and a log-house with one room—around the [illegible] I love, and some lattice-work over the window, so that the sunlight would fall checkered on the baby in the cradle, and a few hollyhocks at the corner of the house—I would rather have that, and a nice path leading down to the spring, where I could go and hear the water gurgling; would rather live there and die there than be a clerk of any government on earth.—New Orleans Times.

Transplanting young raspberries, when only six or seven inches high, and in full growth, in the early part of summer, is as safely performed as setting tomato plants, and they make a fine growth the same season. Take a pail to hold the plants while digging them; take up with a fork, so as to save a large part of the cross root; mud the roots well, and set out near evening or on a cloudy day. The mudded roots, packed in moss, may be sent long distances by express.

The matter of windows in stables is one of vastly more importance than some farmers think. Animals, no more than vegetables, can thrive in the dark. Our long winters are sufficiently trying to the constitutions of our farm-stock, under the best circumstances, and an animal upon which the sun scarcely shines at all for five or six months will come out in spring in a bad state of health, even though the feed, and the ventilation, and the temperature have been all right. The sun is the great life-giver.—Vermont Chronicle.

Keeping Hogs Clean.—The floor of a hog-pen should be of plank. The pen and hogs can then be kept clean. If the animals are permitted to root up the floor of the pen and burrow in the earth, they will always be in an uncleanly and unwholesome condition, and much food will be wasted. It is quite unnecessary for either the comfort or health of the hogs to let them exercise their natural propensity to root in the ground. The exercise is really a waste of food and takes so much from their growth. Hogs will fatten most quickly when they eat and sleep and remain perfectly quiet, as they will do in a dry, warm pen, with a clean plank floor, and bedding of clean straw and plenty to eat.—American Agriculturist.

Early Chickens.—The first eggs are always the best for hatching. They produce the finest and most uniform chicks, and are truer to the breed; show all the finer points and develop sooner, where the breeding birds are chosen with an eye to the nearest possible perfection. Very early hatched pullets commence to lay too early for breeding purposes, unless one has warm shelters and heated inclosures for the chicks in our latitude. With the first clutch the hen spends her strength and ability to stamp her progeny with that degree of uniformity and perfection which we aim to establish. The cock always becomes weakened with over use, and his chicks are weak, and therefore more prone to diseases. Good strong birds that inherit constitutions withstand all minor evils and grow rapidly.—American Stock Journal.

Driving Lice from Leaves.—The syringe will do this with cold water alone, if applied forcibly and from beneath, and still more easily and thoroughly with water at 130 degrees or not over 140 degrees, or with copperas and water, half a pound to the gallon, or soap and water, with as much carbolic acid or coal oil as the soap will cut completely, leaving some floating. These are effective, but the rose bushes should be rinsed afterward with pure water to prevent stains, which would mar the beauty of the foliage nearly as much as the insect ravages would. For cabbage worms use hot water with some saltpetre dissolved in it. In using the syringe never draw the water from the bottom of the bucket for fear of taking in sand, which would soon wear the bore unevenly and so do injury that cannot be remedied, but will cause troublesome leakage.—New York Herald.

About the House.

Boiled Cabbage.—Take off the outer leaves; cut the head in quarters or half-quarters; cook in as small a quantity of water as possible until thoroughly done. It should be cooked in a tightly-covered kettle.

Care of Straw Matting.—If white straw matting is washed twice during the summer in salt and water—a pint of salt to half a pailful of warm, soft water—and dried quickly with a soft cloth, it will be long before it will turn yellow.—Economist.

Cleansing Paint.—In cleaning paint, put to two quarts of hot water two tablespoonfuls of turpentine, and one pint of skimmed milk, with only enough soap to make a weak suds, and it will remove all stains from the paint and leave a fine luster almost like varnish.—Christian Union.

To Make Mustard.—Mix the best Durham—as many spoonfuls as are needed for immediate use—with some new milk. Mix gradually until perfectly free from lumps, and add a little cream. The addition of half a small teaspoonful of sugar is thought by many to be an improvement.

Mutton Sausages.—Take cold roast mutton in large slices. Make a dressing of bread crumbs, thyme, summer savory, salt and pepper. Moisten them with an egg, and put a little on each slice of the mutton. Roll it up tightly as possible and tie. Fry them in hot melted butter until brown and crisp.

To Upholster an Old Cane Chair.—After removing the surplus bits of cane, cover the space with matting formed of three-inch wide canvas belting woven together. Tack it temporarily in places. After placing over this some coarse muslin, draw both smooth, and secure at the edge with twine, making use of the perforations. Remove the tacks, turn the raw edge over toward the center and baste it down. Arrange the curled hair and wool, or whatever you propose to use for stuffing, and keep it in position by basting over it a piece of muslin. Then carefully fit the rep, pin it in different places until you are certain it is in perfect shape, and tack it permanently—following, of course, the tracing made for the cane. Cover the edge with galloon to match the rep, using tiny ornamental tacks, and tie in as many places as is desirable with an upholsterer's needle, leaving a button on the upper side. When the back of the chair is to be repaired, a facing must be tacked on the outside.

THRILLING INCIDENT.

Rescued from Guerrillas—A Reminiscence of Gen. Shields' Service in the Mexican War.

(From the Utica (N. Y.) Observer.)

One of the thrilling episodes of the Mexican war which are not found in any of its histories is that of the rescue of an English family from the City of Mexico before the capitulation by a detachment of American soldiers. The city had been invested some time, when a refugee one night entered that part of our lines which Gen. Shields commanded. He was taken to the General, and to him told his story. He was an English boy, and, with his mother and sister just arrived at womanhood, occupied a home in the capital at the time of the investment. One of the lawless guerrilla chiefs, who held the people of the city as well as of the country in terror, had conceived a violent passion for the sister, who repulsed his advances, and he had declared in his rage that, unless she consented to his proposals on the following morning, he would carry her off by force, and cause her mother and brother to be executed. The lad, in the extremity of his terror, had made his way out the city past the sentinels and the lines, gained the American camp, and now besought the General to save his sister and mother. The ardent soul of Shields (who was then but 37) was fired at the thought of the miserable fate awaiting these hapless ladies, and, without communicating at all with headquarters (where flat refusal would have been certain), he formed a plan for their rescue. To call it rash, Quixotic, or dare-devil would be the truth; the best defense of his proceedings of that night is that it was a brave act, prompted by a generous heart, and that he succeeded perfectly, where disaster would insure his dismissal from the army. He had about 400 picked men of his command detailed, and after briefly informing them what he proposed to do he found every man eager for the adventure. Putting himself at the head of the little column he silently left the American lines, and, favored by the darkness of the night, approached close to the walls of the city without discovery. The sentinels could be plainly seen on the walls, and the cry, "Sentinela alerte!" was heard as it passed from mouth to mouth. Guided by the lad the party scaled the wall at a favorable place, and, seizing two or three of the astounded sentinels, descended into the city, and quickly made their way unopposed through the streets to the house to which the lad guided them. The boy ran in and informed the ladies that deliverance had come; they hastily collected a few valuables and articles of wearing apparel in a bundle, and, placing the rescued party in the center of the column, Shields started to return. But meantime the alarm had been given, and drums were beating and lanterns flashing all around the walls. Arrived near the point of entrance, it was found that the whole open place between the houses and the wall was filled with Mexican infantry and artillery. Shields deployed and gave the command to fire. A rattling volley, followed by a bayonet charge, threw the Mexicans into disorder, and the Americans rushed through and over them with their little party, made their way out, and returned to their own camp with but a few casualties, although they drew the fire of both sides on their return, for the American camp was now fully aroused, and the pickets were firing rapidly. But the tumult soon ceased on both sides, the adventurous soldiers returned to their quarters as though nothing had happened out of the usual course, and the ladies were safely bestowed for the night in a hut made as comfortable as possible.

How he was called upon to account for this night's work will be best told in Gen. Shields' own language:

"The next morning an officer of Gen. Scott's staff came to my quarters with a message from the General that he would like to know the cause of the previous night's alarm, as it originated in that part of the line which was under my command. I answered that I would report in person, which I at once did. On the way I thought the matter over, and concluded that it would be better to make a clean breast of it, and I did so. The story threw Gen. Scott into a tremendous rage. Ever since Cerro Gordo was fought he had addressed me as 'My Cerro Gordo friend,' but he now dropped that familiar name. 'Gen. Shields,' he thundered, 'you are insubordinate and reckless in the highest degree. You have put in peril the fruits of the whole campaign; you have, perhaps, frustrated all my plans for the capture of the City of Mexico! Sir, I'll disgrace you; I'll court-martial you, and have you dismissed the service!' At this my temper rose, and I answered him plainly that he might court-martial, and, perhaps, get me dismissed, but that, after all that had occurred on this campaign, neither he nor any other man could disgrace me; and, being by this time pretty well stirred up, I said that under like circumstances I would do precisely the same thing over again. Instead of being more angry, the General was rather softened by this speech. 'I was wrong, Gen. Shields,' he said, 'in saying that I would disgrace you. I ask your pardon for that. You are a brave man, and disgrace is not the word to use toward you. But you are greatly to blame in this matter, sir. You have acted without orders, and have imperiled the whole campaign.' 'General Scott,' I said, 'before you say anything more about it, suppose you come over to my quarters and see these ladies.' After some further talk he promised to do so and I rode back to my tent pretty well satisfied that I should have no further trouble with the affair. In an hour over came Gen. Scott, and I at once introduced him to the ladies. The daughter was a picture of beauty, with her golden curls and her blue eyes; and, after the mother had thanked the General for their preservation, with tearful eyes and trembling voice, the girl seized his hands, wept over them, called him her preserver and invoked the blessings of Heaven on his head. Scott looked from her to me with a very benevolent face, and said, 'Well, my Cerro Gordo friend, if I get you court-martialed for this, I shall have you promoted, too.' I have only to add that, long afterward, when the war was over and we had returned to the United States, I received from England, the gift of these ladies, a costly diamond pin as a token of their gratitude."

These are but a few of the interesting and varied reminiscences with which Gen. Shields entertains his listeners in public and private. For the benefit of those curious to know something of the man, it may be stated that he is of medium size, hale and hearty, though 67 years of age, with a keen eye and something like the "brogue" in his speech. His residence is at Kansas City, Mo. He speaks without the least bitterness toward any of his contemporaries, either in civil or military life, and evinces the warmest interest in the prosperity and welfare of his adopted country.

A Narrow Escape.

Bill Hanson, better known as "Frontier Bill," while pursuing a herd of mustangs near Hat creek, July 9, was thrown from his horse and knocked senseless, in which state he lay for several hours. When he recovered his horse was gone and his wounds pained him so badly that he could not walk. He managed with great difficulty to crawl on his hands to a pool of water some fifty rods from the place where he fell. He remained here during the next day and night without a mouthful to eat, and the water of the pool having given out he started out on his hands and knees in search of more. About 12 o'clock on the second day he says he was so hungry and so thirsty, and lame and tired, that he could go no further, and crawled under a tree and stretched himself out to die. While lying thus, bordering on the insensible, he heard the leaves shake near him, and wearily turned his head in the direction of the noise. To his terror and astonishment he espied a large rattlesnake reaching for him. The sight of the venomous reptile banished hunger, thirst and pain for the moment, and he raised up on his elbow and endeavored to scare the scaly thing away. The snake struck at him twice and then glided away. This adventure roused him somewhat, and he made another endeavor to reach water. Finally, after much pain and suffering, he crawled into the Cheyenne road, and could get no further. Next morning a ranchman located on Hat creek found him there lying on his face, insensible and almost dead. He was taken to the ranche and cared for.—Deadwood Champion.

The Cotton Trade.

The cotton manufactures of New England show encouraging signs of a gradual revival of business, perceptible, if small. Forty-nine mills, which turn out about one-third of the Northern product, worked up during the first six months of the present year 89,238,942 pounds of cotton, as compared with 86,730,805 pounds last year during the corresponding period. The increase is about 3 per cent., but, as the quality of cotton this year was somewhat better than that of the fabric worked up last season, the increase in the actual amount of manufactured goods about 5 per cent. All the goods have been readily marketed, there being no considerable accumulation on hand, while there is a perceptible improvement of the demand. With prices at the present figures it is expected that all the New England mills will be kept running at their highest capacity during the fall and winter to meet the demand for cotton goods.—New York World.

Meat For Invalids.

The following method of rendering raw meat palatable to invalids is given in the Industrie Blatter: "To ten ounces raw meat from the loin, add 8.7 ounces shelled sweet almonds, and 2.6 ounces white sugar these to be bea2.8 together in a marble mortar to a uniform pulp, and the fibers separated by a strainer. The pulp, which has a rosy hue and a very agreeable taste, does not remind one at all of meat, and may be kept fresh for a considerable time, even in summer, in a dry, cool place. Yelk of egg may be added to it. From this pulp, or directly from the above substances, an emulsion may be prepared which will be rendered still more nutritious by adding milk. Leiller prefers 3.5 ounces dried raw meat, ¼ ounce sugar, .7 ounce wine, and 1 ounce tincture of cinnamon."

A Traveling Bath-House.

One of the latest Yankee ideas is a Turkish bath on wheels. It is a car that can run behind the sleeping coaches of an express train. It has a drawing-room, a Russian and plunge bath, shampooing rooms, and all the other accommodations of a Turkish bath-house. The temperature of the rooms varies from 80 to 160 degrees, and the compartments are lighted from the roof with blue glass. Travelers can bathe as well as eat, drink and sleep on the rail. Such a car can be switched off on a side track in any town or village and remain a day or two for the accommodation of the residents.

Elopement of Four Children.

Four St. Louis children recently eloped for New York, the two boys being aged 12, the two girls 13. They had loved ardently, but their parents frowned coldly on their passion. Unhappily, before they had got any further than Terre Haute on their way East to grow up with the country, they were missed, telegraphed after and recovered. The boys were a good deal disconcerted by the contretemps, but the girls seemed rather indifferent, and willingly returned to their homes, evidently understanding that they had socially distinguished themselves.

"Got all kinds of ties here?" said a would-be wit, entering a well-known furnishing store. "Yes, sir," replied the shopman. "Well, I should like a pig sty," remarked the customer. "All right, sir; just bend down your hogshead and we will take your measure," said the ready shopman.

CREMATION.

The Remains of Dr. Winslow Reduced to Ashes at Salt Lake, Utah.

(Salt Lake Cor. Chicago Times.)

When Dr. Winslow's remains were placed in the cremation furnace this afternoon, at twenty minutes past 6 o'clock, the body weighed 126 pounds. He died on the 26th of July, and the body had been embalmed and the heart and bowels taken out. The crowd were permitted to view the face, as the body lay in a plain coffin, with flowers strewn on it. Nearly 1,000 persons passed around the coffin rapidly, immediately after which the door of the furnace, which had already reached a red heat, was opened, and the body quickly pushed in on an iron plate, the door closed, and the fireman commenced his work in earnest. The furnace was constructed with double flues, so that the flames came directly in contact with an envelope above the body, a large current of air being admitted. The first appearance, as seen through the mica apertures, was that of roasting; but in twenty minutes nearly all the flesh was consumed, and the bones had begun to crumble. A half hour later very little could be seen of the form of the body. At 7:45 Dr. Hamilton opened the door of the furnace, and but one or two pieces of bones could be seen, and they crumbled under the weight of the ashes. At five minutes to 9 the process was pronounced complete and successful by Drs. Hamilton and Smart. The fires were drawn, and the ashes left to cool a short time before being removed. Before the body was placed in the retort short speeches were made by Dr. Hamilton and Gen. M. M. Bone and Dr. Smart, surgeon at Camp Douglas. Dr. Hamilton spoke only of the good qualities of the deceased. Gen. Bone indulged in description, eulogy and sentiment, and said Dr. Winslow had set an example that would be extensively followed. Dr. Smart gave a history of the science of cremation, and referred to the system of burial as injurious to public health, and said the practice of cremation would be apt to increase with civilization and growth of population. No prayer was said nor religious words uttered, which was in accordance with the injunctions of the deceased. The crowd present numbered over 1,000, and there was even struggling to get a view of the scene and body. The fumes from the furnace were unpleasantly perceptible at a distance from the locality. The affair was successful, being the shortest time on record—two hours and thirty-five minutes. The weight of the ashes, which contained a few calcined fragments of bone, was four pounds eleven and a half ounces.

Maneuvering for the Advantage.

The following confab recently took place in a justice's office out toward Keweenaw Point. The case involved a serious breach of the peace. Justice—"Mr. Snickletitz, you will please come forward and be sworn." Mr. S. (who is an ex-justice himself and is "up to snuff")—"Chudge, I like not dot." Justice—"Why, what's the matter? You and Mr. Barstow, who will be here to testify directly, were the only persons who saw the assault and we are depending upon your evidence." Mr. S.—"Chudge, I wo'd like dot Parstow to destify first." "Why do you wish him to testify first, Mr. Snickelfitz?" Mr. S.—"Pecause, Chudge, dot Prrahtowish a rashcal, und if he destify after me he wo'd make me ou-et a tam liar!"—Lake Superior Mining Gazette.

A young lady of Rochester has a pet dog answering to the name of "Nigger." The other day it chased a cow which was passing in the street, and its owner called the dog back, shouting "Nigger, Nigger, Nigger." To her surprise a stone came flying near her head a moment or two afterward, and on looking up she saw that it had been thrown by the man who was driving the cow, and who was almost wild with rage. He was a colored man, and he was so angry that he chased her into the house, and was not appeased until her brother explained that it was the dog she was calling.

Promise and Performance.

The proprietors of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters promise nothing in behalf of this famous tonic and regulating elixir which it will not perform. No pretensions irreconcilable with common sense are made in reference to it, but evidence of the most positive nature has been accumulating for over a quarter of a century in its behalf, which proves it to be a reliable preventive and curative of malarial diseases, an efficient and genial tonic and general corrective, and specially valuable in cases where the bowels, liver, stomach or urinary organs are affected. Debility, the source from whence so many bodily evils spring, is entirely remedied by the invigorative action of the Bitters, which arrests premature decay and repairs losses of nervous and muscular power while improving the appetite and rendering digestion easy.

Colgate & Co.'s Cashmere Bouquet Soap has acquired a popularity hitherto unequaled by any Toilet Soap of home or foreign manufacture. A reputation begun early in the century made it easy for this house to impress the public. The peculiar fascinations of this luxurious article are the novelty and exceptional strength of its perfume.

THE SUN.
1877. NEW YORK. 1877.
The Sun continues to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, and of the substitution of statesmanship, wisdom and integrity for hollow pretense, imbecility and fraud in the administration of public affairs. It contends for the government of the people by the people and for the people, as opposed to government by frauds in the ballot-box and in the counting of votes, enforced by military violence. It endeavors to supply its readers—a body now not far from a million of souls—with the most careful, complete and trustworthy accounts of current events, and employs for this purpose a numerous and carefully selected staff of reporters and correspondents. Its reports from Washington, especially, are full, accurate and fearless; and it doubtless continues to deserve and enjoy the hatred of those who thrive by plundering the Treasury or by usurping what the law does not give them, while it endeavors to merit the confidence of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.
The price of the Daily Sun is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postpaid; or, with the Sunday edition, $7.70 a year.
The Sunday edition alone, eight pages, $1.20 a year, postpaid.
The Weekly Sun, eight pages of 56 broad columns, is furnished at $1 a year, postpaid.
Special Notice.—In order to introduce The Sun more widely to the public, we will send THE WEEKLY edition for the remainder of the year, to Jan. 1, 1878, postpaid, for Half a Dollar. Try it.

Our Tea Trade

Is constantly increasing. We now sell more in a day than we used to in a week—now sell a good tea at 25 cents a pound. Those who prefer a fancy article we have it up to the very finest article 60 and 90 cents per pound. No middlemen between us and our customers. We purchase direct of the importers and sell direct to the consumers, thereby saving them the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale dealer. All of these have to have their profits which adds 20 to 30 cents per pound to the tea before it reaches the consumer. This is the only secret of our success, doing away with the middlemen.
